CEMETERY SITE AT KIRWIN, KANS.

Mr. HANBACK. I desire to call up from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. 577) to donate a cemetery site on the public lands to the city of Kirwin, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 29, township 4 south, of range 16 west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Kansas, now occupied by the city of Kirwin for cemetery purposes, be, and the same is hereby, donated to the said city of Kirwin for the use of a public cemetery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HANBACK] desire to be heard in support of this bill?

Mr. HANBACK. Not at present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserves his time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 577) to donate a cemetery site on the public lands to the city of Kirwin, Kans., having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

As appears from the memorial of the mayor and common council, a tract of forty acres adjacent to the town has been used for twelve years, or since the first settlement of that region, as a public burial ground, is so used to-day, and contains the remains of over two hundred persons. It is the only cemetery near the town, and has been fenced, beautified, and otherwise improved, solely for cemetery purposes; and aside from such purposes no part of said ground is used by any person, persons, or corporation.

In February, 1881, the city, finding that one John McClimont had filed a timber-culture entry upon said forty acres, bought his relinquishment thereof for the sum of $300, to him paid; his title, not having been perfected, is now in the United States, as appears from the certificates of the register and receiver of the land office.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill donating this land to the city of Kirwin for cemetery purposes be passed.

The representations of the city are as follows:

"The undersigned, representing the people residing in and in the neighborhood of Kirwin, county of Phillips, and State of Kansas, come now and show that for over twelve years last past the SE. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 29, T. 4, R. 16, has been, and is at the present time, used as a general burial ground, and that during said time there has been over two hundred persons buried on said described tract of land; that a large portion of said forty acres of land has been improved, fenced, and otherwise beautified for solely cemetery purposes; that aside from burial purposes no part of said land is used by any person, persons, or corporation.

"Your petitioners further show that on the 28th of February, 1881, the city of Kirwin, a city of the third class, duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Kansas, did, in her corporate capacity, purchase, for a valuable consideration, viz, $300, of John McClimont, a relinquishment of his timber-culture entry No. 211, which he had on said forty acres of land, as more fully appears by certificate of the city clerk of Kirwin, and the certificate of the register and receiver of the United States land office at Kirwin, marked, respectively, A and B, and made a part of this showing.

"Your petitioners further show that the title to said forty acres of land is now vested solely in the Government of the United States, as more fully appears by certificate B, hereinbefore referred to.

"That at present there is no provision of statute by which title can inure to the many persons interested in said forty acres of land, and in view thereof your petitioners would most respectfully and earnestly pray that they be aided by a special act of Congress, granting to the city of Kirwin, and its successors in office, the said SE. $\frac{1}{4}$ of NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 29, T. 4, R. 16 W., for burial purposes, and to be known as the "Kirwin Cemetery Grant."

"And for which your petitioners will ever pray.

EXHIBIT A.

KIRWIN, KANS., December 10, 1883.

I, H. E. Campbell, city clerk of the city of Kirwin, Phillips County, Kansas, do hereby certify that, according to the records in my possession of the proceedings of the city council of the city of Kirwin, the said council did, at a regular meeting held February 23, 1881, purchase of John McClimont, agent of the heirs of — McClimont, deceased, all their right, title, and interest to the SE. $\frac{1}{4}$ NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 29, T. 4 S., of R. 16 W., 6th P. M., to be used as a public cemetery; and on April 11, 1881, the said council ordered a city warrant for \$300 to be issued to the said John McClimont as payment therefor, and received a relinquishment (as to said tract) of timber-culture entry No. 211, then in force on said tract. Since then a portion of said tract has been surveyed and platted, and is being used as the common cemetery of the community as occasion requires.

Witness my hand and seal this 10th day of December, 1883.

[SEAL.]

H. E. CAMPBELL, City Clerk.

EXHIBIT B.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Kirwin, Kans., December 11, 1883.

We, John Bissell, register, and R. R. Hays, receiver, do hereby certify that the records of this office show that the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 29, T. 4 S., R. 16 W., is covered by declaratory statement No. 897, made by Peter M. Rominer, on January 23, 1873, alleging settlement January 23, 1873; also on the 27th day of April, 1874, John J. McClimont, jr., made timber-culture entry No. 211, said entry canceled April 13, 1878, per letter C, April 6, 1878, and on June 3, 1878, John McClimont, made timber entry No. 1955 on said tract, which was canceled as to the SE. $\frac{1}{4}$ NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ said section on July 18, 1881, by Commissioner's letter C of July 12, 1881. JOHN BISSELL, Register.

R. R. HAYS, Receiver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANBACK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

Mr. WEMPLE. I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1725) for the erection of a public building at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults, for the accommodation of the United States court, the post-office, and other Government offices, at Saratoga Springs, State of New York. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for said building shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, not until the State of New York shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of a site and commencement of work.

Mr. WEMPLE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WEMPLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3716) for the erection of a public building at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That Saratoga Springs having become famous as the greatest watering place in the world has a transient population of some 50,000 during the season, or for four or five months of the year, and from the hotel registers and arrivals by the various railroads show that at least half a million people visit that place during that time. The resident population is over 12,000.

The post-office at Saratoga is a second-class office and is a distributing office. The gross receipts for the year 1883 were $28,015.65. During the summer months they distributed from this office on an average 9,600 letters per day, exclusive of packages and papers. The postmaster estimated them to be some 4,000 daily. The amount of mail matter received exceeded the amount dispatched. There were received and dispatched from this office during the year 1883 7,052 registered letters. There were money-orders issued amounting to $67,327.73, and paid amounting to $54,094.24.

The amount of rent paid for this post-office is $1,500. It is located in a wooden building and of such a dangerous character that it can not be insured for less than 3 per cent. The mails received at this office are very valuable.

At Saratoga are located manufacturing establishments; a large female seminary; two large medical institutes; and the hotels of necessity the very largest in the country, one costing for its erection $2,500,000 and another $1,500,000. There are six large first-class hotels, twenty-five smaller hotels, and some one hundred and fifty boarding houses.

Saratoga is steadily increasing in population, business, and wealth. The Adirondack Railroad is being extended through to the Saint Lawrence River, going through the vast timber and mineral wealth of the Adirondacks and ending at Saratoga, connecting with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, Boston, and New York.

Although there are no stated terms of the United States courts held at Saratoga there are many special terms appointed to be held at Saratoga on account of the convenience to both the court and clients, and in consideration of the comparatively small additional expense to prepare a court-room in the upper part of the building it is recommended that it be done.

The amount judged suitable for such a building was determined upon after consultation at the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

In view of the foregoing facts your committee recommends the passage of the bill, amending the same by striking out the second section thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEMPLE] desire to be heard?

Mr. WEMPLE. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think there should be inserted in this bill a provision similar to that which has been adopted with reference to most of the public buildings authorized during this session, imposing on the Secretary of the Treasury, not the Supervising Architect, the duty of seeing that the expense of constructing the building, after the site has been purchased, shall not exceed the amount of the appropriation then remaining.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. It is regarded as important by all the citizens of Saratoga that we should have a public building there; and I beg to assure the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the amendment he suggests, if adopted, would hazard the passage of this bill during the present Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied that such an amendment would not jeopardize the passage of the bill. I think it of the highest importance that the cost of this building should not be permitted to exceed the amount which Congress may now appropriate. That is the real peril against which we should guard. In view of the determination of the House yesterday that this provision against extravagance was not necessary in the case of the building at Chattanooga, I would hardly feel justified, so far as I am concerned, in insisting on applying the provision to other bills. But I should feel very much gratified, I should feel that we were legislating with much greater security and safety, if the gentleman in charge of this bill would himself propose such an amendment and have it adopted. It will not imperil the final passage of the bill.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge whether he will, so far as he is concerned, consent that this appropriation shall be made and paid only in standard silver dollars. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEMPLE. So far as I am personally concerned I should be perfectly willing that should be done; but this bill comes from the Senate, and an amendment of such a character would virtually kill the bill.

Mr. WELLER. Oh, no; it is the easiest thing in the world for the Senate to adopt this amendment; and the gentleman having the bill in charge is entitled to have his views incorporated in it.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEMPLE] whether any Federal courts are held at Saratoga.

Mr. WEMPLE. No, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Then the only object of this building is to accommodate the post-office?

Mr. WEMPLE. It is for the purpose of a post-office strictly.

Mr. BUCKNER. What does the Government pay as rent for the building now used as a post-office?

Mr. WEMPLE. The Government pays $1,500 rent for a building which does not furnish proper post-office facilities, which is not adequate for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. WELLER. Would 6 per cent. interest on the amount of appropriation now proposed exceed the rent now paid by the Government?

Mr. WEMPLE. If the Government rented a building affording proper facilities for the transaction of the public business, it would not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this bill has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Fifteen members rose to object.

So the bill was not considered.

CHRISTOPHER SCHAEFNOCKER.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7305) for the relief of Christopher Schaeffnocker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Christopher Schaeffnocker, late second lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant from the 24th day of May, 1862, to the 4th day of August, 1862.

The report (by Mr. ROWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2610) for the relief of Christopher Schaeffnocker, late second lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, report as follows:

From the records of the War Department it appears Christopher Schaeffnocker entered the service May 24, 1862, as a second lieutenant, Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served in that capacity until August 4, 1862; that he has not been paid for said service for the reason that the paymaster decided that his muster was not legal.

It appears from the sworn statements of the officers of the company and regiment of which the said Schaeffnocker was a second lieutenant, and other reliable witnesses, that Schaeffnocker did actually serve in the capacity and discharge the duties of second lieutenant from the 24th of May, 1862, to August 4, 1862.

In view of the fact that the Government justly owes the claimant the allowances of a second lieutenant, your committee report herewith a substitute for the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether this claimant could not have been mustered under the act of June 3, 1874.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is some difference of opinion about that act. This bill was reported favorably at the last session of Congress. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] reported it from the Committee on War Claims, and I suppose there can be no objection to it. This House passed a similar bill the other day. It only involves about $60—

Mr. SPRINGER. Better give it to him than waste any more time about it in discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House for present consideration.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS T. STRATTON.

Mr. YOUNG. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 305) for the relief of Thomas T. Stratton, assignee of W. B. Waldran.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,256.98, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Thomas T. Stratton, as assignee of W. B. Waldran, in full payment and satisfaction of said Waldran's claim and demand against the United States for and on account of work and labor done on the United States court-room, offices, and judges' chambers at Memphis, Tenn., under contract with and direction of J. M. Timony, United States marshal for the western judicial district of Tennessee, which claim and demand was by the said W. B. Waldran assigned and transferred to the said Thomas T. Stratton.

Mr. YOUNG. I am so hoarse this morning I can scarcely be heard, and therefore will yield to my colleague [Mr. McMILLIN] to occupy the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman from Indiana want the report read, or would he prefer to hear a statement from me?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. At the request of my colleague [Mr. YOUNG] I will make a statement concerning this claim, as it will take more than the five minutes provided by the rule to read the report.

The facts are these: The Federal court in the city of Memphis was being held in rooms inadequate to its accommodation. In fact, both of the judges holding the court certify they were unfit for occupation, opening only upon an alley, and upon the third floor, and not properly furnished. The marshal and deputy marshal came to Washington for the purpose of getting authority to provide other apartments. They had an agreement by which they could rent certain other rooms at two thousand and odd dollars a year, provided the Government should make appropriation to furnish them. The Secretary of the Interior, the marshal and deputy marshal both certify and swear, authorized the expenditure of the money. The expenditure was made. Stratton, the owner of the property, being in straitened circumstances, furnished the money. The amount authorized by the Secretary of the Interior was $3,500; the amount expended was thirty-two hundred and odd dollars, as provided for in this bill. That was in 1867.

The judge of the court certifies as follows:

The United States to W. B. Waldran, Dr.

Nov. 1. For material furnished and for work and labor done on U. S. court-room, offices, and judges' chambers, at Memphis, Tennessee, under orders of U. S. Marshal J. M. Timony, and approval of his Hon. Connally F. Trigg, United States district judge, as per itemized accounts and bills hereto attached, all of which were paid by me as the work progressed, $3,256.98.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Nov. 16, 1869.

Received of J. M. Timony, U. S. marshal western district of Tennessee, thirty-two hundred fifty-six and $\frac{98}{100}$ dollars in full of the above account.

W. B. WALDRAN.

I have examined the within account and accompanying affidavit of W. B. Waldran, and believing the account all right, I approve the same and recommend payment thereof.

CONNALLY F. TRIGG,
United States District Judge.

Afterward the judge was called upon to make another statement about it, and he certified as follows:

I don't see what statement other than my original approval of the account stated within is necessary to pass the account mentioned, unless it is that I had personal knowledge of the improvements and necessity of them. I now state this, and think the account ought to be paid.

The other judge made this statement:

The rooms formerly occupied by the courts and their officers were neither decent nor comfortable. The new arrangement was cordially approved by the district judge and the district attorney, and it has my entire approbation.

The reason why it was not paid when presented was that under the act of 1853 they held that authorization for more than $50 had to be made in writing. That fact seemed to be lost sight of, and it was not made in writing.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] knows the facts in this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Tennessee for further explanation.

Mr. McMILLIN. I only desire further to make this statement, Mr. Speaker. When the apartments were occupied, I think for seven years, at the rental agreed upon, the verbal understanding was thereby carried out to that extent, and when the Government moved its offices and established them in better quarters in another part of the city, they carried the very property, or all of it that could be used, which this money is to pay for. The bill provides only for the payment of the original amount without interest. The committee were unanimous in thinking it should pass.

I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who knows all the facts.

Mr. OATES. In the Forty-seventh Congress I examined this claim, and will state to the House that after careful examination the proofs in my judgment sustained the justice of the claim, and I believe the money ought to be paid.

There was no objection.

The bill was taken up and read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, VICKSBURG, MISS.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I call up the bill (S. 173) to provide a building for the use of the United States courts, post-office, custom office, and internal-revenue office at Vicksburg, Miss.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults, at Vicksburg, in the State of Mississippi, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, custom office, and internal-revenue office, of a cost not exceeding $100,000, including cost of site: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall have been made according to law, and a valid title to the land for the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Mississippi shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein: And provided further, That the site so purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I have but a few words to say. Vicksburg, Miss., is the most important city in the State commercially, and it is the most important city between Memphis and the city of New Orleans. There are railroads converging there. It has a population of 15,000 people. I ask the Representatives in this House to consider the fact that in Vicksburg, during its occupation by the Army, many private buildings were torn down and frequent fires occurred in consequence of such occupation, and the Government of the United States can not do anything better than erect a building for public uses as mentioned in the bill, thus rendering some compensation for the injuries which were inflicted and were incidental to a state of war. I appeal to members on both sides to give this building to the city of Vicksburg.

Mr. COOK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Certainly.

Mr. COOK. I wish to ask whether there is a Federal court held there now?

Mr. JEFFORDS. There is not now, but there ought to be. It is the most important river town, and it is expected that we will have a term of the Federal court there on account of the admiralty jurisdiction, for it all comes from the city of Vicksburg, although the court is held at Jackson, some fifty miles away. We can have a term of the Federal court there, and propose to have it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to this bill. During the last twenty years we have been extending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and I believe the time will soon come when Congress will be required to revise and reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts as well as to reduce the number of places where they are to be held.

In the State of Iowa one of the greatest abuses under which we labor is this matter of the Federal courts. Nearly every railroad corporation is organized outside of the State. Every road that runs through the State of any importance is operated as a foreign corporation.

Our people are dragged from the local courts to the cities where Federal courts are held a great distance, and required to litigate in these courts instead of the local tribunals. Believing that it is time to inaugurate here as far as we can an effort to diminish the number of places where Federal courts are held and restrict their jurisdiction, I shall object to the construction of public buildings at any places in the States outside of the capitals, or at such points at which the Federal courts are already held.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a term of the Federal court held now at this point?

Mr. COOK. No, sir; not as I am informed on a question I addressed to the gentleman from Mississippi; but they are trying to get one established there.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. Would you consent that this appropriation be made to be paid in standard silver dollars?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I would be glad to have it made and paid in standard silver dollars.

Mr. VAN EATON. But this is a Senate bill, and would have to go back if amended.

Mr. JEFFORDS. The only objection would be that it would necessitate the sending of the bill back to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Eighteen members rising in opposition to the bill the House refused to consider it, and the bill went back to the Speaker's table.

ACCOUNT FOR ARMS, STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker I ask the consideration of Senate bill 1412, authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States, and balance the same by so reducing the overcharge made against said State in A. D. 1869, under the act approved the 23d of April, A. D. 1868, and the several acts amendatory thereof, as that the amount paid on said account by said State for the ten years last past be taken in full satisfaction of the same.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate, and a bill exactly in similar terms has been favorably reported by the Military Committee of this House. A bill of similar terms passed the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress, as well as in the Forty-seventh, and was reported favorably in the last House by the Military Committee, but failed to be reached for consideration.

This bill merely proposes that in the annual distribution of arms to the militia of the States the State of South Carolina shall be permitted to draw her share the same as her sister States. Owing to some confusion in the accounts several years ago South Carolina has not drawn her quota for fifteen years. This bill does not ask the back quota, but only that she shall get in the future her proportion the same as the other States.

I suppose there will be no objection to the bill, but I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I have examined this bill quite carefully, and in my judgment it is a proper measure, and ought to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read by its title a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOSSES BY GOVERNMENT STEAMER J. DON CAMERON.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to call up for present consideration Senate bill 1347 for the relief of the sufferers by the loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the losses of private property of the officers, enlisted men, and laundresses of the Fifth Regiment United States Infantry by reason of the sinking of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron, in the Missouri River, on or about the 18th day of May, 1877; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the claimants the amount of their said losses, as allowed and approved under authority of this act, not to exceed the amount for baggage allowed to said officers, soldiers, and laundresses by law and the Army regulations: Provided, That each person claiming remuneration under this act shall furnish to the Secretary of War, or accounting officers of the Treasury, a statement, duly verified, of the value of the property by him lost, and also of the amount of insurance, if any, received thereon, which amount shall be deducted from the value of said property on settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury: Provided also, That the award of the Secretary of War for such losses shall be final, and the payment thereof to the several claimants shall be held and taken as a complete relinquishment and satisfaction of all claims for damages sustained by them by reason of the sinking of said Government steamer J. Don Cameron as aforesaid.

Mr. LYMAN. This bill, I will state in brief, is to pay certain officers of the United States Army and some poor laundresses for property lost some years ago by the sinking of that United States steamer, entirely through the fault of the officers of the United States, and for which loss the United States is liable. This bill has been reported unanimously by the Senate Committee as well as the House Committee. It passed in the Senate in the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, and now awaits the action of the House.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It has passed the House twice.

Mr. LYMAN. Yes; it has passed the House twice. There is no question about the justice of the claim. If there is no objection I will not call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WELLER. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. LYMAN. The Clerk will please to read only the parts of the report which are marked and which contain the gist of it. I reserve my time.

The Clerk commenced to read the passages marked in the report.

Mr. WELLER (interrupting the reading). I understand the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] is prepared to give a brief explanation of the bill; and that he may do so I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The report is very long, and I think I can explain the matter very easily. These officers and soldiers were placed on an unseaworthy steamer against their protest. The steamer struck a snag and sank. Those who had insured their property went to the courts and were defeated, on the ground that the Government had placed an unlicensed pilot in charge of the boat. This bill was reported by General Bragg and passed the House. It passed the House a second time and has passed the Senate three times.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand the bill, unless the Secretary of War awards from this appropriation what these parties ask they are not to have it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. In that case they are not to have it. I think there can be no possible objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LYMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF WHARF IN WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. GREEN. I call up the bill (S. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the United States Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause an examination to be made of the wharf in front of the custom-house and other property at the port of Wilmington, N. C., offered by E. E. Burress, president of the First National Bank of Wilmington, namely, the following real estate: One hundred and sixty-six feet front on the Cape Fear River, lying between Market and Princess streets and Waterstreet and the river; and also the brick fire-proof two-story warehouse, together with the land on which it is situated, adjoining the custom-house on the south, the said warehouse occupying a space of thirty feet front and running east ninety-two feet; and on inquiry as to their necessity for use for the revenue-marine service and other customs purposes at that port, and if it shall be found advantageous and necessary for such purposes, to purchase the same at a reasonable price: Provided, That it shall not exceed $30,000, which amount shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GREEN. The reasons for the proposed purchase are fully set forth in a letter of the late Secretary of the Treasury which I hold in my hand, and which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 5, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, transmitting Senate bill No. 2386 to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C., in which you request, on behalf of the Committee of Commerce, such information or suggestions as I may deem proper touching the necessity for the purchase therein provided for, and the propriety of the passage of said bill.

In reply I have respectfully to state that the present wharf and storage facilities at Wilmington are represented as inadequate to the wants of the customs service.

The Department has been for some time hiring a wharf and storage houses for customs purposes at considerable annual cost. The storehouse for coal for revenue vessels, hired by the Department, is located more than a mile from the custom-house wharf, and is reported unfit for the purpose. The Department, however, has not been able to secure one nearer, nor any suitable structure for what is deemed a reasonable rental.

Immediately in front of the custom-house is a small wharf in which is reserved a right of wharfage for revenue-cutters and other customs purposes. This wharf is not, however, of sufficient length to accommodate the vessels of the Government which are employed at the present time, it being but ninety-nine feet long, while the revenue-cutter stationed at Wilmington is one hundred and seventy-five feet long.

To make this wharf available for the Government's use at least one hundred feet should be added to it. If this were done the Government storehouse might be located thereon, and besides the storage for coal, &c., it could be availed of for storing merchandise or heavy articles belonging to the customs service.

The Department has received several applications for increase of facilities at Wilmington, such as the possession of the property named in the bill would supply.

Should the wharf be secured it would afford landing facilities for vessels of the revenue marine and other Government vessels at that port.

The bill seems guardedly drawn, and I see no objection to its passage.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. S. J. R. McMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

A true copy:

E. W. CLARK,
Chief Revenue Marine Division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. Unless some gentleman desires to occupy the time in opposition, the Chair will ask for objections. [After a pause.] Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GREEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I ask to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 458) for the relief of William H. Crook. I desire to say in regard to this bill, very briefly, that it has already passed the Senate without opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land-patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent, the amount being the same as was formerly paid for such service.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Mr. Speaker, from the year 1836 down to the year 1878 we paid for the performance of these services the sum of $1,500 per annum. In the year 1878 the appropriation to pay for them was omitted, and for the ensuing four years Mr. Crook performed these services, for which $1,500 had previously been paid, working nights and working out of regular office hours, and during that time he signed, examined, and countersigned many thousands of these land-patents each year.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Over 40,000.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Over 40,000 a year. The bill has passed the Senate and it was reported favorably by the House Committee on Claims without any opposition whatever. They recommend that Mr. Crook shall receive the sum of $2,000. The minority report is that he should have the sum of $4,000. There is no question of the value of these services. There is no question but that they were performed ably, promptly, and efficiently in all respects, and that this man earned the money out of office hours and in addition to his regular duties incumbent upon him by virtue of the ordinary clerkship—duties which he had to perform.

I would like to say, in addition, that last year this Congress restored the office and is now paying for the performance of this duty the sum of $1,500 per annum. Therefore it seems to me there can be no question but that this man, having performed the services for the Government and having earned the money, should receive his pay. Four thousand dollars is $500 a year less than the Government paid from 1836 to 1878, and is $500 a year less than the Government is paying today for the performance of these same services.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Willingly.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to inquire if this party did not know that there was no authority of law for him to render these services with the anticipation of being paid?

Mr. RAY, of New York. The services were rendered at the request of officers of the Government—at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, under the direction of the President and upon the representation and understanding that they would be paid for.

Mr. WELLER. That is one of the points I desire to understand.

Mr. RAY, of New York. The work was done with that understanding, as the committee report.

Mr. WELLER. And these services were in addition to the regular duties of this man's position?

Mr. RAY, of New York. Yes, sir; but he performed these services at night. He performed his regular duties during the daytime, and then devoted the nights to this work.

Mr. WELLER. Does the sum of $4,000 cover the entire charge against the Government?

Mr. RAY, of New York. It does, and the amount provided for is $2,000 less.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in favor of this bill has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to pay an employé of the Government extra compensation for extra services rendered by him. The amount is not large, but that principle is involved. I believe this gentleman was receiving a salary of $1,600 a year at the time he performed these services.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Fifteen hundred dollars was his regular salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Heretofore the signing of these patents for the President has been done by clerks detailed for that purpose, and if I understand this claim correctly, it is based upon the ground that that duty was devolved upon the executive officer, and this clerk was detailed to perform it. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] if I am correct in that?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the way I understand the case. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] calls upon me I will make this statement: Congress abolished the officer who had heretofore discharged this duty and required that the executive department should have the work performed by the clerical force. Thereupon the Executive devolved the duty upon this officer, and he did the work according to order, and now he comes and seeks pay for it. The committee reduced the amount that was recommended by the Senate. The Committee on Claims thought that there ought not to be a payment of $4,000, and declined to recommend it; and, if I may be permitted to make my own statement, I believe I opposed the payment of anything.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He voted for the $2,000, as did every member of the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not remember how that was, but I remember that I stated at the time that it was a case of the payment of two salaries to an employé of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour under the special rule has expired and the bill goes over.

CLAIM AGENTS AND ATTORNEYS IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to report back favorably the act (S. 2511) relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases. I ask for the reading of the bill and report, and when they have been read I shall demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That no agent, attorney, or other person shall demand or receive any fee for his services in pension, arrears of pension, or bounty-land claims until the allowance of the claim.

SEC. 2. That all fees in pension claims shall be paid by the agent for paying pensions out of the first installment of pension due the claimant; and no agent, attorney, or other person shall receive any fee for his services in a pension claim except through the agent for paying pensions, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe.

SEC. 3. The claimant may contract with his attorney of record, in writing, in such form as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe, for a fee to an amount not exceeding $25, subject to revision by the Commissioner of Pensions as to the amount to be paid, except in claims for increase of pension where no new disability is alleged, in cases of pensions for service, and in all claims filed in the Pension Office after June 20, 1878, and prior to the 4th day of July, 1884, in which cases no fee above $10 shall be contracted for; and in all claims filed prior to the passage of this act the attorney shall file a statement, under oath, duly attested, setting forth the amount of fee already received by him, and the amount already received shall be deducted from the fee allowed by this act.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe rules and regulations governing the recognition of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing claimants before his Department, and may require of such persons, agents, and attorneys, before being recognized as representatives of claimants, that they shall show that they are of good moral character and in good repute, possessed of the necessary qualifications to enable them to render such claimants valuable service and otherwise competent to advise and assist such claimants in the presentation of their cases; and such Secretary may suspend, debar, dismise, and disbar from further practice before his Department any such person, agent, or attorney shown to be incompetent, disreputable, or who refuses to abide by the said rules and regulations, or who shall in any manner deceive, mislead, or threaten any claimant or presumptive claimant by word, circular, letter, or by advertisement.

SEC. 5. That any agent or attorney or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for pension, or arrears thereof, who shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, or receive and retain any compensation for his services or instrumentality for prosecuting a claim for pension, or arrears thereof, under such contract, greater than is herein provided, or in any other manner than herein provided, or shall willfully or knowingly make a false statement in regard to the amount of fee already received, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall for every such offense be fined not exceeding $1,000, or be confined at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court, and be forever afterward debarred from practicing before the Pension Office.

SEC. 6. That no agent or attorney shall either demand or receive, on account of the prosecution of any claim provided for under the provisions of this act, where such claim was filed after the 20th day of June, 1878, and prior to the 4th day of July, 1884, any fee or sum of money in excess of $10; nor shall said $10, or any part thereof, be paid to any agent or attorney until he make and file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions the affidavit provided for in section 3 of this act; and if it shall appear from said affidavit, or in any other way, that all or any part of said $10 has been paid, it shall be deducted therefrom, and the residue, if any, shall be paid to such attorney as hereinbefore provided; Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to interfere with any contracts entered into fairly and without fraud or duress in accordance with the laws existing at the time of making such contract; and that any person who shall violate the provisions of this act shall be, upon conviction, punished as provided in the fifth section of this act: And provided further, That in all cases filed after June 20, 1878, and prior to July 4, 1884, where new contracts have been entered into under the act of July 4, 1884, no deduction for attorneys' fees shall be made by any pension agent from the pension allowed, but the whole amount of said pension shall be paid directly to the claimant; and in all such cases the Commissioner of Pensions shall certify to the pension agent paying the pension the fact that a new contract has been filed in the Pension Bureau, and on account thereof no deduction shall be made.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not be so construed as to prohibit any claimant the prosecution of whose claim has been or may be abandoned by his attorney from employing another attorney or agent, but in no such case shall the fee paid such attorney exceed the sum of $10, under the penalties of the fifth section of this act: Provided, That if such new attorney successfully prosecute such claim, the original attorney or agent shall not be allowed to demand or receive any part thereof, under the penalties of the fifth section of this act.

Sec. 8. That hereafter no person or persons who may have been heretofore engaged in the prosecution of pension or bounty-land claims of any character whatsoever, and who may have heretofore collected on account thereof any sum whatever, shall be allowed to sell, assign, convey, or make over to any other person any such claim or claims, so as that it shall be lawful for any vendee or assignee of such claim or claims to demand or receive any other or greater fee than is hereinbefore provided for; nor shall such vendee or assignee be allowed to receive anything therefor until the vendor or assignor of such claim or claims, if alive, shall make and file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions the affidavit provided for in the third section of this act; and any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be subject to the penalties imposed by the fifth section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act authorizing contracts for a fee of $25 shall be limited to attorneys or agents residing in the State or Territory or the District of Columbia where the claimant resides, and shall not extend to agents or attorneys residing in a State or Territory or the District of Columbia of which the claimant is resident to enter into partnership with or otherwise to divide the fee of $25 with any attorney or agent residing in the District of Columbia.

Sec. 9. That all of the provisions of the act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, approved July 4, 1884, relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases, are hereby repealed: Provided, That as to offenses committed under said act all the provisions thereof shall remain in full force.

Passed the Senate February 6, 1885.

Attest:

ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that notwithstanding this committee has the right under the order of the House to report at any time, it does not carry with it the right of consideration; that the bill must be referred for consideration to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if it be of that character required to be so considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). The point is not well taken at this time. The right to report at any time includes the reading of the bill and report, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman to make his point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the bill was brought here for present consideration. I am required by the rules to make my point of order before the consideration of the bill has been entered upon.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry whether it is in order to move a substitute for the present bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, having had under consideration Senate bill 2511, beg leave to report the same with the recommendation that it pass.

The said bill is in substance the same as an amendment to the House pension appropriation bill, which passed the House at its present session. It embodies also the same principles as the amendment to the House pension appropriation bill which passed the House last session, so that the present bill or the principles embodied in it have twice met the approbation of the House of Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress, and once in the Senate.

The only difference in this bill of any importance from the amendment to the House pension appropriation bill of the present session is this:

In the amendment to the House pension appropriation bill there was a provision absolutely abrogating all contracts for a greater sum than $10, executed and filed under the act of July 4, 1884, in cases filed under the act of June 20, 1878, under which last act the fee in all cases was fixed by law at $10.

This bill does not directly abrogate that class of contracts, but it prohibits the pension agents from paying the pension attorneys anything, directs the check when issued to be turned over to the claimant, and remits the attorney and client to settle the fee between themselves, as the law provided when the claim was filed and the work undertaken. The committee preferred its own bill, but thought this bill would correct the evils of the act of July 4, 1884, if not entirely at least substantially. It at least accomplishes two purposes: First, it saves a considerable per cent. of the force in the Pension Office—for the legitimate work of the office, which, under the act of July 4, 1884, was employed in collecting fees for pension attorneys; second, it prevents pension attorneys from exacting the execution of twenty-five-dollar contracts from clients they had agreed to serve for $10, by forbidding them from demanding or receiving any fee until the claim is allowed, and it will save to claimants hundreds of thousands, if not millions of dollars, which they would have paid out to attorneys under the act of July 4, 1884. The committee gives its sanction to this bill without dissent and without amendment rather than run any risk of permitting the act of July 4, 1884, to remain longer upon the statute-books, believing as it does that that act never would have received the sanction of Congress if it had been considered properly in either branch thereof.

The committee recommend that this bill be put upon its immediate passage and without amendment.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to be heard upon his point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order against the consideration of this bill in the House. My point of order is that the bill should first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I call the attention of the Chair to these provisions of the bill.

By section 1 of the bill it will be found that it undertakes to provide—

That no agent, attorney, or other person shall demand or receive any fee for his services in pension, arrears of pension, or bounty-land claims until the allowance of the claim.

Section 2 of the bill provides—

That all fees in pension claims shall be paid by the agent for paying pensions out of the first installment of pension due the claimant; and no agent, attorney, or other person shall receive any fee for his services in a pension claim except through the agent for paying pensions, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe.

It will be understood, and there is no dispute about it, that the agent for the payment of pensions named by the second section of the bill is the agent of the Government for the payment of pensions, and not the agent of the claimants for pensions, but is the person who pays out the money of the Government under its appropriation for pensions. By this provision it will be seen that money belonging to the Government which has been appropriated under the laws of Congress to be paid directly by these persons who are called pension agents is paid in another sense to persons who represent the claimants.

Now I call the attention of the Speaker to paragraph 3 of Rule XXIII:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will note the particular language that applies to this point of order. It is that this bill contains a proposition "authorizing payments out of appropriations already made." That is out of the moneys of the United States appropriated for the purpose of paying pensions. It is a payment to be made by virtue of the provisions of section 2 out of the moneys of the United States. It does not make any difference whether that is to be charged over as against the persons to whom the pensions are allowed. That makes no difference, because this is a provision in the bill for the purpose of paying out money already appropriated; and therefore I maintain that this bill requires its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I make the point of order on that ground at this time. I make this point of order because it is in accordance with the previous rulings so far as I know of the various Speakers who have presided here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word on the point of order. I am very confident, Mr. Speaker, that a careful inquiry into this question will disclose the fact that the point of order is not well taken. It comes fairly within the law, and not at all within the rule to which the gentleman from Ohio refers.

The bill simply proposes, out of money already appropriated, or which shall be appropriated, when it shall become the money of the pensioners themselves, that a certain limitation shall be imposed upon the expenditures, not of the money of the United States, but of the amounts to be paid to the party securing the allowance of the pension. It is not therefore an appropriation of the money of the Federal Government, money belonging to the public Treasury, but a designation as to how money appropriated by the Government and belonging to the pension claimants shall be applied when it becomes the money of the pensioners.

I concede if an appropriation was sought to be made of money belonging to the United States, while still remaining its money, a bill proposing to appropriate that money, or diverting its appropriation, or appropriating money out of it, it being money of the United States, that it would fall clearly within the rule to which the gentleman calls attention. In that case it would be a direct application of the money of the United States for purposes not warranted under the rule, and would require its consideration, were the point of order made in the Committee of the Whole. I submit therefore that the point of order is not well taken; and that this is a limitation upon money which becomes the property of somebody else, and is not the property of the United States when the appropriation which this bill provides is made out of it.

I hope the rule will be read in this connection.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to have this dispatch read on the point of order. It is from the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send the dispatch to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO.

Hon. GEO. W. STEELE—

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I object to the reading of that. How does it come in here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has a right to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. In addition to the suggestion I made a moment ago, I wish to add that this committee had unanimous consent to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. And the right to report at any time implies the right to consider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read what the gentleman from Indiana sends to the desk, on the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, February 18, 1885.

Hon. GEO. W. STEELE:

In my opinion the pension-fee bill will work an injury to soldiers and should not pass.

JNO. T. KOUNTZ.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to be heard in reply to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], before the Chair rules on the point of order, that we have discovered for the first time in the history of the Government, if that gentleman's construction of the bill is correct, that we have a right, after money has become the property of an individual to say how he shall spend it and to take it away from him almost by force and apply it as we please.

The gentleman from Indiana argues that this bill proposes not to use the money of the United States, while it is still the money of the United States, but after it has become the money of the pensioner to say how a portion of it shall be applied. But that is not the fact. Under the bill, if it should become a law, it will be enacted that so much of the first payment that goes to a pensioner shall be paid to the claim agent; and therefore it only reduces the amount of the money that goes on the first payment to the pensioner. The other part the Government holds and would keep, under the bill, to be applied to pay a person who represented a pensioner. It is for that reason the Government is allowed to direct it, and it is in this way that we legislate when we undertake to pay the attorney who represents the pensioner. We undertake to pay it out of the money of the United States, not out of the pensioner's money, because we would not have any such right or authority as that. I do not know the Government of the United States has in any instance undertaken, by any law, to say how a person's property should be applied and used. I think there is no instance of it.

It is an attempt to argue out of or around the rule to say we are undertaking to fix the amount that shall be paid the pension agent who represents the pensioner. It is a mere attempt to go around the rule, and is not within the spirit of it.

The law is plain and the rule is plain that where we undertake to apply money that has already been appropriated the bill shall have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON). The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON). The Chair holds the point of order taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is not good. The Chair does not think this is an appropriation of the public money or such an authorizing of payments out of appropriations of the public money already made as brings it within the rule quoted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. HERR. I rise to a privileged question. I raise the question of consideration on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that it is too late to raise the question of consideration. We have proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HERR. I beg the gentleman's pardon; we have not done so.

Mr. STEELE. I gave notice that I reserved the right to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] raised a point of order on this bill which was reserved till the reading of the report. The point of order has been ruled against. Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] raises the question of consideration against the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report has been read, the point of order has been discussed and ruled upon, and the bill is now pending before the House. The time to raise the question of consideration was when the gentleman from Arkansas called up the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], in raising the point of order, went further and also raised the question of consideration. He made the point that this was not a privileged bill except for the purpose of report. The Chair ruled that it was privileged for the purpose of report, and that that made it privileged for the purpose of consideration. But any gentleman has the right, of course, at any time before consideration begins to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HERR. No doubt of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the gentleman from Michigan was in time, because the report was read by unanimous consent and not as a matter of right.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I had the floor, and demanded the reading of the report while holding the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order was pending at the time; and the report could only be read, while the point of order was pending, by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the question now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House now consider this bill?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 78, noes 67.

Mr. HERR. I call for tellers.

Mr. KEIFER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to put the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point that a quorum did not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now dividing on the question whether it will order the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 23—not a sufficient number.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I now call the previous question.

Mr. HERR. I demanded tellers because there was no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to a vote by tellers.

Mr. HERR. I demand them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. ROGERS, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HERR.

Mr. HOLMAN. Tellers were called for too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for tellers on the original motion is not too late; a call for tellers on the yeas and nays would be too late.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. There is some misapprehension in this part of the Chamber as to the precise question upon which we are voting, and I desire to ask the Chair to state the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. Tellers have been ordered upon the question of consideration of this bill, and all who are in favor of considering the bill at the present time will pass between the tellers; and the Chair designates the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HERR, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. ROGERS, to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 110 voting in the affirmative; and 100 in the negative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan twice—

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that the result as announced does not come within twenty votes of according with the tally which I kept, and I kept it as accurately as I could.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can only take the vote as reported by the clerk at the Speaker's table.

Mr. HERR. Well, it is a mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In justice to the clerk, the Chair will state that it was a vote taken after such a fashion as made it difficult, if not impossible, for the clerk or for the tellers to ascertain the result accurately.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. If a challenge of the vote is made by one of the tellers, or by any member of the House, there is but one thing to do, namely, to take the vote over again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is but fair, as the manner in which the vote was taken was the fault of the House. The ayes were not counted at one time, nor were the noes. The Chair will ask the tellers to resume their places, that the vote may be taken again.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to demand the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not, because the yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. CANNON. But you can reconsider that.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and the motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] on the question of consideration.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Chair will state the question is on proceeding to the consideration of this bill at this time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, does this bill antagonize the river and harbor bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the pensioners of this country ought not to be left another year under the present system, which is one of extortion on the part of claim agents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not in order.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, and Mr. RANDALL both further addressed the Chair, but the confusion was such that they could not be heard.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, which the Chair need answer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not recognize any gentleman until order is restored in the Hall. There is so much confusion that the Chair must direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that members come to order and resume their seats.

The Sergeant-at-Arms, bearing the mace, proceeded through the Hall until order was restored.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to inquire whether this is a Senate bill or a House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that that is a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 116, nays 136, not voting 72; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 116, the nays 136. The House refuses to proceed with the consideration of this bill. The bill will go to the House Calendar and the report be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my purpose being to call up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. I think it was the understanding distinctly and plainly yesterday and to-day—

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

[Mr. WILLIS, Mr. KEIFER, Mr. HISCOCK, and Mr. HUTCHINS, amid some confusion, engaged in a brief colloquy on the order of business.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The regular order has been demanded. The reporters will not put into the RECORD anything that may have occurred since the regular order was demanded.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment for his parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of general appropriation bills. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] rise to a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WILLIS. I can not, of course, under the rules express my surprise, and I do not [laughter]; but I rise to ask, if this motion be voted down, whether we can not go into Committee of the Whole to call up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. STORM. Nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would certainly say that is in the province of the House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent for a little time for debate in order to determine this matter; it will save time when we get into committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will only say that the regular order has been demanded, and the Chair has no power to indulge debate. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 81, noes 99.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. All points of order are reserved on that bill.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNES. I give notice that I will call up this bill as soon as the naval bill is disposed of.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will now be taken by yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr.

HUTCHINS] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 102, nays 139, not voting 83; as follows:

Craig,

So the House refused to consider the naval appropriation bill.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WILLIS moved by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. HUTCHINS objected.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, with Mr. CUTCHMON, for to-day.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. KELLEY, on this vote.

Mr. BEACH with Mr. STRAIT, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I announce it to be my purpose to call up for consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose it was dividing on the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], when no quorum appeared, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors proposes to change this harbor board in such a way as to meet my views, and therefore I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

So there may be no mistake, I desire to say that it is proposed this harbor board or commission or whatever it may be called shall be constituted of three members of the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and three civilians.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe the outcome will be what the gentleman states, but we have not as yet come to any agreement. The drift, however, is in that direction.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to understand what this agreement is.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw the demand for a quorum on the last vote.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But what was it all about?

The CHAIRMAN. The question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to the amendment of the committee. Is the Chair right in that?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The yeas were 38 and the noes 66, so the amendment to the amendment is rejected.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I offer an amendment to strike out lines 213 to 305, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert what I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed at his discretion to cause examinations or surveys, or both, and estimates of cost or improvements proper to be made at Galveston Harbor, Texas, and to ascertain and report what further work, if any, is necessary at that locality.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have been asked whether this is not precisely the same amendment I offered before. It is not. The one I offered before was to strike out from lines 213 to 231 inclusive. In this amendment I propose to strike out from line 213 to 305 inclusive and to insert what has been read by the Clerk.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the idea is this, if I can get the ear of the committee, that during the past we have been led into this error by the member from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], late ex-postmaster-general of the confederacy, to believe that Galveston Harbor could be improved, and from time to time we have given various sums of money, which in the aggregate amounted to nearly $2,000,000. It is in testimony and undisputed that this harbor has cost the Government nearly $2,000,000, and that the result has been a great deal of property has been destroyed in Galveston and only about two inches of water have been gained in the harbor.

I think, this being the case, and inasmuch as we provide in section 9 of the bill that hundreds of thousands of dollars shall be spent to make these surveys under the direction of the Secretary of War and to report to Congress whether they should be improved—I make this point in view of the fact we are wasting nearly $2,000,000 under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman to whom I have alluded—I say it is high time we should stop and let the Secretary of War have new surveys and new reports made to Congress, and let the next Congress, which will be run in large measure by that spirit which did not control us successfully about twenty years ago—let the next House under the influence which will then control it from the White House to both wings of this Capitol—let them take the responsibility, and let not the Republican administration or this House with so many Republican members be led into the error of trying to establish a harbor where there is no water.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments to strike out the same lines and insert new matter in lieu thereof. The first in order is that of the committee.

Mr. HART. I desire to offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment of the committee:

"The United States harbor board provided for in this bill, in the discharge of their duty, shall not confine their examinations to reports on what is known as the jettty system, but shall also examine and report upon such other plans as give reasonable assurance of success in the improvements of the rivers and harbors of the country."

Mr. HART. That is not the amendment I intended to forward.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment the gentleman sent to the desk.

Mr. HART. My amendment in substance is this: That the United States harbor board appointed by this bill—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests the gentleman had better correct his amendment and send it to the desk.

Mr. HART. Very well; I will forward it in writing.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman's amendment comes in better at section 5, and I ask him to reserve it until then. The harbor board is constituted and its duties prescribed. I, however, only make the suggestion.

Mr. HART. I will defer offering my amendment until later in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, proposed by the chairman of the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 97, noes 1.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum being demanded, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE were appointed tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misunderstanding about the proposition we are called to vote upon. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. It is whether the committee will adopt the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that it be read.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, and the tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 155, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to offer an amendment after line 843.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer an amendment to the proposition which has just been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I offered an amendment to this paragraph which has not been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the rule, when a motion to strike out and insert has been adopted, another motion to strike out the same lines and insert yet something else is not in order.

The first amendment, being the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out and insert, having been adopted, in the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky on the left to strike out the same words and insert something else is not in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Do I understand the Chair to hold that when an amendment is adopted it is not in the power of the committee to adopt another which would progress a little further in the same direction?

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair to state what the gentleman from Kentucky understands [laughter]; but the Chair stated what the Chair understands to be the rules and practice of the House in this respect.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Kentucky rose in time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. And on that appeal I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor if he wishes to be heard on the appeal.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to page 1686 of the RECORD of the proceedings of this House, and I ask to have read the agreement which was entered into in regard to the offering of amendments in the consideration of this bill. I can not turn to the page just now, but will ask the Clerk to read from the desk in the hearing of the House what took place, to the effect that any person who desired to do so might offer amendments to this section of the bill and have three minutes in which to explain them; and I contend that I have the right under this agreement to have a vote in the committee upon the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope if the gentleman contends only for a vote that the committee will allow that to be done.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have now before me the RECORD to which I refer, and I will read myself.

Upon the motion of my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending the motion of my colleague from Kentucky, I move that when the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole and resume consideration of the river and harbor bill, it shall be in order to have all the amendments read which may be offered; and that each person offering an amendment shall be allowed five minutes—or three minutes I will say—to explain each one of his amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I would not object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has made an order as to the debate that shall be allowed in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the chairman of that committee would have the discretion as to the matter of recognition.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent. I believe it will facilitate business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]? There was no objection.

Now, when the chairman took the chair to preside over the Committee of the Whole, the same gentleman who now occupies the Chair, he said:

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. Since the last sitting of the committee the House has directed that when amendments shall hereafter be offered each gentleman offering the same shall be entitled to three minutes to explain it. That the Chair understands to be in addition to the hour and a half already allotted for debate.

Now I complain that it would be perfectly ridiculous to give any person the right to offer an amendment and three minutes in which to discuss it under this agreement unless it carried with it the privilege to demand a vote in the committee. I am well aware of the fact that the committee, by some agreement with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN], has offered a substitute in place of what the bill carries, but that substitute gives Galveston $500,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the question of order raised by himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman should be allowed to proceed to state his question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. And the point of order I make is that, notwithstanding the fact that the chairman of the committee and some members of the committee and the gentleman from Wisconsin have agreed upon a certain amendment to this bill which has been voted upon and incorporated into the bill, it is still within the power of the committee, if it chooses, to vote on my amendment, which provides that the Secretary of War shall make a preliminary investigation before expending the money which is provided in the bill. Now I hope we shall have a vote upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has appealed from the decision of the Chair. The Chair has already ruled upon the question; and the pending question before the committee now is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken on the appeal, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. HART. Before the Clerk proceeds further—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has sent up an amendment which is next in order.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. HOLMAN, as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding the following:

"Provided, That no more of this appropriation shall be expended than is actually necessary to protect the work now done by the Government engineers, and to make the necessary surveys and maps, until the private corporations, namely, the Galveston Wharf Company, the City Land Company, and the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé Railroad Company shall have constructed a pile breakwater or training wall on the south side of the channel in Galveston Harbor and on the north end of their property along said channel, said work to commence at the east or lower end of the wharf company's present works, and extending across the ends of the above-mentioned properties to and connecting with the Government works at Fort Point."

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject-matter to know whether this work is indispensably necessary in the improvement of that harbor or not. I submit the proposition at the instance of a very intelligent gentleman who submitted it to me. And inasmuch as it seems that the improvement of that harbor in a large degree inures to the benefit of those three corporations, it seems eminently proper they should incur the expense of the improvement which directly and immediately benefits their property. I am told the construction of the works indicated will be necessary in connection with this improvement of Galveston Harbor, and that those works would immediately increase the value of their property.

Gentlemen can judge as well as I can whether the public money should be appropriated to improve private property without that private property contributing to the result.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent, because the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors said he would not object to debate in good faith, to say a word in answer to what has been submitted in favor of this invidious and improper proposed amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The chairman of the committee does not mean to say that any debate is necessary. There is no propriety in that amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Let us vote it down.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is impossible in this part of the Hall to hear what is transpiring.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to inquire whether the amendment has been assented to by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. By no means.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 44, nays 73.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read the following amendment, offered by Mr. LORE.

Amend by adding after line 306 the following:
"Improving harbor at Wilmington, Del., $25,000; which shall include the $15,000 hereinbefore in this bill appropriated for that purpose."

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled very reluctantly to make the point of order on that amendment. We have passed that point of the bill. The appropriation for the harbor at Wilmington, Del., is made at line 170, page 8, of the bill.

Mr. LORE. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment, which is that offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. The proposition is to amend the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment adopted the following:
"And the harbor board, if they find it impracticable to construct a first-class harbor at Galveston at a reasonable cost, are hereby authorized and required to examine and report as to the practicability of constructing such a harbor at some other point on the Gulf of Mexico within the State of Texas."

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order that that amendment is offered too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment is offered after the committee has acted on other amendments and passed from that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken on the question of fact. The committee has not passed from that part of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the Clerk is reading amendments as we pass along the bill, and that he is not reading the bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true; but the gentleman from Ohio proposes to offer an amendment to come in at line 305, at the end of the paragraph for which the substitute has been adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. Can amendments be made to that paragraph all the time? I submit that we have acted on an amendment offered to a subsequent clause relating to the harbor at Wilmington.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken as to the matter of fact. An amendment was proposed to the preceding clause relating to the harbor at Wilmington and was withdrawn. It was not acted upon. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HART].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 25, noes 73.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it would be in order to move to strike out from the amendment in relation to Galveston Harbor the sum of "$500,000" and insert "$200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. That portion of the section having been amended by striking out and inserting is not subject to amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That being the decision of the Chair, I wish to say there was $200,000 or $250,000 once offered for that harbor and rejected; and now it seems to get $500,000 on precisely the same conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is out of order.

The Clerk read from line 306 to line 310 of the bill, as follows:

Improving Sabine Pass, Texas and Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $125,000.
Improving harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $8,500.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, it is not the reading of the bill that is now in order, but the calling up of the next amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. FORAN), as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 314, insert the following:

"Provided, That said amount shall be expended in the construction of a section of breakwater of the same size and character of the present lake arm of said harbor of refuge, to begin at a point three hundred and fifty feet north from the northeast corner of the east end of the lake arm and extending 4,000 feet in a direction east nine degrees north, or as near that direction as future soundings may decide: And provided further, That the $100,000 appropriated for continuing the improvement of said Cleveland Harbor by act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' is hereby made available for the construction of said section of breakwater as aforesaid."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it that amendment does not in any way increase the appropriation, but merely directs the manner of its expenditure in accordance with the plans of the engineers, and the committee see no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. WARNER, of Ohio), as follows:

In line 332, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "thirty;" so that it will read:

"Improving ice-harbor at the mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $50,000."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be passed over for the present until I can have certain papers bearing upon the necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. No objection being made, the amendment will be passed over for the present.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. SHIVELY), as follows:

In line 345, substitute for the word "forty" the word "fifty;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Improving the harbor at Michigan City, Ind.: Continuing improvement, $50,000."

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Chairman, I trespass on the attention of the committee only to indicate that this amendment is entirely compatible with reasonable and discreet economy in the expenditure of the public funds. It will be observed that the United States Chief of Engineers recommends for the continued improvement of this harbor an appropriation of $200,000. The River and Harbor Committee allow but 20 per cent. of this amount. My amendment simply increases this allowance to $50,000, or 25 per cent. of the sum recommended by the War Department. Situated as this harbor is, at the southern extremity of Lake Michigan, bringing the commerce of the lake into direct connection with the Michigan Central, the Louisville and New Albany, the Wabash, Saint Louis and Pacific, and in close proximity to the Chicago and West Michigan, and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroads, and being, as official statistics demonstrate, a distributing point for and a potent factor in the commerce of Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas, its importance can not be overestimated nor its claims disregarded.

Within the past year over 226,000,000 feet of lumber have passed over the docks at Michigan City. This represents an increase of 70,000,000 feet over two years ago, to say nothing of the proportionate or even greater increase in the amount of iron ore, pig-iron, and merchandise handled through this harbor during the same time. Now, Mr. Chairman, while it is impossible in the three minutes allowed for debate on amendments to fully state the merits of this case, I respectfully submit to the committee that this amendment is entirely justified by the report of the Chief of Engineers, entirely justified by the importance of this harbor, entirely justified by precedent, and entirely justified by that prudence and discretion which should prevail in perfecting bills of this character.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the amendment; and there were—ayes 45, noes 54.

A MEMBER. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places. The Chair designates the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. SHIVELY, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, to act as tellers on the pending question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the Chair please state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], which the Clerk again will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 345, strike out the word "forty" and insert "fifty;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Improving harbor at Michigan City, Ind.: Continuing improvement, $50,000," &c.

The committee proceeded to divide again; but before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not insist on a further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is one submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 18, lines 414 to 424, both inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Improving harbor at Superior Bay and Harbor, and Saint Louis Bay, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $30,000. And the engineer in charge, in his next annual report, shall submit an estimate of the cost of a dredge-boat, or other facilities that may be needed for dredging the harbors of Duluth and Superior. Fifteen thousand dollars of the money hereby appropriated are to be expended in dredging in said Superior Bay and Harbor and in repairing piers at natural entry, and $15,000 in dredging in said Saint Louis Bay, from deep water at Connor's Point toward deep water at Grassy Point."

Mr. PRICE. I think that after a little explanation this amendment will be adopted without any difficulty. I am informed by a gentleman near me that this expectation is exceedingly absurd; possibly it may prove so.

The recommendation of the engineers for one part of this improvement was $75,000. That recommendation was in the possession of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and upon it they gave $12,500. There was a supplemental report from the engineers for $70,000 additional, making $145,000 as the total recommendation of the engineers as the amount that could be judiciously expended during the coming year.

I say the committee was not in possession of the supplemental recommendation. I tried to get it to them but signally failed. The House, however, is now in possession of the fact that the amount recommended by the engineers for the work contemplated in this paragraph is $145,000.

I ask the adoption of an amendment that will give a little less than 25 per cent. of this; that is all I ask.

The appropriation proposed in the bill is less than 9 per cent. of the amount recommended by the board of engineers. The report of the committee in this respect arose partially from mistake, partially from want of correct understanding of the facts. The majority of the committee, however, do now understand this matter, and admit that the bill does not treat this subject fairly. But they say, "Go to the Senate." I reply, "Go to." [Laughter.] I say here is where I want this question understood. Here is where I expect the appropriation to be made. I merely ask to have this appropriation increased to something less than 25 per cent. of the amount recommended by the engineers, the bill providing for only 9 per cent.

The commerce of that section is infinitely in excess of other places for which this bill appropriates 500 per cent. of the amount recommended by the engineers. I could show, if I had time, that the commerce there is worth taking care of. There are five railroads being built; two are already built; two extensive flouring mills are going up; two elevators are being built. The future of that section of the country, if it be only decently taken care of, can scarcely be foreseen or foretold. I hope that the Committee of the Whole will favorably consider this amendment. I ask nothing but what is right; I would not ask for anything else. I know that the committee did not know, and they would not know. This Committee of the Whole does know.

The question recurred on Mr. PRICE's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 74.

Mr. PRICE. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. PRICE and Mr. WILLIS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to send up another amendment to this proposition, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, on page 18, lines 414 to 424, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Improving harbor at Superior Bay and harbor at Saint Louis Bay, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $28,000; and the engineer in charge, in his next annual report, shall submit an estimate of the cost of a dredge-boat or other facilities that may be needed for dredging the harbors of Duluth and Superior; $14,000 of the money hereby appropriated to be expended in dredging in said Superior Bay and harbor and in repairing piers at Natural Entry, and $14,000 in dredging in said Saint Louis Bay from deep water at Coxmer's Point toward deep water at Grassy Point."

Mr. WILLIS. I reserve the point of order until the gentleman has been heard.

Mr. PRICE. I will occupy the floor for just a moment. Now, Mr. Chairman, the simple reason why this did not pass the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and therefore the reason it is not included in this river and harbor appropriation bill, is because that committee was not acquainted with the facts which have since been communicated to Congress. The support given to the original proposition was so encouraging I have brought forward this proposition, having reduced the amount somewhat, and now take the opportunity to say to this House there is no living man who can raise a reasonable objection against the proposed amendment, unless it be simply this, that the work of the committee is so sacred it must not be infringed upon or else chaos and confusion will come again and reign in our midst.

I say to you in any court among honest men [laughter]—that is the word—I say no honest men would do as we are doing. I doubt not the intelligence and integrity of this House, but the point I make is this, that we have additional information on this subject than that which we had when this bill was drawn up. We now have a new and supplementary report before this House which was not before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They knew nothing of it. In the opinion of the engineer $70,000 should be appropriated for one purpose I have indicated and the committee have not given a cent for it. They have extended the provisions of the bill, for which I am indebted to the courtesy of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. The estimates of the engineers for the two works is $145,000; it is really but one scheme, and the bill provides for less than 9 per cent. of the estimate. Now, will you say this bill is so sacred, even with new evidence and new communications before the committee, that no amendment is to be made to it, that it must be adopted just as it has been reported from the committee?

If there was anything in opposition to public interests embodied in the amendment, or if there is anything right that we are going to subserve by carrying the bill through without any amendments, then, of course, I would expect you to reject my amendment. But, for the reason stated, I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if it is not true that the engineers report only fifteen vessels as having entered that port during the last year?

Mr. PRICE. I have not the information before me to answer the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. THOMAS. I have it before me, and the committee had it before them when this bill was made up.

Mr. PRICE. I am not in condition to refute that statement of the gentleman, not having the papers before me.

Mr. THOMAS. I repeat that only fifteen vessels entered that port during the last year, as shown by this report, and we gave 25 per cent. of the estimates made by the engineers.

Mr. PRICE. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I have not time to make fitting answer to that. I have now lying on my desk the last report of the engineers, showing an estimate of $75,000 for this work, and upon my desk also rests another report—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIS. If I may be permitted to make a statement I will say that there has been an additional report made by the engineers since the committee acted on this proposition, and I am willing that this amendment shall be agreed to, reserving the right to take a vote in the House upon it.

Mr. PRICE. That is entirely acceptable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Kentucky to the committee. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this amendment be considered as agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, subject to a vote in the House.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the question to the committee.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. PRICE; and on a division there were—ayes 80, noes 24.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the next amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Amend line 435 by striking out "$31,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to make a few statements to the committee in reference to the importance of this harbor, and I believe they will be satisfactory as indicating the necessity for this increase.

The city of Duluth has now grown to be a great shipping point in the Northwest on the furthestmost end of Lake Superior. It is the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the Saint Paul and Duluth Railroad, and over these lines of road and through that port 15,000,000 bushels of wheat are shipped annually. This class of commerce requires for its accommodation vessels of the largest size, as large as can possibly pass through the Saint Mary's Canal. It is essential that this harbor at Duluth should be deepened to accommodate vessels drawing at least sixteen feet of water. From the local engineer's report, Mr. Wells, it appears that in many places the harbor is only thirteen, fourteen, and less feet in depth. His recommendation is that it be dredged to a uniform depth of not less than eighteen feet, so as to enable the free entrance of vessels drawing sixteen feet.

I may say further in reference to this harbor of Duluth that it is to some extent an artificial harbor. It is situated in the innermost part of Superior Bay, but the entrance to it is through a canal. This canal every spring when the ice breaks up, owing to the sandy formation of the bed and the upheaval of sand bars, is placed in such a condition as to require extra work, and the piers also require extra work, hence the Government engineer reported that a fund of $10,000 is necessary for emergencies. Take out this emergency fund of $10,000 and it will leave only $21,000 as the bill is now fixed. I trust that the committee will agree to this amendment.

The question being taken on the adoption of Mr. NELSON's amendment, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 40.

Mr. STORM. No quorum has voted. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania demand tellers?

Mr. STORM. I have demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. STORM and Mr. NELSON were appointed tellers.

Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. STORM withdrew the demand for a quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the next amendment, submitted by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON].

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 446 insert:

"Improving harbor at Natchez, Miss.: Continuing improvement, $75,000."

Mr. WILLIS. I will suggest that this amendment is not in order until we reach the paragraph relating to the Mississippi River, and I make the point of order that it is not applicable here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the order fixed by the House it will be in order to propose an amendment at any time. The Chair suggests, however, that the gentleman from Mississippi might be willing to postpone the amendment for the present.

Mr. VAN EATON. I will let it be passed over temporarily, to be considered when the paragraphs of the bill relating to the Mississippi River are reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest, then, that the gentleman had better change the number of the line where the amendment is to come in, so that the Clerk will know when to offer it.

The Clerk will now report the next amendment submitted by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 436, amend by striking out "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Improving Providence River and Narraganset Bay, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $50,000."

Mr. SPOONER. This is but a small amount of the appropriation for this improvement that was recommended by the engineers. It is to carry on a most important work. In Narraganset Bay we have a depth of thirty feet of water extending from the ocean to about five miles from the city of Providence. The change in the character of sea-going craft necessitates an increased depth and width of channel, which is provided for by the improvement now in progress.

The tonnage of that port and the number of vessels there, going to that port and sailing therefrom, and the importance of its commerce, to which I referred the other day, all justify the very reasonable request that is made for the appropriation that is provided for by this amendment.

This is not asked for the improvement of any trout stream; it is not for macadamizing any road; it is not to build anything for the advantage of private property. But, sir, it is for the benefit of an existing national commerce. I ask consideration for that which actually existing circumstances justify me in demanding consideration for; not for something that is problematical; not for something that may be, but for something that actually is. And I trust the committee will do that justice to the necessities of the work in my locality which is called for by this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 45, noes 69.

Mr. SPOONER. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. SPOONER, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 109.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read the following amendment (proposed by Mr. WAIT):

In line 464 strike out "$30,000" and insert "$30,000;" so that it will read: "Improving Thames River, Connecticut: Continuing improvement, $30,000."

Mr. WAIT. The river Thames probably in proportion to its size has more commerce than any other river in the Union. Two great lines of railroad center at Norwich: the New London, running in a northwesterly direction from Norwich through Connecticut and Massachusetts and connecting with lines of railroad in Vermont, &c., to the Canadian line; and the Norwich and Worcester, running in a northeasterly direction through Connecticut and Massachusetts, connecting with lines of railroad reaching into Maine. Those railroads concentrate there. And the raw material that goes to all the great manufacturing and mechanical establishments in the New England States passes over this river on steamboats and propellers and goes to the interior to supply those establishments.

That river is frequently lined from one end of it to the other with barges and vessels that carry coal to drive the machinery of the mechanical establishments in New England that require steam in addition to the water power. Lumber is brought from the East and taken up there, and then scattered throughout New England. Heretofore this committee has given $30,000 and $35,000 for the improvement of this river. In this bill it appropriates only $20,000. All I ask is this addition of $10,000 to carry the appropriation up to what has been given in years past. As a matter of economy, let me say, it will cost just as much to get your steam-dredges there and your boats to carry off the excavations to carry out an expenditure of $20,000 as with an expenditure of $30,000. When you get the dredges and the mud-diggers and the scows there to relieve the river, you may just as well go on and spend the additional $10,000; for all the machinery and implements are there that are necessary to protect the improvement.

I certainly trust that when all I ask is the sum which has been meted out to us in the past the House will be willing to give it to that river with its vast amount of commerce.

I want to say one word more. The products of the great manufacturing and mechanical establishments that dot the New England States, and which are to be carried to a market in the city of New York or in the South, pass over the railroads that I have named and by water communication over the river Thames to New York. With a view to carrying these products to market it is of vital importance that the navigation of this river should be improved.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment offered by Mr. WAIT, there were—ayes 49, noes 74.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read the following amendment (offered by Mr. BOUTELLE):

Insert after line 464:

"Improving the mouth of the Narraganset River at Millbridge, Me., $15,000."

Mr. BOUTELLE. An amendment somewhat similar was offered by me at a previous session of the committee asking an appropriation of $20,000. It was lost on the narrow margin of 81 to 84 votes. I have now reduced the amount, bringing it within the pro rata established by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I desire to have a vote of the Committee of the Whole upon it.

I do not intend to debate this amendment any further. I simply wish to remind the House that it is based upon the report of the engineer made in 1880, and the only objection, so far as I know, made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has been that it was not embraced in the estimates presented this year. I have corresponded with the district engineer and find that a new survey is unnecessary. If a survey should be ordered the engineers would report against it, and that the present report in the Book of Estimates of 1880 is ample for this improvement. Upon that statement I trust the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will approve the insertion of this amendment for this needed improvement.

Mr. WILLIS. I must insist on the point of order that we have passed that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky raises the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to do it in order that we may get on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] raises the point of order that this matter has already been passed over in the bill and voted on.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, is not this an entirely different amendment from the other?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the five-minute debate any variation of a proposition would make a different question and authorize gentlemen to be heard pro and con; but, by the direction of the House, it was ordered that we should proceed from the point at which the bill had been read by paragraphs to finish the balance of it, taking up amendments that were on the Clerk's desk in their order, each amendment to be debated for three minutes in its favor, nothing being allowed in reply. The Chair thinks that by a fair construction that meant that all behind that point should be considered as passed, and this is as if we had passed away from a paragraph and a request was made to go back to it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we have just returned to paragraphs affecting this very same section of country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised of any recurrence beyond the place at which the House directed that debate should be closed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to take up the time of the House for $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read the following amendment.

Strike out lines 465 and 466 and insert:

"For removing obstructions in East River and Hell Gate, New York: For completing excavation at Flood Rock and Frying-Pan in Hell Gate, $60,000; for grappling and removing in part the broken stone of the explosion of Flood Rock, $300,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I find by the engineer's report which we have here that it is estimated that $500,000 will be required for the improvements indicated in this amendment. The committee have recommended an appropriation of $20,000. I do not suppose it is necessary here for me to demonstrate by facts and figures the necessity of improving the harbor of New York, and I would like to understand from the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors why it is that with these estimates before them the committee recommended the meager appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. WILLIS. It is because last year the committee gave $260,000, the full amount that was asked, to explode that rock, and the engineer said that $20,000 in addition was all that would be needed for that work.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that I have this to say, that for the simple purpose of this explosion $20,000 is all that is needed. But, so far as the other works there are concerned, the committee have failed to make any recommendation, and the engineer in his report, which he has submitted to you, has stated that $600,000 is necessary for the removal of broken rock.

Mr. WILLIS. That follows after the other is done, and they have $371,000—

Mr. HISCOCK. It follows after the other is done, and I have before me a letter from the Chief Engineer saying that the work will be entirely suspended next October unless this appropriation is made—that the explosion will take place on the 1st day of October, or some time in October, and that then work must cease entirely unless more money is appropriated. Now, I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to accept this amendment which I have offered. I have not asked more than 33 per cent., which I understand to be the proportion of the estimates allowed under the general rule of the committee.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Hiscock, and there were—ayes 67, noes 69.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. PARKER), as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 468, the following:

"Improving Salmon River to a 9-foot channel, between Fort Covington and the boundary line, $20,000; but this money shall not be expended until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the Canadian Government has provided for a like improvement of said river from the boundary line to the Saint Lawrence River."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in this case the report was not received and printed until after the bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and, therefore, the committee did not pass upon this item. The amendment is offered upon the recommendation of the engineer in charge, and I will not occupy time in discussing it, but will simply read from the report of the Secretary of War, based upon a former report of the engineers, which in part is as follows:

Extracts from communication made to the House by the Secretary of War, under date of January 26, 1885.

[From report of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert.]

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Oswego, N. Y., December 31, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report on the survey of the Salmon River, at and below Fort Covington, N. Y., just completed, under my direction, by Assistant Engineer L. Y. Schermerhorn.

The report of the preliminary examination of this locality, made by me personally, was submitted under date of the 4th of last October. Of the five miles of the Salmon River below Fort Covington, one mile lies in the United States and about four miles in the Dominion of Canada.

I would then recommend the following project for the improvement of the Salmon River at and below Fort Covington, N. Y.

The river should be dredged from the boundary line up to Salmon street, in Fort Covington, a distance of about 4,300 feet, to a width of about 75 feet, except at sharp bends, where it should be increased to 100 feet, and to an available depth of 9 feet at low water, ultimately to be increased to 12 feet; provided the depth of the dredging in no case exceeds that which the Chief of Engineers is satisfied is to be attained on the lower portion of the river.

[From report of Assistant Engineer L. Y. Schermerhorn.]

MATERIAL TO BE REMOVED.

The river bed consists of blue clay, both free from and mixed with stone, as shown on the profile in the accompanying map. Borings were made at frequent intervals, and in the parts of the river bed marked "blue clay" the bottom was quite soft, and the iron rods could be forced to the indicated depth with great ease. In the parts marked "clay and stone" the iron bars required heavy driving, but the resistance encountered was more due to stone than to the hardness of the clay with which the stones were associated.

ESTIMATE.

For a dredged channel about 4,300 feet in length, extending from the boundary line to a point abreast of Salmon street, in Fort Covington, seventy-five feet in width except at bends, and nine feet available depth at low water, the estimate would be as follows:

40,000 cubic yards mud, soft clay, and gravel, at 25 cents.....	$10,000
13,000 cubic yards clay mixed with stones, at 50 cents.....	6,500
Contingencies.....	3,500

CANADIAN CO-OPERATION.

It is stated by parties interested in the general improvement of the Salmon River that the Canadian Government is ready to undertake the improvement of the river within their borders if that part of the river between Fort Covington and the boundary line is to be improved by the United States.

RECENT IMPROVEMENTS.

The recently completed United States and Canadian Railroad, which extends from Fort Covington northeasterly to the boundary line, connects Fort Covington with the railroad systems of Canada and the United States by branches of the Canada Grand Trunk Railroad, one connection reaching Montreal and another Rouse's Point, N. Y. An extension of the railroad from Fort Covington westward to Norwood is in process of construction; this extension will connect the previously described railroad lines with the western connections of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad.

AN OBJECT OF THE IMPROVEMENT.

With the improvement of the Salmon River it is proposed to make Fort Covington a point of distribution by rail of coal received by water transit, and also for the water shipment of iron ore from the mines of Northern New York. These demands, together with the agricultural products of a productive belt of country tributary to such water and rail facilities, will, it is thought, make Fort Covington an important receiving and distributing point, and justify the expenditure by the National Government of the amount required to make the Salmon River navigable between Fort Covington and the boundary line.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

From the facts presented by Lieutenant-Colonel Robert of the present and prospective demands of commerce it appears that an improvement to the extent of a dredged channel seventy-five feet wide and nine feet deep at low water between Fort Covington and the boundary line, estimated to cost about $20,000, would be judicious at this time if its continuation by the Canadian Government could be assured.

This stream rises in the Adirondacks and flows into the Saint Lawrence north of the international boundary line. At present there is regular steamboat navigation with the ports upon the Saint Lawrence up to the town of Dundee, one mile below Fort Covington, where the Canada and United States Railroad crosses the Salmon River, and to which point this improvement is intended to reach.

This proposition, which has the recommendation of the engineer and is approved by the Secretary of War, is to make one mile of navigation above the boundary line so as to connect with the present and prospective navigation in the same stream below, connecting with the navigation of the Saint Lawrence and the lake. Therefore I ask that the amendment be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. VAN ALSTYNE) was read, as follows:

In line 470, strike out the words "twenty thousand dollars" and insert in place thereof the words "thirty-five thousand one hundred and two dollars and forty-six cents."

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Mr. Chairman, if this bill is to pass, it is right that this amendment should prevail. It will close out the unappropriated estimate which is required for the completion of this contemplated improvement. By reference to the report of the engineers it will be found that the unappropriated estimate is the sum named in the amendment. The report also states that this sum can profitably be expended during the next fiscal year.

Sir, I feel almost ashamed to say anything to this intelligent auditory on the subject of the Hudson River. It is no new discovery. It is named on the earliest maps of this country. It is a stream of the utmost importance with reference to commerce. It is not a meadowbrook, but a maritime river, on which the tide has its influence for one hundred and fifty-six miles.

It was stated here the other day that nearly two-thirds of the commerce of this country centers in the city of New York. If that be true, one-half of it passes up and down the valley of the Hudson, and a large proportion of it passes on the waters of the Hudson.

The proposed improvement is not problematical. It has been going on for a series of years, and actual results have shown that the improvement is calculated to accomplish the result intended—the construction of longitudinal dikes to fill in the places between the islands formed by the alluvial drift of this river.

And, sir, we do not rely exclusively upon the assistance of the Federal Government in the matter. I see before me a gentleman who has been a member of the canal board of New York, and he knows that the tonnage of the canals of our State which floats upon the waters of this river amounts on the average to 5,500,000 tons, and that is only a small proportion of the tonnage of the river. The State of New York has been appropriating year after year $30,000 for the improvement of this river over the very stretch where its improvement by the Federal Government has been going on. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. VAN ALSTYNE, there were—ayes 53, noes 59.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VAN ALSTYNE and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 66.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I will not insist further on the point that no quorum has voted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. KEAN) was read, as follows:

At line 478 insert the following:

"Continuing improvement of Raritan River, New Jersey, $60,000; of which $20,000 shall be expended in improving the South Channel."

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, in a bill which seeks to appropriate so many thousands of dollars to the improvement of the commerce and navigation of the country where commerce and navigation do not at the present time exist, due respect it seems to me should be had for the commerce that does now exist.

The commerce of the Raritan River is now over 2,000,000 tons per annum, and its money value more than $40,000. When a river has such a commerce, I think, Mr. Chairman, this committee should give a reasonable sum for its improvement.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to say only a word in support of the suggestion made by my colleague [Mr. KEAN]. It seems to me that all amendments of this character strengthen this bill in a direction where it is weak. The criticism is made that the appropriations in this bill are very generous to rivers and harbors where commerce may be, but very niggardly and scanty to rivers and harbors where commerce is. Here is a small river requiring a small expenditure for its improvement, a river on which commerce now exists in conspicuous abundance, 20,000 vessels passing through it each year. For these vessels and for this commerce it seems to me accommodation ought to be provided, especially when so small a sum will do it, and when the provision instead of weakening will strengthen the general merits of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. My friend will permit me to say that nine-tenths of the rivers embraced in this bill receive only 25 per cent. of the estimate of the engineers, while this river receives 33 per cent.

Mr. PHELPS. In that point of view I acknowledge the approprition in the bill is just; but we should consider the amount of business which this river does in comparison with some of the others.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KEAN, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 43, noes 85.

The next amendment, also by Mr. KEAN, was read, as follows:

After line 479 insert:

"Improving South River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. KEAN. I do. This improvement was provided for in a river and harbor appropriation bill some years ago; but since 1882 no appropriation has been made for it. The Government work already done will be entirely lost unless some appropriation be made at this time for it. Navigation demands it, and commerce also. I trust the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will listen to that amendment and allow it to go into the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 76.

Mr. KEAN. No quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. KEAN and Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will withdraw his point of no quorum.

Mr. KEAN. Very well. I will withdraw the point of no quorum. So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. RAY, of New York) was read, as follows:

After line 497, insert:

"And for improving the Susquehanna River in New York and Pennsylvania, $1,000,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAY, of New York. I desire to say a word on that amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment that if adopted it will inaugurate the grandest scheme of the nineteenth century.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats and preserve order. It is impossible to hear what is going on.

Mr. WILLIS. The point of order I make is this: I am sure my friend from New York was not here when the arrangement was made. General debate was limited to an hour and a half, and when that time had expired my friend from Kentucky in order to facilitate gentlemen desiring to make remarks in legitimate explanation of amendments they have offered asked that it might be enlarged so as to allow three minutes in each case for that purpose. I submit now to my friend from New York whether this amendment comes within the terms of that consent. If he thinks it does I will waive the point of order.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I trust the gentleman will waive his point of order. It will give me only three minutes. I certainly have not burdened the House with remarks up to this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not insist on the point of order.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Susquehanna takes its rise in the beautiful Otsego Lake, amid the vine-clad hills of Central New York, and winding in graceful curves through fertile valleys and between rugged mountains, it makes its way through the southern part of New York and the great State of Pennsylvania and pours its waters into the Chesapeake Bay. It is a grand old river, old as the continent. Its waters are pure and limpid. Its banks, from its source to its mouth, are dotted with great, busy cities and picturesque villages.

Wealth and prosperity abound along its banks, and the possibilities for the commerce that may float upon its bosom are unbounded. This amendment proposes to transform the entire five hundred miles traversed by this river into a busy mart of commerce. The modest sum proposed to be appropriated by this amendment will, judiciously expended, simply inaugurate the grandest scheme of the nineteenth century. It will give employment to thousands of men, and the housewives and children fed by the judicious expenditure of these paltry thousand millions of dollars will have reason to rise up and call this Congress blessed.

Let us do something for suffering humanity; let us employ the industrious, feed the poor, clothe the naked, and hand our names down to posterity as the most lavish of the generous; let us adopt this amendment and go out of existence surrounded by a halo of magnanimous glory; let us prove to the world that we are not stingy or penurious or behind the spirit of the age in the expenditure and distribution of other people's money. Such seems to be the object, the purpose, the general scheme of this bill. Let us then adopt every proposition that shall tend to perfect the measure.

This magnificent stream is not disfigured by sand or mud bars. The finny tribes which disport themselves in its waters are longing for the beneficent influences of an appropriation. The dairymen who dwell upon its banks pine for the music of the steamboat whistle and the commercial facilities an ever-open and unobstructed navigation will give them. The Otsego Lake is navigable for small steamboats now. A part of this river is navigable for small steamboats a portion of the year now. By the expenditure of this sum of $1,000,000,000 it may be made navigable the whole distance. [Laughter.]

At the present time, Mr. Chairman, the banks are so far apart and the bed of the stream is so near the surface that it can not be navigated the whole distance. But at all seasons of the year there is water enough in it to float small steamboats. By the expenditure of this small sum of money ($1,000,000,000) a canal can be dug in the bed of this stream and then steamboats could start from Otsego Lake, in Central New York, and course their way to the sea. [Laughter and applause.]

With a portion of this money steam-heaters can be erected with which to break the icy fetters that bind the waters for about six months of the year, and thus we shall see the tide of commerce rolling in one unceasing current, one unbroken wave (so to speak), from the icy North to the sunny South. All we want is enterprise, energy, and this appropriation. We are not extravagant in our demands. This appropriation will commence the work, and we will trust to the future for such encouragement as shall be needed to make this work a complete success, and a monument to the enterprise and bounty of this Congress.

I ask the gentleman to accept the amendment and allow us to have this great highway, this great water course through the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New York, so that steamboats from my Congressional district can go unvexed to the sea. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

Amend lines 530 to 534, inclusive, by striking out the following and inserting, so that the paragraph as amended shall read as follows:

"Improving Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $50,000; of which sum $10,000 are to be expended on Tug Fork, and $10,000 are to be expended on Lavisa (i. e. Louisa) Fork of Big Sandy River."

The CHAIRMAN. The House will come to order, as it is impossible to hear what is going on in the confusion on the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am willing to surrender two minutes out of the three minutes allowed me for debate for the purpose of indulging this confusion, for while we have squandered half a million of dollars on Galveston Harbor the country still lives and the Senator from Illinois, Mr. LOGAN, has been elected to succeed himself. [Applause on Republican side.] Now, in regard to the amendment for the Big Sandy River and for the Lavisa River, which the Clerk has just read, I ask the attention of the committee to the fact that we have had in this Congress a bill to prevent extortion by railroads. The only way, in my opinion, in which we can prevent extortion by railroads is to improve the navigable rivers of the nation. The Big Sandy River is one of these navigable rivers, and yet the committee recommends for its improvement the paltry sum of $25,000. The engineers in their report say next year they can expend profitably $50,000 on that river.

Under the influence of the ex-postmaster-general of the Southern confederacy this House passed a bill for the purpose of preventing railroads charging too much for carriage of freight or passengers. That same gentleman proposes to allow members of Congress to ride free. The author of that bill is left at liberty when he chooses to ride on free passes. Discrimination in that direction is not the way to accomplish the purpose. The better way in my judgment would be by legislation appropriating money to improve navigable rivers like the Big Sandy and the Lavisa. Then if we have railroad lines rushing out from Grundy to Norfolk and Wilmington and to Baltimore, in that way we can cheapen transportation. It can not be done by your lap-sided interstate-commerce bill that left out the gist of the whole matter; that is, the enactment of some provision for the purpose of preventing the giving of free passes. It is to be done by liberal appropriations to improve navigable rivers like the Big Sandy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. WARNER, of Ohio) was read, as follows: Strike out the words "for this improved navigation," in line 543, and insert the words "on this river."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 493, page 21, after "Maryland," by inserting "and Pennsylvania." Amend line 493 by striking out "seven" and inserting "twenty-two." Amend line 494 by inserting after the word "dollars," "seven thousand five hundred of;" and after the word "bridge," in line 497, add "and $15,000 shall be expended for improving the West Branch of said river."

Mr. WILLIS. I must make the point of order upon that amendment. We have passed that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order, that portion of the bill having been already passed over?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand that, but at the time we passed that portion of the bill there was so much confusion in the Hall that I did not hear the reading. There was a magnificent speech being made by the gentleman from New York, which attracted the attention of the committee, and the reading of the bill immediately after was not heard in this part of the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon the point of order?

Mr. WILLIS. I must insist upon it in the interest of the progress of this bill. I desire to complete the bill as soon as possible, and feel it my duty to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order, and the amendment is ruled out.

The next amendment (by Mr. YORK) was read, as follows:

After line 561, insert:

"Improving the Yadkin River, North Carolina, from the railroad bridge, near Salisbury, to Wilkesborough, $50,000, twenty-five thousand to be spent on the Wilkesborough end and twenty-five thousand on the Salisbury end."

Mr. YORK. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. The Yadkin River is a river of considerable importance in Western North Carolina. There has been quite a large amount of money spent there in the improvement of that river from first to last. It runs through a very fertile section of North Carolina, which, however, is entirely destitute of railroad facilities. It is much needed by the people of that section for the commerce of that portion of the State, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 19, noes 73.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The next amendment (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 570, add: "Improving Moccasin River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $2,500."

Mr. O'HARA. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to take up the time of this committee in arguing the question of the importance of this appropriation. I will simply refer briefly to the report of the engineers, which is found on page 172. In their report they speak of it as Contentnea Creek. That report shows that during the last year over 6,600 bales of cotton were transported over that stream.

It passes through four of the largest counties of the State. It is proposed to continue the improvement so that we shall have an uninterrupted navigation on that river for seventy-five miles. The estimate made by the engineers for the next fiscal year is $10,000; and I only wish to say to the gentleman in charge of this bill that it is absolutely necessary we should have this small appropriation which I ask in this amendment for the purpose of protecting the work already done and keeping it from injury.

I hope the committee will not object to this amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 70.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I ask consent to offer an amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 570, insert:

"Improving New River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $10,000."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment first read is certainly worthy of adoption. The mouth of this river is one of the most important harbors of refuge for small craft on our dangerous coast. Last session $5,000 were appropriated for its improvement, as a like sum had been by the preceding Congress. If the work is to stop here these sums might as well have been thrown in New River, so far as the good effected is involved. The engineers in their estimate recommend an appropriation of $15,000 to continue the work; but it has pleased the committee to ignore its claims altogether. For what reason I can not conceive. I was told last summer by a gentleman living near there that a short time previously a steamer in a crippled condition attempted to put in that inlet in a storm, but being unable to cross the bar was compelled to put to sea again, and as a consequence was lost, with all on board. In view of these and other reasons I do most earnestly trust that the amendment may be adopted.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 65.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment (by Mr. VAN EATON) was read, as follows:

In line 653, insert:

"Improving Horn Island Pass, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $15,000."

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment for my people and for a large portion of the commerce of the Gulf. The harbor inside Horn Island is one of the most important on the coast. The trouble is the water is deeper in the harbor than in the pass, and the object is to deepen the pass between Horn Island and Petit Bois Island so vessels of deep draught can pass into the harbor and out with full loads, and thus result in a great saving to the immense lumber region of that country.

The engineer's report estimates $43,000 for this work. Five thousand dollars were appropriated last year. If this amendment is adopted the work of deepening the pass can go on; if not, the $5,000 alone will be of little use. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The following amendment (offered by Mr. VAN EATON) was read:

After line 911, insert:

"Improving and protecting harbor at Natchez, Miss., and Vidalia, La., $125,000."

Mr. VAN EATON. I had occasion the other day to say a word in favor of substantially this amendment. And I wish to say, in opposition to some objections that were made on that day, that there is no proposition here to improve private property. The harbor between Natchez and Vidalia, which already accommodates the shipping at those two points, is as good a harbor as there is on the Mississippi River. No private property is sought to be benefited. The trouble is that a cut-off is threatened a mile or two above, and, unless it is guarded against, it will ruin the harbor at Natchez by leaving the current several miles perhaps from the present landing.

More than that, it will entirely sweep away not only the harbor but the entire town of Vidalia. The engineers have made their report. They say that this work is absolutely necessary, and I appeal to this House to say whether one of the most magnificent and useful harbors upon the river should be left liable to be destroyed in this way.

The committee say this is a landing, and that they will not vote a dollar for any landing upon the river. Why, Mr. Chairman, what benefit will it be to the river to improve the navigation if there is no place where commerce can be accommodated at these harbors? I appeal to the committee to insert this amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. VAN EATON, there were—ayes 34, noes 62.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The following amendment (offered by Mr. SINGLETON) was read:

At the end of line 658, insert:

"Continuing improvement from Carthage to Edinburg, $2,000."

Mr. SINGLETON. This is for the improvement of a section of Pearl River which penetrates my State from the Gulf of Mexico, about five hundred miles. An appropriation is made in the bill for the improvement of the navigation from Jackson down, and then for the improvement of the navigation from Jackson up to Carthage. But from that up to Edinburg, where the improvement is most needed, by some fatality, I can not understand what the committee have left out that part of the river altogether. Although a small appropriation was made in the last river and harbor bill for that part of the river, they have failed to make any appropriation for it at this time.

I have here in my hand the report of the assistant engineer who has examined this river. He states that it is important this river should be cleaned out between Carthage and Edinburg.

There are 25,000 bales of cotton carried down that river. Through a large section of country the people have no access to market except by the Pearl River. There are two steamboats on it which now carry freight to the railroads.

I hope no member of the House will oppose this small appropriation. It is a singular thing that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should have overlooked this portion of the river. The work is recommended not only in the report of the assistant engineer but it is indorsed by the Engineer-in-Chief. I may add that in the present condition of the roads a bale of cotton can not be hauled to market.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment offered by Mr. SINGLETON, there were—ayes 40, noes 73.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read the following amendment, offered by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky:

Amend line 743 by adding the following:

"And $10,000 of said $100,000 shall be expended for the improvement of Cumberland River above the mouth of Jellico, in the State of Kentucky."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The Government has entered upon the improvement of the Cumberland River above the mouth of Jellico. It has expended some money in that work and it ought to be continued. There is no belt of coal and timber land in the United States within my knowledge—after reading a number of the geological reports, I state, without any fear of successful contradiction, that there is no equal number of acres of land in the United States where there are finer virgin forests of all the hard woods known in this country, where there is more bituminous coal, where there is more coking coal, where there is more iron ore within easy access, where there is more sandstone and limestone necessary to work the iron ore than there is on the river above Jellico. The Government has already expended a few thousand dollars to improve it. I ask that this small sum be expended in the further improvement of that river.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 755, as follows:

"Improving West Branch of the Susquehanna River, $7,500."

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to make the point of order. We have passed that part of the bill. There was an order of the House this morning, I may say to my friend, requiring these amendments to be presented in the order in which the paragraphs are; and the paragraph relating to the Susquehanna River has been passed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. This is another stream entirely, and I do not know of anything in the order to which the gentleman from Kentucky alludes that prevents the consideration of this amendment at this point. I thought at one time it would be proper—and perhaps it would be entirely proper—to offer it at the point the gentleman has suggested; but I see no reason, since it is an entirely different stream, why the amendment should not go in at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is not in possession of such facts as will enable it to decide whether this amendment be in order or not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On page 21, line 493, is the Susquehanna River. We are now on page 33, at line seven hundred and odd.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. This is not the Susquehanna River.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What does your amendment relate to?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The West Branch of the Susquehanna River.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then it is the Susquehanna River.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. You can as well say the Mississippi is the Mississippi.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that any order has been made that an amendment can not be offered to a section at any time after we have passed the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] of an order which was made in the House early this morning, and which the gentleman perhaps did not hear. The order was to the effect that the amendments to this bill should be submitted to the Committee of the Whole in the order in which they come on the bill; so that when we passed from a matter it should be as if a paragraph were passed from in the House under the regular rule.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But there may be new paragraphs inserted anywhere, may there not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so, but the rule of the House as put upon the committee was that these amendments coming in should be—I believe they are called in the order—bona fide amendments, not going back to other matters. The whole idea of the order was to cut off any retrograde movement.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that when we have reached the very end of this section we are precluded from offering amendments to it if we have commenced the reading of another section? I do not understand that any order of that kind has been entered here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the effect of the order as he understands it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have the order read. We are considering this bill by sections, and if we are considering it by sections—

Mr. WILLIS. We are considering it under a consent order entered this morning.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have the order read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in that natural confusion which grows out of departing in this case from the regular rule; but he desires to have it understood that in endeavoring to carry out the order of the House, as the Chair understands it, matters that have been passed over can not be recurred to. Of course, when the end of the section is reached, any distinct paragraph that is offered in order may be acted upon.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. This is a distinct paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair is not informed as to the geography of these rivers, and does not know whether this and the Susquehanna are the same river or not.

Mr. CURTIN. The West Branch runs into the Susquehanna, but it is not the Susquehanna, and is not so called.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is much obliged to the gentleman for that lesson in geography. If that is true, the point of order against this amendment is not well taken, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] will proceed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have only to say that the West Branch of the Susquehanna River is the greatest lumber stream in the State of Pennsylvania, and—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My point is that this discussion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled, on the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], that this is a different river from any that has been heretofore considered, and that, therefore, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Then the gentleman is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I understand the Chair, if we pass from a river we can not subsequently return to that same river in making amendments to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair understands to be the effect of the rule.

Mr. WILLIS. After a river has been acted upon, it can not be again considered.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair understands to be the instruction of the House in the order which it made.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I was saying that this Western Branch of the Susquehanna is the greatest lumber stream east of the Alleghany. More lumber is floated upon it than I may say upon all the other streams in the State of Pennsylvania, and I can not understand why the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not allow to this stream the appropriation that was asked for its improvement. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague from Pennsylvania, Governor CURTIN.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, the West Branch of the Susquehanna rises in the mountains and runs out into the district which I have the honor to represent. It has been properly stated by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] that it is the largest lumber stream in that State. The navigation of the river is obstructed by rapids and falls, and the object of this amendment is to clear out those obstructions so that the men who cut the lumber in the Alleghany Mountains on the various branches of the river may have a safe passage for their property down the stream to market. That is all—nothing more. This is not the Susquehanna River; it is a different river, which runs into the Susquehanna at Northumberland. The North Branch of that river, as it is called, rises in the State of New York, passes into Pennsylvania, and goes back into New York, thus looping together as with a silver thread the two great States of New York and Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this bill is exhausted. Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, you would have heard something interesting if you had let me go on. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be allowed to proceed one minute longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIN. A minute! That is a short time to some gentlemen on this floor; but it is a long time to me, for I do not often trouble this House. Sir, if we desire to clean rivers, to furnish facilities for navigation and trade, to afford the produce of the farm and the forest the means of reaching markets, this amendment is perfectly proper.

I am in favor of giving to the people of this great nation all the facilities they require for commerce and trade. Commerce in its true interpretation is the exchange of commodities; and while you appropriate money for improvements in the West and on the Mississippi and the Missouri and the Ohio, I would not deny to the people of the West Branch the means of reaching a market with the lumber of that region. I am in favor of voting any amount of money to give the people of this great nation the exchange of commodities which commerce means. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CURTIN, there were—ayes 52, noes 54.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIN (to Mr. WELLER). Vote the other way.

Mr. WELLER. No; I can not vote the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. Are tellers demanded?

Mr. PARKER. I withdraw my vote in the negative.

Mr. WELLER. I change my vote back to the original status.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to this proceeding as irregular.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no knowledge how either gentleman voted. Are tellers demanded?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I call for tellers.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friends from Pennsylvania will not press this amendment. This is a work which is not in the Book of Estimates at all; we have no survey.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 59.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the right to vote in the House on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no necessity for any reservation.

The next amendment (by Mr. WOLFORD) was read, as follows:

In line 737, strike out "four" and insert "six;" so that the clause will read: "Improving South Fork of the Cumberland River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $6,000."

Mr. WOLFORD. It generally happens in these appropriation bills for the improvement of our rivers and harbors that those who ask for large things get them. I am asking for a very small thing. I think this amendment should be adopted without any opposition. The South Fork of the Cumberland River runs through a region having some of the finest timber in the United States—large oaks, lofty poplars. Besides, there is fine cultivable land. The people there raise corn, wheat, and almost everything that would go into the commerce of the world if they had a way to get it out. But that region is almost cut off from the rest of the world because it has no navigation. Four thousand dollars was appropriated for this object last year, and it did the people there a great deal of good.

That country, too, is rich in mineral wealth. There is iron ore there—almost everything that could make the people rich. But, as I have remarked, there is no way to get it out. The Committee of the Whole, by voting this little appropriation, will help a long-suffering people, a people who support all your appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My colleague [Mr. WOLFORD] will allow me to say that the engineers have recommended an appropriation of $10,000 for this purpose.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WOLFORD it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 44, noes 63.

The next amendment (by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

Amend lines 75, 78, 79, by striking out the words "two hundred thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "nine hundred and thirty-one thousand four hundred;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:
"Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $931,400; of which sum $46,000 are to be used to complete the lock and movable dam at Bentlyville, at junction of Three Forks of Kentucky River."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. We have appropriated from the foundation of the Government till 1882 $111,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors; and if this bill be passed the amount will have reached $154,000,000. Out of this entire sum Kentucky has received but $447,000.

The Chief of Engineers reports that $941,438 can be profitably expended for this work during the next year. I want to remind gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Ohio that they are interested in improving the navigation of this river. Every lock and dam you put in the Kentucky River assists in enabling Pittsburgh coal and Ohio salt to come into competition with Kentucky coal and Kentucky salt. It enables also Toledo lumber to come into competition with the abundant lumber of Kentucky.

This improvement has been started. The $931,000 which the engineers tell us can be profitably expended during the coming year is about one-third of all that will be required to complete navigation to the heart of that abundant coal and lumber region in our State.

I speak of the coking coal on the Cumberland River. And there is no part of the United States where there is such a quantity of canal coal or of walnut or hickory and other valuable woods or of mines.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I must call for a division on this amendment. This is a most important river.

Mr. PAINE. Is there any water in the river?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Yes; there is always water there.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COSGROVE. I move to strike out the following, in lines 758 and 759:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $200,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Insert after line 761 the following:

"Improving Licking River, Kentucky, $100,000."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. After the success I have had it seems persistency, or even good looks, as represented by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], have no effect with this obdurate committee; and when the Speaker of the House informs the little gentleman from New York, whose shadowy figure I do not see before me, that the only way to improve Licking River is to macadamize the mouth of it, I suppose I shall be defeated in this attempt to get an appropriation for the Licking River, a river which drains the whole region between the Kentucky River and the Big Sandy River. It is a vast territory, over three hundred miles long. It has a great deal of commerce. South of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, any time at high water, steamboats now run. No improvement has been made in that important navigation. I suppose it will come. When Kentucky goes back to the old Whig doctrine an attempt will be made to improve the Licking River. She did it once herself before Kentucky seceded. [Laughter.] And let it be remembered that Kentucky never did secede until the war was over. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] One of these days the Republican party or the temperance party or some other party besides the seceded Democrats will have control of that grand old Commonwealth of Kentucky. The Whig party built the locks and dams on the Kentucky River, which, through the parsimony of the Democratic party, have been turned over to the National Government. That river some day will be improved, I trust, by the liberality of her people.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. HOLMAN) was read, as follows:

Add at the end of line 766 the following words:

"And a sum thereof not exceeding $40,000 shall be expended in arresting the formation of the bar now forming in said river below the mouth of the great Miami and opposite the city of Lawrenceburg, by confining the Great Miami River at and near the point of its junction with the Ohio River to its present channel."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to submit a word in behalf of that proposition and hope I will have the ear of my friend from Kentucky. It is not proposed to increase the amount of the appropriation, but only to appropriate $40,000 of the amount named in the bill to confine the Miami River to its natural channel. The great floods within the last two years have overflowed the town of Lawrenceburg and reduced its people to poverty. Those floods are changing gradually the course of the Ohio River and forming an extensive bar in front of the town. Navigation in the last two years, growing out of the influences I have mentioned, has been much impaired, and I think no part of the money appropriated can be used to better advantage than in arresting the formation of that bar. I admit the effect is to save this town of 7,000 people from destruction. The amendment proposes to confine the Miami River to its natural channel, and thus prevent the formation of bars affecting navigation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIS. Only wait a few moments.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We are thinning out fast and soon will be without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his motion?

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, I shall not.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. STOCKSLAGER) was read, as follows:

Add in line 770, page 32, the following:

"And authority is hereby given to any individual or corporation to strengthen, repair, or rebuild the bridge across the Louisville and Portland Canal, at Eighteenth street, in said city of Louisville, now owned by the United States, without cost to the Government, and to use the same for railroad and other purposes free of charge from the Government, provided it shall in no way interfere with the free navigation of said canal."

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. This does not propose to appropriate any money. It simply authorizes any person desiring to build a railroad bridge across the canal, for the purpose of transporting more than 4,000 car-loads of cement manufactured there annually, to do so at the expense of the parties so repairing or rebuilding the bridge for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that this is not germane to the bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The Government is not to pay for the rebuilding of the bridge.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is another reason why this is not germane to the bill—it does not make any appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors knows all about it, as it is in his own city. My people are interested in the transportation across the canal. The bridge is now an old and rickety structure.

There is an old bridge there that will not do at all for railroad purposes, and this proposes to allow parties to build a new one.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, that this bridge belongs to the canal and the canal belongs to the Government. This is not making an appropriation to build a bridge, but simply to authorize it to be done and not to interfere with the right of way.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. It is simply to permit private parties to build the bridge, and there can be no objection to it.

The question being taken upon the amendment of Mr. STOCKSLAGER, it was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 50, noes 5.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state to the committee that in a few minutes, after we pass over one other point, I will move that the committee rise.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, offered by Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, as follows:

After line 770 insert:

"Constructing ice-breakers and ice-harbor at the city of Bellaire, Belmont County, Ohio, at the point designated and recommended by the United States engineers, $15,000."

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to occupy the floor but two minutes, and will yield one minute then to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. Chairman, the survey for an ice-harbor at Bellaire, Ohio, was made in 1881. The construction of ice-breakers at that place is strongly recommended in the volume I hold in my hand, which is the report of the Chief of Engineers, made in that year. On page 1951 will be found the reports of Engineers Merrill and Harlow, strongly favoring this work, giving reasons why it should be constructed, and showing how necessary it is to the safety of steamboats and other craft on the Ohio River.

The appropriation was not made at that time, for the reason that the Chief of Engineers recommended that some adjustment should be made in regard to riparian rights lest the owners of the adjacent land should be entitled to charge wharfage. That has been recently arranged, and satisfactorily. The owners of the adjacent land have entered a release and have agreed to make no claim for wharfage in the harbor which would be created by the ice-piers.

This work has been recommended by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and by the people all along the Ohio River for five hundred miles, all of whom are deeply interested in the improvement of the navigation of the river. It is proposed to build ice-cribs between the piers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridge over the Ohio River at Bellaire. This will create an ice-harbor below the bridge and between it and McMahon's Creek 1,100 feet long and 250 feet wide at the moderate expense, as shown by the engineers' report, of $15,000.

There is certainly no more desirable place on the Ohio River for a harbor than at Bellaire. It has railroad, telegraph, telephone, mail, and banking facilities. It is the coaling place of all river craft going up and down the river. It is a growing manufacturing city.

And besides, there are large numbers of people in that section of the country interested in manufacturing. It is the center of a population of at least 100,000 people, who are interested in the prosperity and growth of Bellaire and the adjacent towns of Bridgeport, Wheeling, and Martin's Ferry. Other manufacturing towns on the Ohio River are deeply interested in this improvement. It is important to the people of Pittsburgh who are engaged in the coal traffic.

The immense fleets of coal boats going to and returning from Cincinnati would be greatly benefited by this harbor. They greatly need an ice-harbor and ice-breakers at this point, which is about midway between Pittsburgh and the ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River. No gentleman who understands the importance of this work will object to the small appropriation that I ask. It would save from destruction millions of dollars' worth of property and greatly encourage the large number of owners of boats and river craft at that place and all along the Ohio River. I know of no place where such a small amount of money will accomplish so much good.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to yield any of his time? The Chair understood him to state that he wanted to yield a portion of it to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I want to yield one minute of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already occupied two and one-quarter minutes.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I yield the remainder to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Goff].

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will not object to this amendment. This matter has been considered by the engineers especially requested to examine the subject, and they have reported uniformly in favor of the construction of this ice-harbor. The people in the entire valley of the upper Ohio River are interested in this work and ask its construction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 69.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending the demand for a quorum, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor bill had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn, pending which the gentleman from Kentucky states that he rises to a question of the highest privilege, which he will state.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to enter a motion to reconsider a vote taken to-day, which is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the motion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider Senate bill No. 3511.

Mr. KEIFER. That would not avail anything if it was done now.

Mr. THOMPSON. I enter the motion, at any rate.

Mr. KEIFER. A motion to reconsider would not bring it up for consideration this evening.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. KEIFER. It would not bring it up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is hardly called upon to decide what would be the effect of the motion.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote of the House refusing to consider Senate bill 2511, and also the vote by which it was referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and will state that if this is done I will move an adjournment before 11 o'clock.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will agree to that.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS; and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the announcement of the result of the vote the Chair asks unanimous consent to submit some executive communications.

There was no objection.

EXPENSES FOR DEPUTY MARSHALS, ETC., AT ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a House resolution calling for information as to expenditures for supervisors and deputy marshals at elections; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that this communication be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 18, 1885.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH, Secretary.

The honorable SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and examination of York Harbor, Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. HOPKINS to print in the RECORD some remarks on land grants, alien land-owners, &c.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CUTCHESON, indefinitely, from Monday last, on account of severe illness.

To Mr. DUNN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.
To Mr. CONNOLLY, on account of sickness.
To Mr. GRAVES, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw papers filed with House bill No. 1931 for the relief of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company without leaving copies.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. WILLIS was then announced; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m. (Thursday, February 19, 1885).

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent, in the interest of public business, that the hour for the opening of the session of Thursday be extended from 11 to 12 o'clock, my object being to get out of the way of the Appropriations Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the session of Thursday shall begin at 12 o'clock instead of 11 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the object of that?

Mr. WILLIS. Simply to get out of the way of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FORT BRADY, MICHIGAN.

Mr. ROSECRANS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1374) to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and for the construction of suitable buildings thereon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the House shall in Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union resume the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill the consideration of the item in regard to the Hennepin Canal, on which a point of order is now pending, shall be postponed until the close of the session is reached. I make that request with the consent, I believe, of all who are interested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the item in the river and harbor bill in relation to the Hennepin Canal shall be reached its consideration shall be postponed until the conclusion of the pending section of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be in order to ask an explanation as to the object of this request? It is as a friend of the Hennepin Canal that I ask it.

Mr. WILLIS. The object is to facilitate the passage of matters on which a quorum will not be demanded. There will be a quorum demanded on the item I have indicated.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is a matter for the Committee of the Whole to determine, and not for the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the order if made must be made by the House. The Committee of the Whole has no power to make such an order, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reason I make some question as to the propriety of this proposed order is that when that matter is reached in its course it is subject to the point of order, and it seems to me the point of order should be disposed of when the paragraph is reached.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that if there be objection in Committee of the Whole it requires the order of the House to control in a matter such as that in regard to which the gentleman from Kentucky has made this request. If there be no objection the order will be made, and the paragraph indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky will be considered at the conclusion of the first section of the bill.

There was no objection.

SURETIES OF GEORGE F. ELLIOTT.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on Claims the bill (S. 535) for the relief of the sureties of George F. Elliott. I have a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury which, I think, shows it to be important to have this bill considered.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 535) for the relief of the sureties of George F. Elliott was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

FRENCH AND AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a preamble and joint resolution (H. R. 336) relative to the French and American Claims Commission; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask unanimous consent that when the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall resume consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill the consideration of all the amendments relative to the Fox River, Wisconsin, be postponed until after the section has been completed.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin propose to have these amendments considered at the close of the pending section?

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to have them carried over outside that section.

Mr. GUENTHER. That is not my purpose.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. WILLIS. I think if the committee will indulge me one minute I can make a suggestion by which this matter can be settled. I have examined the report as to this improvement. There was a question in regard to riparian rights which has now been settled. The recommendation is $15,000. If the gentleman will make the amount $7,500, to which I understand he agrees, to be taken, as he proposes, from the appropriation for the Ohio River, I think there will be no objection to his amendment thus modified.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there is any necessity for taking this appropriation out of the Ohio River fund.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio move his amendment in the shape suggested?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will consent that the amount shall be fixed at $7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 770 insert:

"Constructing ice-breakers and ice-harbor at the city of Bellaire, Belmont County, Ohio, at the point designated and recommended by the United States engineers, $7,500."

Mr. WILLIS. To be taken out of the Ohio River appropriation. Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I can not consent to that; I did not understand that to be the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if this modification is not made by consent the tellers will have to be ordered, that being the condition of the business when the committee rose last evening.

Mr. WILLIS. As far as I am able to do so I am willing to consent to this amendment in that shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects that it shall not come out of the appropriation for the Ohio River.

Mr. WILLIS. What difference does it make?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The only difference is that the engineers in their report recommend this amount in addition to the estimates for the Ohio River. However, I shall not object, if the gentleman insists upon it, because it is important that this work should be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think this should be taken from the Ohio River appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as now modified.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 33, noes 4.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to break a quorum, but I do not think this ought to be taken out of the Ohio River appropriation.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection myself, but since the appropriations for the Ohio are most liberal in amount, I think it but right that it should be taken out of that appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it is proper to make that condition. The importance of the improvement of this river justifies the objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to appeal to the gentleman from Indiana not to demand the presence of a quorum this morning, in view of the fact that a very liberal estimate has been made for this river. The largest percentage, in fact, that we have given to any of the rivers has been given to the Ohio; and to increase that appropriation by the additional amount for this ice-harbor would be unjust to other streams.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the Ohio River is entitled to greater consideration on account of the vast importance of its commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate at this time is only proceeding by unanimous consent.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon the presence of a quorum?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I will be compelled to raise the question of a quorum at this time.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana if he will not consent that this matter be passed over for the present until a quorum is present, so that we may proceed with the consideration of the rest of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it ought to be disposed of at once.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if he will permit it.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon a quorum, since he knows of course the effect of it. We are trying in good faith to get this bill out of the way of the Committee on Appropriations, and certainly I hope the gentleman will not endeavor to hamper us in that effort.

Mr. HOLMAN. We should have a quorum here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then appoint tellers.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my friend to withdraw the objection and let us proceed with the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under ordinary circumstances I should not hesitate, but I regard this as an exceptional case. This river is of vast importance.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be in order, Mr. Chairman, to move that the committee rise, with a view to moving a call of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee finds itself without a quorum, the rule requires that it shall rise and report the fact to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the condition of the public business I will let this go, but I regard it as a very unfair discrimination.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if I may now offer an amendment to line 498?

The CHAIRMAN. Not without unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to offer an amendment at the point indicated in the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will wait until we get through with this section of the bill, and then I shall not object as far as I am concerned to his offering his amendment at the point indicated.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I will not ask unanimous consent at the present time, but will withhold the amendment.

The next amendment (submitted by Mr. MAYBURY) was read, as follows:

Amend by adding after line 772:

"To improve and further protect the superstructure of the dikes by sheet-piling on the channel-face and by dredging the channel in the line of the Saint Clair River at the point commonly known and designated as the Saint Clair Flats improvement, $66,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. In regard to that amendment I wish to state, if the gentleman will permit, that it is an item inadvertently passed over by the committee. It was not in the index, and consequently failed to be seen when preparing the bill.

The committee, I will say, had no index for some time in the preparation of this bill. I think it is a proper item to go in; but would suggest to my friend from Michigan to make the amount $50,000 instead of $66,000, which, if he consents to, I think will obviate any opposition on the part of the committee.

Mr. MAYBURY. Whatever may be the percentage of $132,000, recommended by the engineers for this work, which the committee have given for other improvements, I am willing to accept.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The amount I suggest will be more than the percentage allowed ordinarily.

Mr. MAYBURY. I will agree then to that, and fix the sum at $50,000 in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to modify his amendment by fixing $50,000 instead of $66,000?

Mr. MAYBURY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. MAYBURY. I desire to say but a word. I ask that this amendment shall have the same consideration here that it would have received by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had it been before them, in view of the fact, as the gentleman from Arkansas has said, that the matter was overlooked; and I present it now in good faith for adoption.

I have nothing further to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (submitted by Mr. WASHBURN), as follows:

At the end of line 774 add the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause an examination and survey of the Saint Mary's Falls Canal and locks with a view to obtaining an estimate of the cost of enlarging the same, or of the construction of an additional canal or locks to meet the increasing demands of commerce, as shown in Executive Document No. 102, House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, second session."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order on that. The surveys are not in this section at all; they are in the ninth section; therefore this amendment is not germane to this portion of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to the fact that in the very next paragraph there is a provision of this same kind. I do not believe the gentleman will object to having this provision go in here. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the most extraordinary growth and development of the commerce passing through this canal.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that amendment be passed for the present, so as to give us an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. BLANCHARD (to Mr. WASHBURN). The surveys are not in this section at all.

Mr. WASHBURN. I know; but you have a similar provision near the top of the thirty-third page.

Mr. WILLIS. That is for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers—not for any survey.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House that has been passed over until the end of the section shall have been reached. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] insist upon his amendment at this time?

Mr. WASHBURN. I should very much prefer to have it considered now. I desire to call the attention of the House to the most extraordinary growth and development of the commerce that goes through this canal.

I have the report of the resident engineer at Detroit, and I called the attention of the committee to it the other day when I spoke upon this subject. In all the internal improvements that have ever been made in this country there is no parallel to the advantages and benefits derived from the improvement of these falls and the construction of this canal, and the resident engineer says that if the growth continues as it has been doing the past year, within four years the canal will have outgrown its capacity. Yet the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have made no provision whatever for that work, and it can not be completed in time even if an appropriation be made by this Congress. I am surprised that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] would object to a provision of this kind going into the bill. I desire to say further that there is no better illustration of the wisdom and propriety of river and harbor improvements than is afforded in this very case. Here this great inland—

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] that he had better hold this back until the next section is reached, and in the mean time we will examine the matter.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed of the condition of this question. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] insist upon his amendment now?

Mr. WASHBURN. I have stated that I should prefer that the amendment should go into this portion of the bill; but if the chairman of the committee objects of course I shall not insist.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will withhold it until we can have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next amendment (submitted by Mr. PRICE), as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 788, the words—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire if this is not one of the amendments which was passed over until the end of the section should be reached? It includes the Fox River as well as the Wisconsin.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I only asked consent that the amendments relative to the Fox River should be passed over until after the section should have been completed.

Mr. PRICE. It has no connection with this amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is for the Chippewa River.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it was only the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] that was passed over. The amendment which the Clerk was about to read is now in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment (submitted by Mr. PRICE), as follows:

In line 788 amend by striking out the words "thirteen thousand five hundred" and inserting the words "thirty thousand;" so that, if amended as proposed, the paragraph will read:

"Improving Chippewa River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $30,000; including Yellow Banks, and the removal of the bar at or near the city of Eau Claire."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I think a brief history of the condition of the work to which this amendment refers will secure for the proposition the support not only of the Committee of the Whole but the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. There are two regular appropriations for the Chippewa River, one at the mouth of the jetties, the other half way up the river at the Yellow Banks. The amounts recommended by the engineers have been fairly dealt with by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. But late last fall a very extraordinary rise occurred in the Chippewa River, and since that time there has been no survey made there by the board of engineers. By that rise in the river two or three entire blocks, with the mills thereon, were lifted right out of the city of Eau Claire and placed in the Chippewa River. Thus there has been created an impassable barrier to the navigation. The simple question now is whether that barrier is worth removing.

We have a line of steamboats plying daily on that river. True, they are small ones, capable of carrying perhaps two hundred passengers and I do not know how much freight. But the business done by these boats is necessary to the commerce of the river. At present there is no possibility of their passing this bar except at exceedingly high water. The commerce of that river in lumber alone amounts to 100,000,000 feet annually, worth $10,000,000, and it is necessary that this commerce should be enabled to pass that point unobstructed.

There was no possibility of private enterprise removing the obstruction created by the disaster of last fall. The losses to the city of Eau Claire alone amounted, according to the estimate, to over $1,000,000; and these losses were too severe a tax upon the industry of the people to enable them by individual effort to remove this obstruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRICE. Well, I believe I have told about the whole story. I will modify my amendment by striking out "thirty" and inserting "twenty-five." I think we shall be able to get along with this reduced amount.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the amendment). In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I ask for a division. I do not believe any of the gentlemen who have voted "no" heard the explanation I made.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 40.

Mr. PRICE. I call for tellers. No gentleman on the other side would vote against this proposition, if he understood it.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PRICE and Mr. WILLIS were appointed. The committee proceeded to divide again; but before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. PRICE said: I see very clearly that the Committee of the Whole, without understanding the question, is against me. I will not make the point that no quorum has voted, and I withdraw the call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The call for tellers being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois) was read, as follows:

In line 802 strike out "entire;" so that the clause will read: "Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be expended, nor of any sum heretofore appropriated, till the right of way," &c.

Mr. WILLIS. That is a verbal change merely, and there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. POTTER) was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Peoria," in line 812, down to and including the words "public use," in line 842.

Mr. WILLIS. Under the order of the House this amendment in regard to the Hennepin Canal is to be passed over until we reach the close of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the order of the House this amendment will be passed over until the close of the section shall have been reached.

The next amendment (by Mr. SPRINGER) was read, as follows:

After line 812 insert the following:

"Improving the Sangamon River, Illinois, $10,000."

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this very important and hitherto neglected highway of commerce. [Laughter.] When many of you gentlemen were in your cradles the great martyr of liberty Abraham Lincoln was navigating this stream on a flatboat, carrying the produce of that region to the Illinois River and thence to the great Mississippi. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it will be found upon examination that there are in this bill appropriations for two or three hundred streams which can not be compared in magnitude to this river. Its length, according to the report of the engineers, is sixty-six and one-half miles.

Mr. MILLS. Is it a river or a rivulet?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a river. The average width of the stream at low water—now let those who advocate the improvement of creeks listen to this—the average width of this river at low water from Petersburg to the mouth of Salt Creek is 109 feet and thence to the Illinois River 140 feet. At high water it spreads over a vast area of country.

Mr. WELLER. How deep is it at low water?

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that the rule as to time be enforced; we desire to proceed with the public business.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope I shall not be disturbed. According to the report of the engineers there is in this river, except when at the very lowest, sufficient water to run the smaller boats navigable in that region.

Now, if I had time to call attention to the great resources of that region, I could show that one county tributary to this river produces twice as much of the leading cereals as the whole State of Maine. The estimate for this whole improvement is $60,000, but I have asked only $10,000 with which to begin the work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN EATON. I once taught school on the banks of that river, and I know that it sadly needs improving.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on agreeing to the amendment). In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that this Committee of the Whole is determined not to improve the really navigable waters of the country, and I withdraw the amendment.

The next amendment (by Mr. BLAND) was read, as follows:

Add after the word "dollars," in line 846: "Provided, That so much of the amount herein appropriated for the Osage River shall be used for surveying the same from its mouth to Tuscumbia, Mo., and report thereon as to the cost and possibility of improving the same by movable locks and dams;" so it will read:

"Improving Osage River, Missouri: Continuing improvement by snagging, $1,500: Provided, That so much of the amount herein appropriated for the Osage River shall be used for surveying the same from its mouth to Tuscumbia, Mo., and report thereon as to the cost and possibility of improving the same by movable locks and dams."

Mr. BLAND. This amendment does not make any further appropriation, but simply asks that so much of that which has already been made as may be necessary shall be applied to the survey of the river to obtain information as to the cost and possible improvement of the river by movable locks and dams.

Mr. WILLIS. The amendment does not make any additional appropriation, and there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. WELLER) was read, as follows:

At the end of line 901 add as follows: "Also, of which the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to riprap the west bank of the river at and above Guttenberg, Iowa, to prevent substantially the erosion of the bank by high-water current;" so it will read:

"Improving Mississippi River from Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids: Continuing improvement, $200,000; of which sum $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to the removal of the rock at Duck Creek Chain, at the Rock Island Rapids; also of which the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to riprap the west bank of the river at and above Guttenberg, Iowa, to prevent substantially the erosion of the bank by high-water current."

Mr. WILLIS. I am told by the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] representing that stretch of the river has no objection to it. It does not increase the appropriation, but merely directs the engineer to one point.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. COSGROVE. Will the gentleman from Iowa accept an amendment providing this shall be paid in silver dollars?

Mr. WELLER. Most cheerfully and heartily. [Laughter.]

Mr. COSGROVE. Then I offer that amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that I contemplate offering an amendment to cover the whole question at the end of the bill.

Mr. COSGROVE. Very well, then I shall withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. WELLER's amendment was adopted.

The next amendment (by Mr. McCOID) was read, as follows:

Insert after line 901 the following: "Provided, That the sum of $20,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be applied to continue the improvement of the harbor and adjacent channel at Fort Madison, Iowa;" so it will read:

"Improving Mississippi River from Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids: Continuing improvement, $200,000; of which sum $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to the removal of the rock at Duck Creek Chain, at the Rock Island Rapids, provided that the sum of $20,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be applied to continue the improvement of the harbor and adjacent channel at Fort Madison, Iowa."

Mr. McCOID. I believe there is no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will add the words: "Provided in the judgment of the Mississippi River Commission, which has charge, it shall be necessary."

Mr. McCOID. I will accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not prejudice the action of the Mississippi River Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes of debate are allowed in favor of the amendment, but none in opposition. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIS. That amendment was modified so as to insert the words "provided in the judgment of the Mississippi River Commission such improvement be necessary."

Mr. McCOID. The Chairman need not put that in. The work has already been done.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman accept the modification of his amendment?

Mr. McCOID. I have no objection, as they are just finishing the work up.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move at this point to strike out from line 902 to 907, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the words which it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing operations upon the reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, $35,000: Provided, That in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers the expenditure of this appropriation and the ultimate completion of this part of the reservoir system will adequately improve navigation.

Mr. REAGAN. The provision in the bill contemplates for the improvement of the Mississippi River reservoirs covering some 18,000 square miles in order to affect a river which drains 2,000,000 square miles. It contemplates a large expenditure of money. It may result in forming water-power for private parties and enable them more readily to float logs, but it never can affect the navigation of the Mississippi River, and I do not think it should remain in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand a division on the motion to strike out.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 37.

Mr. WASHBURN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. It seems to me hardly fair to strike out a provision of that character.

Mr. MILLS. Have a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. I propose to have a vote here.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I believe—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Can I ask for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Minnesota being heard on the amendment?

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman [Mr. REAGAN] is greatly mistaken about the purpose and effect of this.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 56.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum has voted. [After a pause.] I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I renew it.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask by unanimous consent that this be passed over until the section has been concluded.

Mr. WASHBURN. I object.

The tellers resumed the count, and having completed it, reported—ayes 39, noes 125.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The Clerk reported the next amendment (offered by Mr. RIGGS):

Insert immediately at the end of line 910 the following words:

"Including also the strengthening of the Snicarte levee where it crosses the Snicarte slough and other sloughs referred to in the report of Engineer Maj. A. Mackenzie to the Chief of United States Army Engineers, dated January 26, 1885, which work of strengthening said levee shall be done according to the suggestions and estimates made by said Mackenzie as set forth in his report."

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to be inserted immediately after line 910, and the adoption of which I now move, and desire to submit a few remarks. I am well aware that the policy of Congress heretofore, and the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in this House, have been against the building of levees, except in so far as they may be required strictly for the improvement of river navigation.

The adoption of the amendment now under consideration will not be a departure from the policy of the committee; neither does its adoption involve any present increase of the appropriation proposed by the committee for the reach of the Mississippi from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Illinois; and I hope gentlemen will bear this latter fact in mind when they vote on the amendment. And now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a short statement of the facts regarded as material in the fair consideration of this amendment. The levee named in the amendment was begun, if I am not mistaken, in 1872 and completed in 1875. It is situated on the east bank of the river, commencing at a point about nine miles below Quincy, in Adams County, Illinois, and extending in a southerly direction down the river about fifty-one miles, to Hamburg Bay, in Calhoun County. It was built and has been maintained entirely by private enterprise, and cost several hundred thousand dollars—according to my recollection over a half million.

In its construction the slough or outlet from the Mississippi to the Snicarte and some other sloughs were effectually closed, thus confining within the banks of the river a large volume of water which before then escaped through these side chutes. The result has been, I believe, to cut away and remove certain bars which previously existed in the river between Quincy and Hannibal, and which from time immemorial had been great obstructions to navigation in that part of the river. I am fully aware that there are Government engineers who deny that the closing of these side chutes has been as beneficial to navigation as I claim, but I believe it is not denied that some benefit has resulted. Maj. A. Mackenzie, engineer in charge of that reach of the river, in an official letter to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on the 9th of September, 1884, says:

Some benefit has resulted from the construction of the levee, the value of such benefit being the cost of such work as the Government would have undertaken for closing these side sloughs. So far as such work is concerned there is a claim against the Government which is worthy of consideration, and it would seem proper that the facts and estimates should be laid before Congress for its action.

I would, therefore, suggest a survey sufficient in detail to enable me to determine to what extent side sloughs have been closed, the condition of the levee closing such sloughs, and the probable cost to the United States of works which would be built in the interest of navigation if such levee did not exist.

The Mississippi River Commission, in its last report, laid before this House by the Secretary of War on the 6th of last month, says:

The system of improvement now being carried out between the Des Moines Rapids and the mouth of the Illinois River, which consists in closing side chutes and reducing the stream to a uniform width, will in time accomplish all the results claimed for it, and that this system is generally indorsed, and has greatly benefited commerce, is conclusively shown by the report of the select Senate committee, published in Senate Document No. 36, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.

Major Mackenzie, speaking of this matter in a report made to the Chief of Engineers on the 26th of last month, says:

It is a fact that the levee crosses certain sloughs which the Government might, in the course of time, have determined to close with properly located brush and stone dams built to a height of six feet above low water, not that the amount of water carried off by these sloughs played any very important part in the question of river improvement, but for the reason that if not closed they might possibly deepen or become wider in future.

I admit this engineer says in the same connection that the closing of side chutes by this levee has not resulted in so much good to navigation as others claim. But the closing of side chutes is an established portion of the plan for the improvement of this reach of the river. The levee in question has closed, without any expense to the Government, some important side chutes, and it is but equitable that the Government should now aid in maintaining those portions of the levee which constitute useful "closing dams." Major Mackenzie, under a provision contained in the river and harbor bill passed at the last session, has made a survey of this work and submitted a report, with estimates, in which he admits that by strengthening portions of this levee, as provided by the amendment now pending, "permanent benefit to navigation" will result. I quote his language, including that portion covering his estimates:

The cost of such work as will strengthen the above-mentioned portions of the levee so as to provide a permanent benefit to navigation depends on its nature and amount. The estimate which, in my opinion, most nearly satisfies the requirements of the Congressional inquiry is one for placing 6,278 cubic yards of rock, at $1.50 per yard, and 5,678 cubic yards of brush, at $1.25 per yard, amounting in all to $16,515.85.

These amounts are such as would have been required to close the four sloughs, heretofore referred to, in accordance with the Government methods.

I call attention to the fact that in the concluding sentence he states that the closing of the four sloughs (or chutes) contemplated by the amendment is involved in the Government plan of improving this river. Mr. Chairman, in the light of the facts which I have stated I think the amendment ought to be, and I hope it will be, adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. CLARDY), as follows:

Amend the paragraph commencing on line 914, by striking out "$400,000," in line 916, and inserting "$600,000;" and by adding after the word "stream," in line 921, the following:
"And $30,000 shall be used in continuing improvement at Cape Girardeau, Mo."

Mr. CLARDY. The amount required for the completion of the improvement between the mouths of the Illinois and Ohio is, according to the report of the engineer, Major Ernst, who is in charge of the work, in round numbers $13,000,000. In the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress the sum of $600,000 was appropriated, and in each session of the last Congress the same sum was allotted for this improvement. Last year the Committee on Rivers and Harbors proposed to reduce the amount, and the House did reduce the amount to $520,000. Now it is proposed to reduce it to the sum of $400,000 and to divert $50,000 of that amount to an improvement at Cairo.

While the committee has increased the appropriation for the Mississippi River from Cairo to the passes $1,450,000, it has seen proper to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the river between the mouths of the Illinois and Ohio, a distance of two hundred and twenty-nine and one-half miles, $120,000 less than was appropriated in the last session, and $200,000 less than had uniformly been allotted for the improvement of this reach of the river. I have here a telegram from the engineer in charge of the work, who says that at the end of the fiscal year not a dollar of the money heretofore appropriated will remain unexpended, and that if no more than $400,000 be annually appropriated, it will require many millions more to complete the improvement than the amount of the original estimate; and that the completion of the work will be postponed to future generations. Now, some of our people are willing that future generations may share with them the glory of paying the national debt; but they are in favor of realizing some of the practical advantages of improved navigation in the Mississippi River themselves.

The smaller the annual appropriations the greater the final cost. The estimate of the engineer of the amount required for the completion of the work was based upon the supposition that Congress would make annual appropriations in accordance with the estimates submitted by him. He estimates that $1,000,000 can be judiciously expended in the ensuing fiscal year. My amendment contemplates the appropriation of $600,000, the amount that has been appropriated by former Congresses; the amount that has been appropriated for a number of years, if we except the last year. I trust that the committee will accede to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$40,000."

I want to say to the committee that there was an appropriation of $520,000 made for the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Ohio and the Illinois Rivers in the last appropriation bill. The report of the engineer shows up to the time of the making of his report that less than $80,000 of that money had been expended. There is an appropriation of $400,000 in the bill this year, which makes $900,000 in the hands of the engineer for two hundred and thirteen miles of river. It is enough and more than can be expended during the next year, as any one knows who lives in that section of country.

Now, as to the appropriation for Cape Girardeau, that harbor needs no improvement at all. The building of the wing-dams on the opposite side of the river had the effect of costing the people on the Illinois shore within my district more than $3,000,000 by overflowing their lands and destroying their crops.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to put the question on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], unless that is withdrawn.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Does the Chair state that I can not make an amendment to an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not state the gentleman from Missouri could not make an amendment to the amendment; but the gentleman has made none.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I addressed the Chair, and stated I rose for the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But it has not been offered.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,000;" and I yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. WILLIS. I submit to the Chair that that is not in accordance with the understanding as to the time allowed for explaining amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard this as a pro forma amendment, which was cut off by direction of the House.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the Chair permit me to make this statement: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] offered an amendment to the amendment, but his subsequent action showed he did not do so in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know anything as to that until his subsequent action.

Mr. THOMAS. The statement of the gentleman from Missouri is hardly justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 63, noes 50.

Mr. THOMAS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. THOMAS, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARDY.

The committee again divided.

Before the tellers announced the vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the point of order, reserving the right to take a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

The tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (submitted by Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri), as follows:

Amend line 916 by striking out the words "four hundred thousand" and inserting "one million."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote on that.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (submitted by Mr. BROADHEAD), as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," where it occurs in line 916, down to and including the word "stream," where it occurs in line 921.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not to increase the appropriation but to strike out this appropriation of $50,000 for the benefit of the Cairo Land Company. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] is opposed to the improvement of the Mississippi River unless he can get this $50,000 for the benefit of the Cairo Land Company.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say—

Mr. BROADHEAD (continuing). That improvement has not been recommended by the engineer in charge of the work on the Mississippi. On the contrary, he has reported against it, and in his last annual report his language is this:

The work done here, however valuable to the city of Cairo, has been of no permanent benefit to the navigation interest.

That is what the engineer says about it. The work that was undertaken under the last appropriation has proved a failure, and he has commenced another improvement by the use of mattresses, and that, he says in his present report, is a most difficult work.

Now, I say this appropriation is not intended for the benefit of the navigation of the Mississippi River, and this $50,000 ought to go for the benefit of those improvements which have been useful to navigation; for there is no improvement that has been made in the channels of the Mississippi that has been more beneficial to navigation than the work done between the mouth of the Illinois River and the mouth of the Ohio. On the bars there where this work has been done, where the channel was formerly only four feet deep at low water, it is now from seven and a half to nine feet. Therefore I say that work has been highly beneficial to navigation all through. There has been no recommendation in favor of this Cairo improvement. On the contrary, the report of the engineer the year before last was against the appropriation for that purpose as being of no benefit at all to navigation. Therefore I say it ought to be stricken out and this $50,000 should be used on that portion of the river where the work has proved beneficial to navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BROADHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman offering a formal amendment, as he did before, and then withdrawing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has not offered any amendment yet.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend line 916 by striking out "six hundred thousand" and inserting "five hundred thousand."

Mr. COSGROVE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. COSGROVE. The committee a few minutes ago inserted "six hundred thousand" in the line to which this amendment is offered. Now the gentleman from Illinois proposes to reduce that amount $100,000. I submit, sir, that that can not be done. After the Committee of the Whole have inserted "six hundred thousand" it is not now in order to move to amend by making the amount $500,000.

Mr. CLARDY. That was made six hundred thousand on the amendment which I offered. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that that line of the bill has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter of striking out and inserting being indivisible, and the motion to strike out "four hundred thousand" and insert "six hundred thousand" having been made and agreed to, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by increasing the amount from six hundred thousand to seven hundred thousand.

The CHAIRMAN. After a motion to strike out and insert, the section can no longer be amended.

Mr. THOMAS. I submit that it is not in the nature of a substitute, and this section—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to take up time in that way, but I protest against the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROADHEAD].

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. JEFFORDS) was read, as follows:

After line 921 insert the following:

"Improving the harbor of Greenville, Miss., $150,000."

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, this is similar to the amendment offered by me the other day with reference to Vicksburg Harbor. I will not repeat what I said on that occasion. The appropriation I now ask is in accordance with the estimate embraced in the report of the Mississippi River Commission for the improvement and protection of this harbor. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. JEFFORDS, it was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 922 to 932 inclusive, and inserting the following: "Improving Mississippi River from the head passes to Cairo: Continuing improvement, $150,000; of which sum $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the immediate construction of a light-draft side-wheel steamer, with dredge attached, and of sufficient power to move from place to place, also ten wing-dam barges, each one hundred feet in length, and a small light-draft boat to be used in sounding and placing the barges in position on shoal water, which machinery and portable wing-dam apparatus shall be placed under the control of a thoroughly practical river-man, which sum, together with the sums herein appropriated for the Mississippi River from the head passes to Cairo, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a vote on that amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

After the word "river," in line 926, insert the following:

"Including the preservation and improvement of harbors at Natchez, Vicksburg, Greenville, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus."

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. This amendment proposes no increase of the appropriation. By this bill $2,800,000 is appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River. All that I ask in this amendment is that the same harbors that are the termini of important railroads, and that were included in the last river and harbor bill, shall be included in this bill. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have stricken out all the harbors except New Orleans. I want this House to put them in this bill; it is right and proper that they should be embraced in the bill. They are important points for receiving and discharging freight—important to the commerce of the country.

Natchez, Vicksburg, Greenville, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus are the important harbors between Cairo and the mouth of the Mississippi River. It is useless to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River if you permit the harbors to be destroyed on the river from which the freight is received by the boats and vessels. We ask no increase of appropriation, but merely that these harbors shall be included in this bill as they have been heretofore, for improvement and preservation, the work being subject to the judgment, approval, and control of the Mississippi River Commission or whoever may control the work, and I hope they will improve the harbors at Hickman, Columbus, and the other points.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As I understand, the amendment which the gentleman proposes conforms to the bill of last session, and does not increase the amount to be appropriated. I think there will be no objection on the part of the committee to his proposition.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If there is no objection to the amendment by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors let it be adopted. They left these important harbors out, and I am glad they offer no opposition now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. This amendment is the same as the provision in last year's bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 53, noes 10.

The next amendment (by Mr. HISCOCK) was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 923, 924, 925, and 926, the words, "including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River;" so that the clause will read:

"Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $2,800,000," &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment because I want the question squarely presented to this Committee of the Whole whether it proposes to commit Congress to the building of 6-foot levees from the mouth of the Atchafalaya River to the head of the passes. The reports which have been submitted by the Mississippi River Commission agree, I believe, in this, that according to any of the plans submitted for the rectification of the mouths of these two rivers, it will be absolutely necessary for the confinement of the increased flood of the Mississippi that levees shall be built from the mouth of the Atchafalaya to the head of the passes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is a mistake of my friend.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not a mistake. I am willing to appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], who has investigated this question; I am willing to appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], who has also investigated it; and I believe both those gentlemen will say that these levees are a matter of necessity from the mouth of the Atchafalaya River to the head of the passes, if, according to either plan submitted, the mouths of those two rivers are rectified. There is only this difference between the plans submitted: according to one plan and one estimate it is believed that a three-foot levee will be sufficient; according to another plan which has been submitted it is believed that a six-foot levee is necessary. The only difference between the engineers who have submitted their views on this subject is whether the levees shall be three feet or six feet.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may be pardoned a moment—

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Chair will pardon me one moment—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] asks unanimous consent to be heard longer. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object, unless I can reply.

Mr. WILLIS. I must object.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no discretion in this matter.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be the pleasure of the Chair to hear gentlemen as long as they might desire to speak, but the order of the House is that three minutes' debate shall be allowed in favor of each amendment, and that no further debate shall be had.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, if the Chair will allow me a single question, not in the way of debate, I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to say— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object to the gentleman proceeding unless I can reply.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] take charge of your bill, and you will get along more rapidly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let somebody take charge of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and keep him in order, and we will get on more rapidly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 70.

Mr. HISCOCK. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed tellers Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. WILLIS. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

Add after the word "dollars," in line 927, the following:

"Ten thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in closing Niota River chute, in Hancock County, Illinois, which chute is opposite the city of Fort Madison, in the State of Iowa."

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. NEECE. I will withdraw it so as to let it come in at the end of the section.

The next amendment (by Mr. BAYNE) was read, as follows:

In line 927, strike out "$2,000,000;" so it will read:

"Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $500,000."

Mr. WILLIS. If my friend will yield to me I will move that the committee rise. By unanimous consent the hour of meeting was changed from 11 o'clock until 12 o'clock, and I wish to keep the promise I made that previous to 12 o'clock I would move the committee rise, and then that the House adjourn.

Mr. BAYNE. I would rather take three minutes now with a full House than to have five minutes with only six or seven members present.

Mr. WILLIS. I will ask my friend to bear in mind the facts I have stated.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment be adopted and modification be made of the provision relating to the board of engineers, this bill, in my judgment, will be but a reasonable, fair, and good river and harbor bill. But with the expenditure of $3,000,000 in round numbers on the Lower Mississippi River, two and a half millions of which are thrown away and wasted, this bill is objectionable in the highest degree, and neither the results of that expenditure nor the data now available will justify this vast appropriation of money.

The proposition to rectify the mouths of Atchafalaya and Red Rivers and thus to increase the height of levees will cost millions upon millions of dollars. The present wasteful system of expending money on the lower Mississippi River will result in loss to this Government of millions upon millions, and possibly hundreds of millions upon hundreds of millions of dollars.

With some knowledge of the facts I advise and admonish Congress now that this appropriation in round numbers of $3,000,000 for the lower Mississippi River is all but thrown away by the Government, except small portions of that money may be used in dredging bars and removing snags from the channel of that river; and I for one will not consent to this appropriation of such a vast and extravagant amount in this bill. I will be constrained by my sense of duty to vote against it unless the bill shall be rectified. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to add to my remarks the article published in the Chicago American Engineer of January 23 last. The article will bear a close and critical examination:

[The American Engineer, Chicago, January 23, 1865.]

MISSOURI AND MISSISSIPPI IMPROVEMENT.

In response to a general wish the country has undertaken the improvement of these rivers, and has committed the work into the hands of mixed commissions. Of these the Missouri River Commission is of recent creation, and has made only a preliminary report, but its constitution determines that its plans and methods shall be similar to those of the older Mississippi River Commission. It is allowable, therefore, to join the two rivers in a general discussion of the plans now proposed and the methods now employed.

There are three distinct grounds of complaint against these rivers in their natural condition, namely:

1. The navigation is obstructed by bars.
2. The bottoms are often overflowed.
3. The banks are wasted by erosion.

The commissions have elaborated plans and developed methods of work by which they promise to remove all these grounds of complaint permanently.

The works on the Mississippi have now been in progress three years, and the commission has formally claimed that certain results have been obtained; therefore it can not consistently be objected that it is too early for a criticism of the effort, especially of the general features of the plan. The commission has undertaken—

1. To bring a river varying from one-half mile to two or more miles in width to an approximate uniformity in width of about 3,500 feet.
2. To protect the banks against erosion.
3. To raise the banks high enough to keep floods in the channel and off the bottoms.

4. As a finality, to lower the river in its bed.

The means by which these objects are to be attained are, respectively, in the order stated:

1. Permeable dikes and jetties to contract the water way and recover from the river a part of its present width.
2. Grading the banks and covering the slope with mattresses or other protection against erosion.
3. Levees in greater or less proximity to the banks to restrain floods.
4. Concentrated action of currents to deepen the bed and so increase the capacity for discharge at flood, while affording a freer navigation.

To the accomplishment of these ends by the means proposed there are certain limitations which the commission has not presented, or even acknowledged the existence of, except incidentally, when an excuse for non-success has been wanted.

The agency relied on to accomplish the first and fourth objects is said to be the forces of the river itself, men's skill and resources being employed only to the extent of directing these forces. It is argued that, if the banks are held against erosion and flood waters are confined to the channel, the natural and concentrated force of the stream will deepen the channel where deepening is desired, and under the persuasive influence of certain dikes, transverse and longitudinal matter borne by the current will be deposited in the places where width is excessive to an extent that will rapidly, (i. e., within the life of very perishable structures) bring extended areas up to the level where vegetation will thrive. Such vegetation will be a supplement to and substitute for the dikes employed at lower levels, and the process of filling will go on until the reclamation is complete.

The limitations to levee building are money, men, machinery, and season; to dike building and bank protection there is, in addition, the procurement of material for construction, embracing production and transportation, both of which have already proven to be serious embarrassments, and much more serious will they prove to operations on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the undertaking. Of all these limitations the bare mention is sufficient.

A more extended consideration must be given the limitations to the utilization of the natural resources furnished by the river, the measure of those resources, and the extent to which they can be controlled.

In proposing to bring the river to an approximately uniform width, the commission does not undertake, or even wish for, the widening of such portions as are less than the ideal standard, but limit their efforts to the reduction of width in reaches where it is now excessive. Therefore, the river is asked to contribute vast quantities of material for deposit, to convey it to a desired point and there drop it. At the same time it is demanded of the river that it refrain from erosion of its banks, and lest it may disregard this request they propose to protect the banks and to progress with this work as well as with that of contraction downstream.

The quantity of material borne by the river though great is limited. Of the quantity which passes into a wide reach but a small part will traverse the area where deposit is desired; consequently the resources upon which draught can be made to accomplish a given fill are quite narrowly limited, and even then not all available, for the effluent water will carry away some material.

Considered merely as a matter of arithmetic the time required, if forces were constant, to accomplish reclamations would be as the areas, and the material as the cubic contents. But the actual conditions are manifold more unfavorable success as areas increase than the geometrical ratios of area and contents.

Cubic yards of fill, average depth (much less extremes), and acreage upon which fill has occurred afford no measure of success, though imposing figures may and have been quoted as evidence of marvelous progress. Distribution is the important feature, and unless this is as it should be, rapidity of fill will be an effectual bar to final success.

There is no need to speculate concerning the manner and conditions under which accretions are formed, for the process may at any time be watched. And it must be remembered that the accretions sought are to be permanent and therefore must be solid from the original bank outward. Detached sand bars have come and gone since the beginning, and will continue to do so without bringing improvement, but the contrary. Observations show that wherever the current is gradually deflected from the bank a deposit may be expected under the bank and along the bank.

Going down-stream one will observe that at first the accretion is highest next the bank, farther down it becomes flat, afterward hollow, and finally separated from the bank by a deep pool of still water. This shows that there is a natural limit to the width of solid accretion, and when the reason why the deposit takes this form is apprehended, experience has shown that the presence of dikes, so far from overcoming, exaggerates the tendency to leave a depression alongshore when the width between that shore and the sand-carrying current is considerable, for dikes determine a more positive arrest of velocity and deposit of the heavier particles at greater distance from the bank, and so a more decided exterior ridge.

Reference to the sketches which illustrate recent reports of operations on the Mississippi will show that the formation of detached sand bars is conspicuous, and would be much more so if transverse sections of the deposits were furnished as well as outlines. The works below Saint Louis furnish the fairest illustration, being older and further advanced than any others. Moreover, the series of sketches for several years afford opportunity for comparison. These results furnish an experimental demonstration that solid accretions from the bank out can not be obtained in the way now practiced.

The next question is: Can the results be permanent unless the accretions are solid? Practically it would seem that the Mississippi Commission thought, or at least hoped so, when they laid out the works at Plum Point and Lake Providence, for they strike out boldly from shore to midriver in some cases and so dispose their works as to build up the detached ridge, making no serious attempt to secure deposit in the alongshore channel—Osceola, Plum Point, and Baleshed, Lake Providence, for example.

Two years ago these midriver lines awakened persistent questioning in Congressional committees as to the danger of the river breaking through the line, but without eliciting satisfactory answers. Later experience has enforced the question and answered it also. In several instances the lines have been broken through, and surveys prove that deepening has occurred on the wrong side of the works with disheartening frequency, thus demonstrating the worthlessness of the system as one intended to secure permanent improvement. The main argument upon which the plans were defended before the committee was that there was no apparent reason why works which in the first place secure a deposit should not also be effective to maintain it when obtained. Since this argument is equally good when applied to the causes producing sand bars generally, no one need be at a loss to know that it is fallacious.

Owing to differences in form of cross-section and in the direction of currents at extremes of stage, we find generally that deposits made at high stage are liable to be destroyed at low, and the converse tendency of high stages is to fill low-water channels even more decidedly. There is therefore a known good reason why the works which secure a deposit at one stage are unable to afford it protection at another, for the line of attack is from another and unforeseen direction.

The failure of the system of longitudinal extension with unguarded flank is therefore already manifest. In the works below Saint Louis persistent efforts have been made to obtain solid attachment to the bank and at the same time obtain a deposit of the full width desired. The results prove that a permanent accretion of the breadth necessary to bring the channel to a width which will secure good navigation can not be obtained at one step.

Any one of the wide places where narrowing is required is the result of a process which has run through many years. It is sheer folly to expect that the work of reclamation can be accomplished more rapidly than that of destruction, especially since the natural tendency is in the other direction.

These widenings and the caving-in bends have furnished material for bars, islands, and growth under points, and the commission's own figures show a progressive widening of the river; that is, the sum of eroded areas exceeds that of the fills. This brings into view an absolute practical limit which shuts out the possibility of success from the prosecution of the present system. For not only is unlimited time required, but the material for extended reclamations depends upon corresponding erosions; that is, the reclamation of a thousand acres from the river bed requires that more than a thousand acres be eroded not very far from the locality of reclamation.

The quantity of material brought into the delta section of the river is nearly the equivalent of the material carried out into the Gulf, as shown by the estimates based on sediment observations. This must be the case, else the bed would be gradually filled up or indefinitely enlarged. The perfected channel must discharge this quantity, no more, no less. It is, therefore, certain, first, that this quantity can not furnish an appreciable fraction of the material for reclamations; second, erosions and deposits, by the way, practically balance.

The commission lays down the principle that works for channel correction should progress down-stream; hence, as they attain linear extension, the banks being protected from erosion, the present supply of available material must rapidly diminish and with it the chances of success.

In presenting these unfavorable aspects of the plans and methods now prosecuted it must not be supposed that temporary local amelioration of channel will not be obtained; it has been and will be to some extent. But temporary benefit is not what the commission has promised, is not what is desired by the public who employ and sustain the commission, and is not worth the cost, which, when the field is extended to the whole river, not even the resources of the General Government can sustain. The situation is much as if one undertook to swim across a rapid current; at first, the progress is very promising, but soon the swimmer's strength is spent in holding his own, with exhaustion in near prospect.

Since 1880 several millions have been spent on the Mississippi between the Illinois and the Ohio and other millions below the Ohio; a large sum in the aggregate has also been spent in similar work on the Missouri. Will any one claim that there is even one mile of permanently improved river as a result? What proportion of later expenditures have been for repair and supplementary additions to the work of former years, whereby a status quo is barely maintained? What proportion of the works has disappeared? In the light of actual experience for how great a length can such works, as stand at all, be extended until all available resources of money and material must be expended in repairs?

These questions are pertinent and timely when the commissions are asking for additional millions to continue a worthless system.

Y.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the committee will indulge me in saying the whole of the bill, except Hennepin and the Lower Mississippi portions, can be completed in an hour. Now, in accordance with the agreement when the hour of meeting was changed from 11 to 12, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentlemen will yield to me for a moment while I send up to the Clerk's desk an amendment to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the mouths of said rivers shall not be rectified upon any plan that, in the opinion of the Mississippi River Commission, will render it necessary to build levees upon the Mississippi from the mouth of the said Atchafalaya River down the Mississippi River.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 58 minutes a. m., February 19, 1885) the House adjourned.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the joint committee on the Library to report to the Senate that the committee has received a bust of the late La Fayette S. MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to present to the United States Senate, as a memorial of my late husband, Hon. L. F. S. Foster, of Connecticut, who was one of its former members and presiding officers, his marble portrait-bust.

It was executed by Charles Calverly, of New York, in 1873. It will reach Washington in a few days, where I have sent it for that purpose.

ner, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. It is a bill removing political disabilities.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 4, after the word "upon," to insert the word "William;" so as to read:

That all political disabilities imposed upon William M. Gardner, a citizen of the State of Georgia, by the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, there is a petition. The party's accounts with the United States are settled. There is nothing due the Government. Everything has been settled up.

Mr. CONGER. Let the petition be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, a citizen of Floyd County, Georgia, and an ex-captain in the United States Army, having served in the late civil war in the confederate army, prays to have his political disabilities removed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose in all these cases there has been a personal application. I merely make the inquiry.

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir; the petition is with the bill, signed by the party applying for the removal of disabilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is the inexorable rule of the Judiciary Committee that there shall be a petition in writing of the applicant in proper form, and that his accounts at the Treasury shall be clear.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 125) to provide for the expenses of the inauguration ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1885, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, so as to change the phraseology somewhat. I ask that the substitute may be read, and I should be glad to have the joint resolution considered now, as I think it will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the original joint resolution may be dispensed with, and that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That to defray the expenses incurred under the resolution of the Senate of February 12, 1885, directing a committee of three Senators to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March, 1885, the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of said committee. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to print 2,000 additional copies of Lieut. P. H. Ray's report of the international Polar expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COACHEO RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. PIKE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate the report of the engineer, or a copy of the same, for the current fiscal year relative to the improvement of the Coacheo River at Dover, N. H.

DISTRICT TAXES AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to offer a resolution, but before doing so I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], whether he is informed of any report having been made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 24th of June, 1884. That resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to report to the Senate the aggregate amount collected from taxation for each of the fiscal years from 1875 to 1884 inclusive, in each of the four quarters of the city of Washington, in Georgetown, and in the county of Washington outside of said cities. Also, the aggregate amount expended in each of said six divisions for each of said ten years for street improvements of all kinds, including the replacement of wood, stone, and macadam pavements, new pavements, laying sidewalks, regulating, grading, and filling up streets, repairs to concrete pavements and macadam roadways, parking, for permit work, and for repairs to streets, avenues, alleys, county roads, suburban streets, &c.

Also, a statement of the taxes that have been assessed or special assessments made against each of the railroad companies in the District of Columbia, whether operated by steam or other power, for each year since 1874, and the amount of taxes collected from each of said companies for each of said years, and the amount remaining uncollected, if any, for each of said years.

Resolved further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be required to report to the Senate a statement of the receipts and disbursements on account of the water department, or water fund, for each year from 1878 to 1884, inclusive, stating the amount received from each separate source, and when, where, and for what purpose the money has been expended.

Mr. INGALLS. My recollection is that the commissioners of the District of Columbia responded as far as the books under their control enabled them to do so. The Senator will remember that the form of government was changed about 1874, and that previous to the date when the commissioners took possession the records had not been kept in such form as to make the information accessible. But if the Senator will suspend for a brief space I will make the inquiry and inform him, so that he can offer his resolution later in the afternoon.

Mr. MORGAN. I inquired at the office of the Secretary of the Senate and was informed that no response had been filed there to the resolution, and I suppose that none has been made. I will, however, offer the resolution, and it can go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to immediately inform the Senate of the causes that have prevented them from complying with the resolutions of the Senate adopted on the 24th of June, 1884, relating to the taxes collected from 1875 to 1884, and to receipts and disbursements on account of the water department or water fund for each year from 1878 to 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed, and go over until to-morrow on the objection of the mover of it.

CONSIDERATION OF LAND-GRANT-FORFEITURE BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair in regard to the progress of business under the resolution introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. As I remember that resolution, it relates to cases that are on the Calendar. I have not a copy of it before me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order adopted on the 14th of February directed that—

The Senate will proceed to the consideration, in their order, of House bills and resolutions on the Calendar favorably reported by a Senate committee, and continue such consideration until 1 o'clock each day, until all of such bills and resolutions have been considered.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Chair construe that order as requiring those causes to be considered under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the Senate suspends one part of Rule VIII, quoting it, and substitutes this in its place, the Chair understands, so that bills taken up will be subject to the five-minute limitation of debate under Rule VIII, and will be subject to a motion to proceed notwithstanding an objection. That is the impression of the Chair. Of course the Chair has no pending question before it to decide. The Chair thinks that the interpretation of the rule is as he now understands it.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to give notice that with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who introduced the bill and reported it to the Senate, I shall ask the Senate to consider House bill 3953, forfeiting the land grant of the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, as soon as the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, and I shall press that motion to-day or on any other day when the Senate shall find itself in a position to consider the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that the Chair was notified yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] that he intended to get the floor this morning at the earliest possible moment to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill forfeiting the land grant of the Texas Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill is not in my charge; it was reported by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. Of course I do not presume to take it out of his hands, but I wish to make a statement in connection with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not take up the time of the morning hour, as the bill will undoubtedly come up at 1 o'clock unless—

Mr. MORGAN. The question which I wish to state involves a parliamentary inquiry, which I think ought to be disposed of at this time. It will take but a moment.

The Chair and the Senate are aware that the committee of conference on House bill 7162, forfeiting the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, made a report to this body. At the moment of making the report the Senate was otherwise occupied in very important business, and I did not insist then on the privilege that I had of having the motion as to whether the Senate would further insist upon its amendments considered. The motion was not made. At a subsequent day I called up the question and claimed that it was a question of privilege. The Chair ruled, however, that the motion for consideration not having been made at the time of making the report, the privilege was lost. That of course did not place the case on the Calendar, and therefore it would not be one of the cases coming within the rule which the Senate adopted on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it did place the bill on the Calendar with the report of the Senate conferees on the subject.

Mr. MORGAN. It was not so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the Calendar now.

Mr. MORGAN. In that category?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; it is in the category in its due order on the Calendar, No. 9452.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware that it had gone on the Calendar.

Now, one other question in regard to that matter. In referring to the proceedings of the House of the 17th of January, 1885, I find that the conferees on the part of the House reported that bill to the House, and they asked that the House would further insist—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to refer to any proceedings of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. I am obliged to refer to what has been done there in order to show that the action of the House has not reached us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not refer to any action of the House of Representatives that has not been communicated to this body.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I have the right then, I hope, to refer to the fact that no communication has come from the other House in respect to this bill. That is a fact which the Senate knows. Now, I leave it to the imagination of Senators how that could happen, and I merely ask Senators to refer to a public document, published by authority of Congress, in which they will find that some body of men in the United States have acted upon a bill which they assumed was before that body and which action has not yet come to the Senate. My purpose was to try to get informed myself, by the ruling of the Chair, whether that action of the other House should be waited for or whether we should proceed notwithstanding the action taken by the House.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator does not mean the House, he means that other body.

Mr. MORGAN. I mean that other body, of course; I do not mean the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he thinks it is competent under the principles of parliamentary law for either House of Congress to send a message to the other reminding it of some bill that appears to have been overlooked in the other House that has not been heard from. The Senator understands that allusions to or comments upon the proceedings of the other body are not in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not going to comment upon the proceedings in the House, but I was going to state the result that had been attained there as shown by the RECORD; that was all. But of course if I am not in order in doing that, I shall refrain from doing it. Still I have been very much embarrassed in proceeding with this matter, expecting that a communication would come from the House of Representatives in respect to the bill, when I knew the bill was here, however, and knew that it was subject to the jurisdiction of this body. I have not known whether it was my duty as chairman of the committee of conferees to call up the bill that is before the Senate and act irrespective of anything that may have been done elsewhere, or whether it was my duty to wait until the action of the other branch of Congress had been communicated to the Senate. That is the awkward situation in which we are placed here.

Now I wish to make progress with that bill whenever I can, and my purpose in rising and making this statement was merely to get the assistance of the Chair in a proper form of parliamentary procedure to bring the question to the attention of the Senate, which of course it is my duty to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill is in the possession of the Senate, as the Chair supposes it to be, as the report of the Senate conferees was made, then it is of course obvious that the only body that can act upon the bill is the body which has possession of it.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill is in the possession of the Senate; it has been here ever since the conference report was made.

Now I wish to say that to save the time of the Senate, which is getting to be very precious indeed, and to prevent a multiplicity of debate upon questions like this, I am willing to consider that question in connection with the Texas Pacific Railroad case, and to allow the decision upon that case to stand as an instruction to the conference committee on the part of the Senate. Of course the Senate conferees wish to do nothing that the Senate does not advise them to do and that it is not the will and pleasure of the Senate to do.

Therefore, when the bill for the Texas Pacific Railroad forfeiture comes up, I shall ask the Senate, by unanimous consent, to consider the disagreement of the two Houses on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad case along with the other, or, if it can not be done in that way, that it may lie over until the Texas Pacific Railroad case is disposed of and immediately taken up and instructions given to the Senate conferees.

Mr. MORRILL. The President of the Senate has informed the Senator that he was notified by the Senator from Nebraska that he would bring up the Texas Pacific Railroad question, but he neglected to say also that I had notified him that I should endeavor to bring up the trade-dollar bill at the earliest possible moment. That bill was postponed for a day in consequence of the absence at the moment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] who had the floor to address the Senate upon the question. It was partly considered, and I feel it my duty to push the bill at the earliest possible moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to say that there is no question pending before the Senate. The debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I understood the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to state that at 1 o'clock he would move to take up the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If that met the approval of the chairman of the committee in charge of it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama has stated the fact that the Senate at a previous session adopted his motion against the objection of the chairman of the committee to send the forfeiture question to the courts, and that is the question pending between the two Houses, and the only one that is pending between the two Houses, on the bill mentioned by him. If that were out of the way there would be no difficulty about the passage of that bill, and I hope several others also. I only want to say that I shall support the motion of the Senator from Alabama and hope he will make it at the time named, and not permit the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator to get another measure up at that time.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C.; and

A bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions that order is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. LAPHAM. At the time I was taken from the floor yesterday I was considering the extraordinary proposition of the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], in which he likened this case to the case of a bill forfeiting a land grant to a railroad. When I asked why the owners of these lands who were non-residents of Iowa should be further subjected to prosecution, especially why they should be subjected to prosecutions on behalf of the Government of the United States, the honorable Senator answered me by quoting what I said in reference to the bill forfeiting a grant to one of the Oregon railroads. I accept that as an acknowledgment on the part of the advocates of this bill that it is in truth and in fact a bill to forfeit the titles of bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa under the acts of Congress to which reference has been so often made. That is the theory of the bill. I say this is truly a bill to forfeit the titles of those who purchased the lands from the Des Moines River Navigation Company under the protection of acts of Congress, and it is a significant fact that when I appeal to the advocates of this bill for any authority for including these persons within the provisions of this bill, the only answer that can be made is, why, this is like the forfeiture of a railroad grant. The proposition itself is an argument in favor of the amendment we are now considering that this particular class of Iowa lands, amounting to some one hundred and seventy-odd thousand acres out of over 500,000 acres that were given to the State of Iowa, shall be excepted from the operation of this bill.

Mr. President, I desire to read for the consideration of the Senate in support of this amendment a passage or two from the minority report in the other House in the Forty-seventh Congress. I believe I have a right to refer to that:

How far the United States will aid unfortunate settlers who have been misled by the opinions of local land officers and settled upon private property supposing it to be public land may deserve the serious consideration of Congress.

But never, it is believed, has Congress done what this bill proposes—authorized suits in the name and at the expense of the United States to endeavor to reclaim the land from prior grantees and private owners of the lands in order to confer it on such mistaken settlers.

The minority are opposed to it, especially as it places the purse and power of the Government upon one side in a private controversy, regardless of title.

The minority are not in favor of this bill, because its enactment would have the appearance of providing by law for further litigation by and in support of the titles of parties who have already had the judgment of the Supreme Court upon their cases. It would actually direct new trials in cases now determined, for the names of Hannah Riley and George Criley are found on House Executive Document No. 25, Forty-third Congress, first session, page 13, as parties to have the benefit of the proposed legislation.

I have already said that this bill in effect is to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States against those two claimants, and permit them to institute, with the aid of the Government, a new suit for the purpose of prosecuting the successful parties in each of those suits.

We do not believe that Congress has the right to compel the holders of its title to go to the expense of further litigation, when they protest against such interference with their rights of private property, and protest against being sent again into the courts, with the purse and power of the United States against them.

The protestants claim that the enactment of any such bill will prolong, and designed by the promoters of it to prolong, this controversy, and protect the settlers in continuing their illegal possession of the lands from which they are annually gathering the crops without paying either taxes or rent.

The suits provided for in section 2 will not be brought against citizens of Iowa, as the Iowa settlers on the lands are to have confirmation; but they are to be brought solely against the non-resident owners of the lands residing in other States.

It is respectfully submitted that Congress ought not to favor the people of one State to the detriment of citizens in other States.

Again, this measure for instituting the suits proposed by this bill has not been introduced on the recommendation of any head of any Executive Department, nor has the Attorney-General been asked his opinion in the premises.

Prior legislation and executive action conferring title to lands have been fully, repeatedly, and unanimously interrupted by the United States Supreme Court adversely to the settlers whom this bill seeks to relieve by enacting an opposite construction of the laws involved, and instructing the United States Attorney-General to unite with the settlers in attempts to enforce this new construction by instituting new suits in the name and at the expense of the United States, but for the sole benefit of litigants defeated and disappointed by the existing judicial decisions. This is, in the opinion of the minority, entirely wrong, and affords sufficient reason why the bill (H. R. 6597) ought not to pass.

Mr. President, there is wisdom and good sense in the position thus taken in this minority report of the House Committee. These owners have for a series of years been subjected to expensive litigation to determine the question of their titles. They have traveled over the whole road of judicial inquiry. They have finally succeeded in establishing their claims as valid by a multiplicity of decisions embracing every possible phase of this question. In suits with settlers on the lands, in suits with railroad companies that became subsequent grantees, in every possible form this question has been litigated in the dozen suits which have come to the Supreme Court and in various suits in the State of Iowa, and everywhere they have been triumphant. Now why should we open again the flood-gates of litigation as to them? Why should we again subject these gentlemen to a retrial of their questions of title? They have been kept out of the use of that portion of the land occupied by these settlers for twenty-odd years without the payment of a farthing of rent or the payment of any of the taxes.

Their road has been a thorny one. They have not realized the dream of the poet that—

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.

This has been an expensive business to these owners, but yet they have prevailed and they have the solemn judgments of the tribunals of the country in their favor. All they ask is to be let alone. True, they are open yet to private prosecutions by these settlers; but that they are willing to meet. True, they are open to have the question tried in every case where it has not been already tried; they are willing to meet the case in that aspect of it; but to reverse all that has been done, to declare these lands public lands, as this bill proposes, to reopen the flood-gates of litigation and to take the Treasury of the United States into the scale against them, is a wrong so monstrous that it seems to me the idea of inflicting it ought not to be tolerated for a moment.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment now pending, which is but a modification of that clause of the bill which was stricken out on my motion, will be adopted by the Senate. As it was contained in the bill it declared the title to these lands perfect except where there were settlers on them. I was not willing to accept any such provision as that. As I have it, it excepts these titles from the operation of the bill absolutely. That was the view, I repeat, of an amendment proposed by Senator McDonald, of Indiana, when he had a seat in this body, as one essential, as one demanded by justice, as one which ought to prevail.

I have no desire to multiply words upon this particular amendment. I have said all that I need to say in support of it, and I trust the Senate will see its propriety and vote for its adoption.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not.

Mr. LAPHAM. That very, very brief speech from the honorable Senator from Iowa has a world of meaning in it. He hopes not.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw it, then.

Mr. LAPHAM. There have been extraordinary efforts made on this floor with reference to this legislation. A word is significant. I hope the amendment will prevail. I stand here as the advocate of men whose legal title has been established by Congress and by the courts in every form; and I hope it will prevail. We may as well take the yeas and nays upon this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. 3. Before the commencement of any action or actions by the Attorney-General, in pursuance of this act, the person or persons in whose interest and for whose benefit the same is to be prosecuted shall deposit with the clerk of the court a bond or bonds (to be approved by the court or a judge thereof as to the form and penalty of the same) conditioned to pay to the person or persons to be prosecuted all costs and expenses of the defense or defenses of such action or actions in case the plaintiff shall fail to recover therein.

Mr. President, no one can fail to see that the object of this bill is to aid private settlers in the recovery of lands. No one can fail to see that as far as those private settlers have had their rights tried by the courts they have been defeated. No one can fail to see that as to these lands they are not a part of the public domain, but they are the private property of those who purchased and paid for them under the grant to the Des Moines River Navigation Company. What does this bill then propose to do? It proposes first to declare that these lands are public lands. It is, as the Senator from Iowa well said yesterday, a proposition to forfeit the title of bona fide purchasers and to restore the lands, which they have purchased, to the public domain.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from New York to state, if he will allow me to interrupt him, which Senator from Iowa made such a statement yesterday.

Mr. LAPHAM. The honorable Senator who is now addressing me used as the only argument against my amendment the view I took of the proposition to forfeit the Oregon railroad grant.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will allow me to reply I will say that I stated yesterday that if he would apply the precedent of his speech on the Oregon railroad grant to this bill it would answer my purpose entirely, because in that he advocated—

Mr. LAPHAM. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. WILSON. He advocated the propriety of allowing each person interested, no matter how humble he might be, an opportunity to be heard in court. These settlers have not had it. That is all we ask and all the bill does.

Mr. LAPHAM. I said in that case inasmuch as the Government was going to resume the title which had been forfeited for the non-performance of a condition subsequent, it was the right of every lienholder upon that land to have a day in court. I stand by that position still. This is not such a case as that unless, as I now claim, the effect of this bill is to forfeit an actual grant by the Government to those whose titles have been determined valid. That is the effect of this bill.

When you declare in this bill that these lands are public lands and authorize the Attorney-General in connection with the settlers to bring suits against the owners of the fee, you declare to all intents and purposes a forfeiture of their title, and in addition to that you subject them to a prosecution by the Government of the United States upon whose faith they advanced and paid their money for these lands. I submit before that shall be allowed there shall be a provision in this bill that every settler upon these lands in whose behalf the Attorney-General prosecutes, if he decides to prosecute at all, shall file security to pay the owners of these lands in case they succeed the costs and expense of the litigation.

Take the case of Hannah Ann Riley, take the case of George Crilley, each of whom has tried the question between them and the owners of these lands and been defeated. Now under this bill they with the Attorney-General may again commence action, and I need not say to the members of the Senate that there can be no costs recovered against the Government. This bill makes no provision that the United States shall be liable for costs, and we are driven to the expense of a litigation of precisely the same question we have already successfully litigated. We are driven to the expense of litigating this question at our own expense. Although successful, although we re-establish our title, although we show that these lands are our own and that there is no valid claim against them, as has been so repeatedly decided, although we establish all this, yet we are to be prosecuted by the Government without any redress for the expenses of the litigation on our part.

Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to provide as it reads that before the Attorney-General institutes an action in conjunction with a settler (and as I have said he must institute just as many actions as there are settlers), that settler for whose benefit the Government is authorized by this bill to prosecute shall give a bond in such form and with such penalties as the court or a judge of the court shall prescribe, conditioned that in the event of a failure to recover, in the event of the re-establishment of the title of these purchasers, in the event of a successful resistance to the prosecution, all the costs and expenses of the defense shall be paid to these owners. Who can object to so fair a provision as this? Why are the advocates of this bill unwilling that there shall be at least this much protection to these purchasers?

Mr. President, I have shown over and over again that those settlers are not bona fide settlers. The Judiciary Committee of this body four years ago so found and reported. What is there in their case that should prompt this extraordinary legislation in their behalf? I can not understand why it is that these gentlemen, who are non-residents of the State of Iowa, should again by the authority of this Government be subjected to a renewal of this litigation at the peril of being compelled to defend the actions at their own expense although they succeed, and therefore I urge, and urge with great earnestness, and with great confidence I may say, upon the consideration of the Senate that this amendment, this poor protection to these already vexed land-owners, at least shall be furnished them by the vote of this body if this bill is to become a law.

I have said all that I think it necessary to say in support of this amendment. I commend it to the consideration of the Senate, and ask that at least they will preserve to these settlers the poor right of being reimbursed in case they succeed in the litigation, for the costs and expenses to which they will be subjected by this extraordinary bill, and upon this I ask that the yeas and nays be taken.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I regret to feel called upon to say another word to the Senate concerning this bill. It has already occupied more time than it should have taken, but I do not desire to have a vote taken on this amendment without a fair understanding by the Senate of the issue this bill presents. Now let me read from the first section of the bill its purpose:

That all the lands "improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861," for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1861, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

What lands? Lands improperly certified to the State of Iowa, not lands to which the parties that the Senator from New York appears for here hold good and valid title, for they can hold no such title if these lands have been improperly certified; nor can the courts hold these lands to be public lands if they have been properly certified, for that means that they shall have been certified in pursuance of law.

What next does it provide? In section 2 it is said:

That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within ninety days after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands, and remove all clouds from its title thereto.

That is it. If the lands belong to the Government because they have not been properly certified, the Attorney-General is to ascertain that question by judicial proceedings and this provision of the second section, and that is all there is of it; and if in the progress of the proceeding it shall appear that the parties for whom the Senator from New York pleads to-day hold titles in pursuance of lawful certification, that will make their title doubly sure. But he says that these settlers, who for more than a quarter of a century have been making homes and rearing families on these lands alleged to have been improperly certified, shall have no opportunity for a judicial determination unless they come in and by a bond with sufficient sureties agree to make harmless the New York holders of a certain title to these lands first. Mr. President, if a remedy is to be provided at all under this bill, it goes in the name of the United States for the purpose of asserting the United States title and after that affording these settlers of more than a quarter of a century an opportunity under the laws of the United States to prove up their settlement and interest in the land; and now I am willing to submit this amendment to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. Well, Mr. President, the honorable Senator has been much more unsuccessful in answering this than he was in answering the amendment that I proposed yesterday. He assumes now—and he can stand upon no other proposition—that these lands which the Supreme Court decided were improperly certified to the State of Iowa so far as they lie north of Racoon Fork, in the State of Iowa, are still public lands, and his argument has no force unless it rests upon that proposition. Now what is the truth of this case? Iowa has always claimed until this hour that they were not public lands; Iowa has always claimed that they were properly certified to the State, and that Iowa was authorized to grant them to the Des Moines River Navigation Company under the certificates of the officers of the Land Office. They were certified to the State of Iowa as part of this grant; they were conveyed to the Des Moines River Navigation Company, and the Des Moines River Navigation Company conveyed them to those I represent.

Then what have we? We have the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, a joint resolution of Congress, declaring that the titles to all the lands certified to the State of Iowa north of the Racoon Fork are, notwithstanding that improper certification, made valid as far as they have become the property of bona fide purchasers from the State and its grantees. "Improperly" is not in this question now, sir. There was a time when it was in it. If the joint resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, had not been passed, the position of the honorable Senator would have some force in it; but in the face of that fact that Congress, notwithstanding they were improperly certified, ratified and confirmed them to these purchasers, what is there upon which this bill can stand—I mean so far as that portion of the lands held by these purchasers is concerned? I showed yesterday that there are over 300,000 acres of land within the compass of this bill which are not affected by the question that I raise. I only ask to have taken from the operation of this bill that portion of the lands which were thus conveyed and the titles to which were confirmed by the joint resolution of 1861.

The honorable Senator from Iowa is too good a lawyer and too shrewd a man to be driven to such a position as he has now advanced, that these lands are still in the condition of lands improperly certified to the State of Iowa, as a basis for this legislation. If he had any other position upon which he could possibly plant himself, he is the last man who would resort to such a subterfuge as that, for it deserves no other name than a subterfuge.

These lands were, as the Supreme Court decided, a portion of them improperly certified; but they had been sold by the State; these gentlemen had purchased them and paid for them, and the State of Iowa asked—not these purchasers—but the State of Iowa asked Congress to pass the joint resolution of 1861 confirming their title; and in every case which has been decided by the Supreme Court and by the courts of Iowa the decisions have been put upon the express ground that that joint resolution cured all defects in the titles of these purchasers; that, although the lands were improperly certified, although at the time they were certified they were not within the compass of the grant to the Territory of Iowa, yet the Territory or State having sold them, and they having gone into the hands of bona fide purchasers, it was the duty of Congress to confirm their title; and it was the State of Iowa as she was represented then that asked this confirmatory declaration on the part of Congress.

Now, after all this, and after all this litigation determining these questions of title, the proposition of this bill is that the whole question in regard to this title shall be reopened in favor of those who have been occupying the lands without right, so the Supreme Court has said, of trespassers, of wrongdoers, of men who combined in the way I have described, of men who plunder and threaten to kill and burn, of men who do not pay taxes, of men who do not exercise any of the rights of ownership over this property except to occupy it and take possession without giving any compensation. It is this class of men to whom the bill opens the door of litigation at the expense of the Government, and I insist that this extraordinary privilege should not be granted except upon the condition named in this amendment that every one who prosecutes shall file a bond, to be approved by the court, to pay the defendant, in case of failure, his costs and expenses.

If the honorable Senator from Iowa is right that these are public lands, if he is right in the position that they are improperly certified, and occupies that position now, why does he provide for joining the settlers in an action? Does the Government of the United States need the aid of a squatter to establish its title? The theory of this bill is that the Government has no right except what this bill confers; the theory of this bill is that the squatter is the real party and not the Government, and all I ask by this amendment is that before he prosecutes, as we can not recover costs against the Government which is authorized to bring the suit, a bond shall be filed to pay us the costs and expenses of the litigation in case we succeed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the pending question, but only to give notice that to-morrow morning I shall ask a vote of the Senate on postponing the further consideration of this measure and returning to the Calendar of business. There are many public measures upon the Calendar that ought to be considered. We have now only eleven days remaining of this session, and it is useless to waste time on this bill, for I consider it no better, for we certainly can not reach a decision at this session upon this bill with the many divergent views upon the question found in the Senate. It is a Senate bill, and no consideration can be given to it elsewhere, even if it passes the Senate. For six consecutive days the whole morning has been exhausted and wasted, so to speak, in the discussion of a measure which by no possibility can become a law at this session. Therefore I shall move to-morrow morning—I give notice of it now—to postpone the further consideration of this business and return to what seems to me to be the obvious duty of the Senate in considering other bills of an important public character.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will yield to the Senator to make that motion now if he desires.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well; I move now that the further consideration of this measure be postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey moves the indefinite postponement of the further consideration of the bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 19.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say one word upon this question. The Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York are acting in accord. Here is a bill as much of a public nature and public character as any bill pending in the Senate, and it has been considered. I will not say, because it would be unparliamentary for me to say, this this bill is debated day after day and day after day by reiteration of old arguments. All that we ask of the Senate is that this bill shall be voted upon in the interest of more than a thousand people who believe they have rights here and ask the privilege of going to the courts of the United States and establishing those rights. That is a poor privilege, I know, but it is a privilege that we ask this Senate to grant these men. Whether or not they be entitled to the rights they claim is a question which the courts will decide. I hope the motion now made will not be adopted.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know what right the Senator from Iowa has to say that the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey are acting in accord. So far as the statement relates to me, I think that up to this moment I have made no motion and have said not a single word in respect to this bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. I beg to say that I have never exchanged a word with the Senator from New Jersey on the subject.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know really how I shall vote upon the bill, and I think that I have voted upon few if any of the amendments that have been offered to it. I have given but little attention to it. I do not know but that I shall vote for the bill. But at the same time I do submit that this discussion, going on here from day to day for six or seven days, consuming the entire morning hour to the exclusion of the proper consideration of other business at this stage of the session, is not right. If the Senator from Iowa can bring the question to a vote, I have no objection to voting upon the bill now, but those Senators can see and really must see that with the number of appropriation bills now pending, with a large Calendar of business unacted upon, a great many pension cases that ought to be passed and sent to the House of Representatives in order that that body may take action upon them before the close of the session, such measures are driven out of the consideration of the Senate practically by the discussion of a bill which under no condition of circumstances does it seem possible for us to reach a vote upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote now.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know nothing about the merits of the bill except what I have heard here on the floor. It is not for any such reason that I am opposing it, but because no vote has yet been reached, and probably none will be for six days to come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the bill be indefinitely postponed, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONES]. The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 34; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa who sits in front of me about this bill. The bill provides that the United States and a citizen or citizens of Iowa may sue other citizens of Iowa or corporations of Iowa, in a suit that is provided for in this bill. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he thinks the Constitution of the United States confers or permits Congress to confer upon any Federal court the right to unite a citizen of Iowa with the United States Government in a suit against a citizen of Iowa in respect to this land. I confess that I have looked as thoroughly as I could, and with some anxiety, to discover that there was some such authority as that, but I have not been able to find it, and I do not believe that the Constitution authorizes any such suit as that to be brought. The language of the Constitution on that subject is that the judicial power of the United States shall extend, among other things, "to controversies to which the United States shall be a party." That is a privilege given to the Government of the United States to sue, or in the event that Congress may give to any citizen the right to sue the United States it is a privilege given to the Government to be sued in its own courts. You can not bring an action in any State court against the Government of the United States, nor can you bring an action in a Federal court against the Government of the United States until some act of Congress expressly authorizes it to be done; but the Government of the United States can sue in its own courts under this provision of the Constitution and also under the provisions of the judiciary act in regard to any matter of controversy that the court would take jurisdiction of where the sum in controversy was sufficient, or perhaps in any case; but I protest that I have not been able to find any case where a lawyer has been rash enough to unite the United States and a private citizen in a suit against a citizen of the same State, or indeed in any suit. I do not understand how it is that the Government of the United States and any private citizen have a joint interest in a tract of land the title of which was in the Government and the title of which has been conceded by the Government, we will say, to a private person, or has not been conceded. I do not understand it. This bill in that respect has always been a puzzle to me. I have not been able to derive the authority through the Constitution, the laws of the United States, or the practice in the Supreme Court or elsewhere, for the joining of these parties, the Government and a private citizen, in an action.

The bill, I wish to say further, is not only entirely new, but in my judgment it involves a line of legislation that has never before been attempted. We declare the existence of title in the Government of the United States by this bill. That title is declared to exist in the Government in those cases where certificates had improvidently and improperly issued to the State of Iowa. After having made that declaration, as I remarked the other morning in discussing this bill, we then authorize the Government of the United States and a citizen to go into the Federal courts for the purpose of determining the value of that title. The Senator from Iowa says it is upon the ground that we declare that those titles are bad, that the certificates have been improperly issued. Well, we open up a question of controversy that really has been settled in ten adjudicated cases in the Supreme Court of the United States. But granting now that it is just and equitable and that we have the power to go back and open up these various controversies and set aside these judgments and decrees—

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. LAPHAM. This bill does not direct that suit shall be brought even in the courts of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. I know.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Government under this bill may go into the State courts of Iowa.

Mr. MORGAN. I take it for granted that that is the meaning of the bill, although I admit the bill is imperfect in that particular, and I think attention is called to that in the report of the minority against the bill.

But now after having declared the title to be in the United States contrary to these ten decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the very cases in which the Supreme Court have decided the question, for this bill covers the whole of them, having reversed these decisions by a decree of Congress and put the parties to litigating those rights again, the question arises can the Congress of the United States authorize a citizen of Iowa to join with the United States Government in a suit in Iowa against a citizen of Iowa for the recovery of this land. I maintain that we have no such power. The Constitution gives us no such right, for while the Government of the United States can sue in the circuit or district court of the United States in that State a citizen of Iowa, a private citizen, can not. We can not confer by any law we may enact constitutionally the right upon a private citizen of Iowa to sue another private citizen of Iowa in the district or circuit court of the United States in that State.

Mr. LAPHAM. Now I desire to ask the honorable Senator another question, and that is, can Congress authorize the Attorney-General of the United States to prosecute in the State courts?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I suppose Congress could authorize the Attorney-General of the United States to prosecute in the State courts. The Government of the United States can bring a suit in a State court, and therefore Congress can authorize that to be done. But we are now talking about Federal courts, for that is the object of this bill; that is the meaning of this bill, to allow suits in the Federal courts, as I understand; for surely the Congress of the United States would not reverse the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in these ten cases and then declare that the local courts in Iowa should have jurisdiction to settle and determine the question. That would be reversing the whole order of proceedings so far as the history of Congress on this subject is concerned. But I wish to submit this question to the Senate, to the lawyers of this body, and I should be very glad to hear a more general expression of opinion upon it. I should be glad if some Senator would cite me to a case in which any lawyer had ever been rash enough to attempt to unite a private party with the Government of the United States in bringing a suit for a tract of land. I have not heard of it. It may be that I have overlooked it, but I can conceive of no reason why it should be done.

Mr. President, I disclaim all feeling or interest in this matter.

Mr. LAPHAM. I can tell why it is done. It is done in this case because the Government is weak and needs the aid of a settler to maintain its right of action.

Mr. MORGAN. I repeat that I have not the slightest feeling or concern about this matter at all, except that I have a sympathy for those people in Iowa who have been entrapped into this state of difficulty not by the decision of the courts, but by the legislation of Congress and the decisions of the Interior Department. Many of them have been entrapped into difficulties, into the expenditure of money in valuable improvements on tracts of lands there, but I have regarded this effort to relieve them through this bill as utterly hopeless. The Committee on the Judiciary took this subject into consideration more than four years ago. They bestowed upon it a great amount of labor. They brought their report in here, following another report which had preceded it, and unanimously declared that Congress had no jurisdiction of this subject.

Now, sir, it is more than the Senate dare to do, in my opinion, to deliberately overrule that decision of the Judiciary Committee without assigning upon the record sound, substantial reasons for their judgment; for after all this is the highest legislative tribunal in the United States excepting the House of Representatives, and the decisions of this body will be appealed to for years, and I hope for centuries to come, for their wisdom, for their sedateness, for their soundness upon all questions of this kind; and I really deplore that spirit of aggressive legislation in this body, which, whether moved by sympathy for suffering people or moved by any other cause whatever, leads us to undo the solemn deliberations of the judiciary of this country, and reverse the decrees of the Supreme Court in respect to private questions of title at our own will and pleasure.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will please suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the next special order, being Order of Business 500, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 18) proposing an amendment to article 1, section 7, clause 2, of the Constitution of the United States, in relation to the veto power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3933, Calendar number 336.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 336, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection to the Senator from Kansas debating this proposition? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill which is under consideration in the morning hour, and which was reported by me from the Committee on Public Lands, has now occupied a number of days during the morning hour in its consideration, and I do not think I offend anybody when I say that there seems to be a determination that it shall run out the remainder of the session and not be brought to a vote. That, of course, is parliamentary. I do not care to say anything in the nature of reflection on anybody, but it manifestly is the opinion of the Senate that some time should be fixed when the vote can be had upon the bill, because the Senate has repeatedly ruled by decided votes not to lay it on the table and not to postpone its consideration, so that it has the right of way in the morning hour.

I designed to make a motion to continue the consideration of the bill now, but not being nimble enough to get up in time and not having vocal organs of sufficient capacity to reach the presiding officer in time, I did not get the floor to make that motion; and I do not design now to antagonize the motion which the Senator from Nebraska has made, because I had given notice that if the Senator from Alabama did not make the motion I would make it myself at this time, supposing perhaps we should go on as we have heretofore, leaving the Des Moines bill to be considered in the morning hour. But I think it is of the highest importance to the business of the Senate that the morning hour should not continue to be absorbed by this bill, and when I say that I do not mean to reflect upon the bill, because I think the bill ought to be passed. I think it is due to the Senate and due to the interests involved that the Senate shall fix some time when a vote shall be taken, or if that can not be done, that the Senate shall agree that it will sit out this bill on some day to be named. I had hoped it might be to-day, because to-day the bill is under consideration and it might go continuously on, but still I do not care about that. If the Senate is willing to fix some other day, I have no objection.

Now, so far as the measure proposed to be taken up is concerned I have nothing to say. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] seems to have taken charge of it, and of course the bill ought to be passed. It has been waiting simply upon the convenience of the Senate in regard to the principle involved in another bill which is pending before the Senate on a report of a committee of conference and the decision of which really settles the question not only as to this bill, but as to another and perhaps still another bill which is back of it on the Calendar. I do not care to antagonize that, but I do hope the Senate will make some order in regard to the bill that was before the Senate until the morning hour expired, which will relieve the Senate from the burden of its continuation during the remaining days of this session in the morning hour to the exclusion of all other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to say a word in response to what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to be heard in reply to the Senator from Kansas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAPHAM. All I desire to say is this: When this bill was called up objection was made to its consideration. I claimed that it was a bill which should be taken up in the regular consideration of the Calendar, and one that could not properly be debated in the morning hour. I have been compelled to argue the bill piecemeal from morning to morning, whereas I should have had a right, and the Senate should have had a right, to consider this bill in a continuous session whenever it was taken up. The advocates of the bill objected to that, and insisted upon taking it up in the morning hour. They procured a vote of the Senate to that effect, probably under an apprehension on the part of the Senate that it was a short bill and would not occupy much time. Now that we have spent the morning hour for so many mornings on it, the proposition is to do just what I asked to have done in the outset, and I shall certainly resist that now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The bill which I have moved for consideration is a bill to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes. That bill has been twice displaced already from the Calendar of Special Orders, first by taking up the silver bill when, as many Senators stated, there was a misapprehension as to the effect of the rule. They did not suppose that voting to take up the silver bill would necessarily throw this bill back on the Calendar, which it did. Then this bill was restored again to the head of the special orders, and again it was displaced by a vote of the Senate to take up the labor-contract bill; and in connection with that I may be allowed to say that many Senators believed there was an understanding, express or implied, which they felt binding on them to vote for the consideration of that bill first before the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill was taken up; but they desire now, I think, that this bill should finally be taken up without any further delay. I merely wished to call the attention of the Senate to this condition of the bill, and to insist that it shall now be taken up.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order from the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to debate this subject. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to debate the subject; I only wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is debate. The Senator has unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. I so understood and was going on, Mr. President. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the agricultural appropriation bill has been hanging for a few days and it ought to be passed to-day. I do not wish to antagonize his motion, but I would like to have an understanding if his bill is laid before the Senate that then I may call up the appropriation bill with his consent.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I presume that is the understanding as to appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. So that I can get it through to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the bill named by him shall now be considered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill before the Senate be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to consider the agricultural appropriation bill. It will take but a little time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to consider the agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands to the pending bill will be read.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire to insist upon the Senate considering the appropriation bill now, if it is the feeling of the Senate that it is better to go on with the bill just laid before the Senate. I will not make any motion at present.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think the forfeiture bill will take very long.

Mr. HALE. I make no motion.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to print 2,000 additional copies of Lieut. P. H. Ray's report of the International Polar Expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND-GRANT FORFEITURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk read the first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which was in line 9, of section 1, to strike out the word "that."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "lands," to strike out the word "be;" in line 10 to strike out after the word "to" the words "sale and settlement" and to insert the word "disposal;" in line 11, after the word "under," to strike out the word "existing" and insert the words "the general;" and in line 12, after the words "United States," to insert the words "as though said grant had never been made: Provided, That the price of the lands so forfeited and restored shall be the same as heretofore fixed for the even sections within said grant;" so as to make the section read:

That all lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1857, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the whole of said lands restored to the public domain and made subject to disposal under the general laws of the United States as though said grant had never been made: Provided, That the price of the lands so forfeited and restored shall be the same as heretofore fixed for the even sections within said grant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

Sec. 2. That in any and all cases, as to any lands embraced within the terms of the act named in section 1 of this act, whenever the Department of the Interior, or its officers, or the local land-officers have treated said lands as open to selection, purchase, or homestead entry, and have allowed purchases, selections, and entries of any of said lands under the general laws of the United States, the acts of the Department of the Interior, and its officers, and the local land-officers in permitting such entries, selections, and purchases, in making such sales, and in issuing patents, certificates, and lists thereon, are hereby ratified and validated; and the rights and titles of parties or persons holding patents or claiming right or title under certificates or lists of lands issued or certified by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or certificates issued by the officers of the local land offices, or who have made homestead entries or pre-emption settlements or claims of any kind upon any of said lands under the general laws of the United States, in any way affected adversely by said grant, are hereby confirmed and made valid to the same extent as though said grant had never been made; and all of said lands embraced within the provisions of said acts shall be restored to the public domain, subject to the saving of rights as provided in this section, as though said grant had never been made.

And in lieu thereof insert:

Sec. 2. That the act of March 3, 1875, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers within railroad limits," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in after the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as new sections:

Sec. —. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas to hear and determine all questions and controversies concerning the rights and equities in said forfeited lands that are claimed or asserted by the United States, or by any person or corporation claiming the same under or in consequence of any law of the United States, or any act of its lawfully authorized agents, and to enforce any judgment or decree, either interlocutory or final, that said court shall render in respect of said lands or any interest therein.

Sec. —. That it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the northern district of Texas, under the direction of the Department of Justice, immediately to proceed in the circuit court of the United States for the said district, by bill in equity, in the name of the United States of America as plaintiff, against any corporations or persons that claim any interest in the lands hereby declared forfeited, arising under said act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, or under this act, so as to bring before said court for its determination the validity of such claim, whether the same be legal or equitable.

Sec. —. That any person or corporation not made a party defendant in said proceeding, but claiming any interest under the laws of the United States in the lands, or any part thereof, which are declared forfeited by this act, may present such claim by petition in said cause, duly verified by oath; and if the court, upon consideration thereof, shall decide that the adjudication and settlement of such claim are necessary to do complete justice in said cause, the court shall direct that such further proceedings be had upon such petition as that the same may be fully heard and determined, and shall proceed to decree upon the same as fully as if such petitioner had been made a party defendant in said suit: Provided, That no such petition shall be filed after twelve months from the date of the filing of the bill in said cause.

Sec. —. That the court, if it shall see fit, may tax all the costs of the suit under the third section of this act against the United States, and shall apportion the costs of any proceeding under the fourth section of this act between the parties according to justice and equity. Any party to the suit instituted under this act shall have the right of appeal from any final decree thereon to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same conditions as are prescribed by law and the rules of said court for appeals in equity cases; and the Supreme Court shall cause said appeal to be advanced on the docket so that the same shall be speedily determined; but no right of appeal shall exist after six months from the time when said final decree is entered on the records of the circuit court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in supporting the amendment which I have offered I desire to announce at the outset that I am content to vote for the bill just as it is, and that I shall vote for it even if the Senate does not adopt the amendment which I have had the honor to bring forward.

I believe that this land grant ought to be forfeited. I am quite sure that the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company has not earned one foot of the land embraced in its grant. I believe that the attempted transfer of the land grant by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was so far in violation of the laws of the United States and the public policy declared by Congress, that it could not become a valid transfer without the express sanction of Congress. Hence I am prepared, notwithstanding the claim set up by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to this immense land grant, to vote for a declaration of the forfeiture of these lands to the Government of the United States.

I make this announcement in the outset so that I may avoid any possible misunderstanding, or any possible misconstruction of my individual position. However unimportant that may be, it is a matter of interest to me, of course, that I should not be misunderstood. I desire to present, however, in this amendment an opportunity to the Senate to declare whether it will take these lands into the keeping of the United States Government by an absolute decree of Congress, or whether it will relegate the question of the validity and effect of our act in passing this law to the courts of the United States, there to be passed upon and decided by them within a brief period of time.

I will premise by saying in the presence of the Senate, of every lawyer and every layman in the body, and I ask attention to the remark, that it is not possible for Congress to enact any law affecting private rights of property so as to take away from the judicial tribunals of this country the ultimate right to decide upon them. In that declaration I think I shall have the concurrence of every member of the Senate. I repeat it is not possible that Congress shall pass any law affecting private rights of property which will have an absolute and determinate effect upon those rights of property so as to exclude any person from having the right to raise the question and litigate upon the validity of our action in the courts of the country.

The demarkation in the Constitution of the boundary lines between the co-ordinate departments of the United States Government is so clear and so well fixed that I think there is nobody to be found now in this free Government of ours, this constitutional country, who will assert that Congress can intervene between two private persons or between the Government of the United States and a private citizen and by an act of legislation so far conclude and foreclose a question of title to property as that litigation thereafterward about it shall be impossible. If that is so, when we revoke this land grant or when we declare it forfeited, the immense area of lands which are covered by it will become the subject of litigation. We can not prevent them from becoming the subject of litigation. We can not put up bars before any court, either of the States or of the United States, which will shut out parties in interest in this controversy from coming in and demanding of the judges that they shall hear and determine and adjudicate upon their rights of property.

If these propositions are true, then the question that I present in this amendment is simply one of policy, for the adjudication must come sooner or later. The question is whether it shall come in after years and during a series of years, and at the instance of a great number, it may be, of private litigants and in courts to be selected by themselves, or whether it shall come at once, be determined at once in a court of the United States, all in one suit, which can be taken by an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which that court is required to treat as a cause of emergency and to advance on the docket, so that the litigation may be finally ended as soon as possible in view of the administration of justice.

I will suppose that we pass the bill just as it has come from the committee without adding the provision that I have the honor to offer as an amendment to it, and then let us look at the situation. I have but to refer to the fact that for five or six mornings the Senate has been occupied in an earnest and an honest endeavor to rectify the evils which have come upon a large community in the State of Iowa, growing out of the fact that we did not provide when the controversies first arose in Iowa a court of competent jurisdiction to hear and determine and settle them. I can refer also to another case upon the Calendar, which is being pressed upon the attention of the Senate for settlement, and which for years has been lingering in this body in one form and another, what is called the Sioux City Railroad case. In consequence of the neglect of Congress to provide a tribunal for hearing and determining the controversy in that case, there has sprung up a litigation between parties, which is spreading itself from one tract of land to another throughout a large domain in the State of Iowa, and which is involving Congress and involving the courts in an infinitude of difficulties and troubles, every one of them the result of the neglect of Congress to provide at an early stage for the settlement of those difficulties by a court of the United States having competent jurisdiction and power to decide them.

Again I refer the Senate of the United States in the State of Michigan to a most laborious, intricate, and involved controversy about the Ontonagon land grants and about the transfer of a land grant from one portion of that State to another, and about the question whether the State of Michigan has been compensated by one grant for what it yielded up, or was supposed to have yielded up, under another—a question of the greatest possible difficulty, which has been argued and reargued before the Committee on Public Lands by the ablest lawyers in the United States, and who have had the opinions of Senators upon it. Yet that controversy is not ended, and every Senator here who is acquainted with the facts of those cases must know that if in the early stages of the controversy jurisdiction had been conferred upon a Federal court for the purpose of calling all parties in interest before the court, including the Government of the United States, a settlement would have been completed long ago and peace and prosperity would have ruled and reigned in a country where there is nothing now but discord and strife.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is responsible today for a great amount of injustice and wrong that has been done in various locations in this country from not having provided in cases of controversy for the settlement of those controversies in a court of broad, comprehensive, competent jurisdiction. I could cite to you many other cases of this kind. Some have occurred even in my State. They have occurred elsewhere. They occur continually in regard to the Spanish grants. There is a very important case now in the State of California, where parties are seeking to have Congress intervene after a great many years have elapsed, and to establish a tribunal and give jurisdiction to some of the courts for the purpose of settling those controversies that ought to have been settled long ago. An almost incalculable amount of mischief, of waste and expenditure, of heart-burning between citizens and the Government and between citizens themselves, between railroad corporations and others, is wrought throughout the country simply by our having neglected to take care of this subject in a proper manner.

When I had the honor of going upon the Committee on Public Lands and found that nine-tenths of the time of that committee, most laboriously expended, was occupied in the attempt, a vain one so far, to settle these controversies—for not one of them has yet been settled—when I found that numerous bills for the forfeiture of land grants were coming up, that almost every important railroad in the West was being attacked upon the ground that it had not complied with the act granting the lands, and that therefore they were the subjects of forfeiture, it occurred to me as a duty that I could not avoid to suggest to that honorable committee and to suggest to the Senate of the United States that in the beginning of this system of land-grant forfeitures we should adopt a plan which would cause the speedy settlement of all these questions of litigation and controversy. Hence it was, with no ambitious motive surely, but with a desire simply to perform a very plain duty to my mind, that I brought in an amendment to one of those bills.

More than that, I introduced and had referred to that committee a general bill providing that in all cases of land-grant forfeiture the circuit court of the United States in some part of the land-grant domain should take jurisdiction of these cases and proceed to decide them, calling in all the necessary and all the proper parties. When that bill went before the committee, not connected with any special land grant, a majority of the committee required me to report it back favorably. I felt of course sustained by the committee in that particular, and was very much gratified that they took that view of the subject.

But occasionally it has occurred that in respect of some of these cases the majority of the committee, say five to four, have insisted that the amendment was not appropriate in a particular case, that it was not necessary. I have always contended and believed that if it was necessary in one case it was proper in all. It might not be absolutely necessary, but still it was proper in all.

So the Senate will remember in regard to the Oregon land-grant case, where the two Senators from Oregon concurred that it was not necessary in respect of that land grant, the question arose in the Senate, and the Senate decided against the amendment, doubtless upon the ground that it was not necessary to that bill. In the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company, when the question arose here, the Senate by a very large vote, upon the call of the yeas and nays and after debate—a vote I think of some 30 or 35 to 11—decided in favor of the amendment.

So the principle of the amendment I now offer has received the sanction of the committee in the general bill; it has received the sanction I believe of four out of five of the committee on this particular bill; and it has received the sanction of the vote of the Senate by the majority which I have just stated upon the Atlantic and Pacific bill. I now offer it to this bill, believing that there is not a single case in all the number that have come before the Senate or that will come before the Senate in which this amendment is more important than it is in this case.

I should very gladly have avoided the labor and responsibility of offering the amendment, for it has caused me to be attacked personally through the newspapers of the country as one who desired to obstruct the forfeiture of land grants, because I pleaded in the Senate that the Government of the United States in instituting a new system of action in regard to the land grants should so provide as that all questions which might arise out of them should be settled early after we had declared the forfeiture, and thereby save to future generations the terrible litigation which has been so expensive and so trying upon a great many communities in this country.

Now, let us consider one category here. The Texas and Pacific Railroad Company have made a transfer bodily of the entire land grant made to them to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Arguments were made by men like Hon. William M. Evarts, who talked upon the subject as if he were in dead earnest, and here is his brief—arguments were made by a number of the most important and influential lawyers in the United States—insisting that the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company had the absolute right under the terms of the law to transfer the grant to any purchaser, and that whether they transferred it in a body to a railroad company, or whether they transferred it to mortgagees, as they were authorized to mortgage it, or whether they transferred it by private sale to private individuals in small parcels, made no difference. They insisted that this land grant is property, and that until the Government of the United States had declared the forfeiture of it, that being the only power which can avail itself of the right of forfeiture, the right of the company to transfer the land grant was absolute and perfect. It is provided, they insist, in the act under which the land grant originated that it might be transferred to assigns as well as to mortgagees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON) rapped for order.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely aware that at this stage of a session of the Senate not very much consideration can be given to what is being said in debate, no matter how important the question is. Here is a question which, I understand, involves the title to 20,000,000 acres of land. It is not a question in which I have any personal interest or any motive in the world except that of taking the labor to try and explain it to the Senate. These men claim, whether rightfully or wrongfully, justly or unjustly, lawfully or unlawfully—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must suspend conversation on the floor. It is impossible for the Senator addressing the Chair to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall not detain the Senate very long. I am as anxious to get through as the Senate is that I should. I am trying now to discuss all these questions in one in order to economize the time of the Senate. That is all that I am trying to do. I do not wish to take up this same question upon every forfeiture bill that arises, and here I am trying now to discuss the question of disagreement between the two House of Congress upon this matter. All that I am anxious to do is to enlighten the Senate as far as I am able upon the propositions that are before it.

It is contended, I repeat, that they have a right to this land, and that they have a right to it under the laws of the United States. It is urged ably and vehemently, and with every apparent mark of sincerity, as I have remarked, by some of the best lawyers in this country, by some of the ablest men in the country, one of whom, a distinguished man from New York, is about to take a seat in this body on the 4th of March, that the Government of the United States conferred by its act granting this land the power to this corporation to transfer it absolutely to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; that the transfer was made for a good consideration in good faith; and that since the transfer has been made the transferee has given mortgages upon the property to other outstanding persons who are certainly innocent. That is their claim.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Do I understand the Senator to say that the company have given mortgages upon this grant of land?

Mr. MORGAN. So I am informed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; nothing of the kind.

Mr. MORGAN. They insist that the mortgages which they gave upon their property include this grant; not that they have since the grant was transferred to them made a new mortgage, but they insist that it inures to the mortgage as part of the mortgaged property. That is what they insist.

I beg the Senate to understand that I am not stating my view of this case; I am stating the view which was insisted upon before the committee. If the Senate thinks that it is disreputable to insist upon it, let the blame rest upon men like Judge Dillon, Mr. Evarts, and others who make this demand, not upon a Senator who presents it here as a part of the argument that was made before the committee, and which he happened to think was at least worthy of consideration.

I do not set myself up as an infallible judge upon the rights of other men. I do not wish to be a judge of their rights except so far as their rights concern a duty that I must perform; and certainly I do not wish to assume the ermine while I am a Senator of the United States and to undertake to decide judicially upon questions that the Constitution has relegated to a different body of men. But that is claimed in behalf of the corporations here concerned. Suppose it should turn out that the courts of the United States sustain this claim of theirs. I presume Senators here will be wise enough to say that no court ever can sustain it; but suppose it should turn out that they do sustain it, about what time will that judgment ripen and become a matter of record? Probably ten years after to-day. Where will the suit originate in which this matter will be determined? It will originate in any court that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company choose to select. They can originate it in a common pleas court in California, in a district court in California, or in a court of equity in California. They can originate it in any court having jurisdiction of a real action or of a suit in equity in any of the Territories through which the road passes. They can institute it in the State of Texas; perhaps in the State of Louisiana.

They have their choice of States, of localities, and of courts in which to start this proceeding. They begin it. How do they begin it? In some little piepoudre collateral action between A and B about the title to a forty-acre tract of desert land, it may be, or something of that kind—an inconsequential and an inconsiderable piece of land—but the question which grafts itself upon that suit is the whole question in the case. It passes around through court after court, and after awhile it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States, after long delay and great expense and great harassment, and it is there finally decided.

In the mean time the court below pronounces a decision. I will suppose that it pronounces it in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. After having pronounced that decision the company proceeds to sell its lands, and sells them out to cattle-rangers, to farmers, to vine-growers, to villages, and to towns, until thousands and thousands of people become involved in the question. At the time they are making these sales they have got the decision of a court to back them, which, it will be remembered but a few days back in our debates, was a very important matter in regard to certain grave affairs that have taken place recently in the United States. A court in Kansas, it was said, made a decision that the lands of Oklahoma are public lands open to settlement, and thereupon an army of invasion went into that country and occupied it, demanding and claiming that they had the right, under the decision of that court, to occupy that country. Another army followed, the Army of the United States, with its loaded guns and its bayonets fixed, to drive those men out of that territory.

It has been but two or three days since Senators upon this floor in great anxiety have declared their apprehensions that when the grass springs up again in the Oklahoma country war would be started there because of a dispute between the Government of the United States and the claimants to settlement on the public lands, and that those claimants are backed by a decision of a court and that is enough for them. We understand the force of a tide of immigration, and we understand the demand which the Anglo-Saxon makes for land whenever he gets within reach of it. We have our own examples and our own history to refer to in order to refresh our recollections and to admonish us about matters of this kind.

In view of this case, suppose a court in California, in Arizona, in New Mexico, in Texas, or it may be in Louisiana, shall decide that the Southern Pacific Railway Company did have the right to buy the whole tract of land, and that they have a good title in consequence of the purchase, then your people swarm out upon these lands and buy them, and afterward when that case gets to the Supreme Court of the United States and is reversed, you will have re-enacted upon an immense scale the very controversy which has engaged the attention of the Senate for six mornings in succession, and which would engage it for six more in debate were it not entirely improper to be extended at this late hour of the session.

Suppose the decision is made against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the court below, your people spread themselves out into this territory and take up the lands under the laws of the United States under homestead and pre-emption entries. What then? After they have gone upon the lands the litigation is still going on; men are kept in a continual state of agitation; they have not got permanent homes and can not get them in that country, and by reason of that fact that country must necessarily suffer, for a country whose families are located upon possessions that after all are doubtful and disputable as to the right, is a country that can have no real peace and no real prosperity.

Suppose that you want to sell those public lands at private sale, or suppose you want to lease them under an act of Congress to herdsmen and shepherds, your title is embarrassed until the courts have decided. After you have passed your decree in Congress here, any man, it makes no difference what his dignity may be or how little or how much land he may claim, has the right to question the validity of it. That is one of the liberties of the American people of which we can not deprive them. They have a right to question our acts in their courts, and they do question them. Whenever our action is questioned, of course that question agitates the whole length and breadth of the domain that you are proceeding to dispose of.

Here we turn loose an immense domain amounting perhaps to twenty million acres, and because we refuse to put a limitation upon a bill which will give a court a chance to adjudicate these questions in advance and within a year from the date of the act, we leave these questions open as a cloud upon the public domain, forbidding people to go there and unsettling the titles from the moment that they go. How can you get into one of these new Territories a stable population of good and enterprising and peace-loving men when you force them to go in there under a cloud upon the title to the whole country? When you have your public domain left under the influence of the sort of legislation that we are about to enact, the men who go there are the men who rely upon the pistol and upon the bowie-knife to fight their way through, and they are not the peace-loving men who ought to be invited to go to the West everywhere for the purpose of settling up those communities and fixing a nucleus of society there that in after years shall ripen into blessings upon that community and upon the world.

The quiet, peace-loving man who resides in the East or in the South or in the Middle States, who may desire to migrate to the West for the purpose of settling near to one of these railroads to get the advantage of it, would say to himself, "I can not afford to go there and invite litigation; I can not afford to go there merely to become the toy and plaything of lawyers and judges; I prefer to seek some other country." But the fierce, unsettled, wandering man, who thinks that he can make up the time and make it the occasion of some advantage by going there with his bowie-knife and his gun, will go and locate upon a tract of land in that country; and instead of getting a good, steady, honest, and peace-loving population, you get a belligerent, unsteady, dissatisfied set of people there.

In view of the general public policy and in view of the controversies which will arise, in view of the history that we are making ourselves only too familiar with every day through these distressful controversies that come before this body, in view of the experience of the Committee on Public Lands which has sat upon these questions day after day and night after night, not during this session of Congress only but at preceding sessions, I appeal to the Senate of the United States that they will adopt and adhere to a proposition which has truth and right in it, which has repose in it for titles as well as for people.

Mr. President, I do not think that I shall be moved from my desire in this matter by any apprehension that I subject myself to criticism as being the friend of the railroads. No, sir; I am the friend of justice; I am the friend of peace and security for titles. I am the friend of the communities who settle out in that country. I am the friend of the men who go there and who, instead of going under the threat of a lawsuit, want to go under the protection of the law.

What reason is there why a court of the United States can not settle these questions? I have heard but one stated, and that is that judges are not to be trusted. That is about the only one that can be stated. The judges are not to be trusted; the judges are the creatures of the corporations; the judges are the hirelings of the corporations; the judges are under the influence of the corporations! Suggestions like these are prated around continually as arguments why they can not be trusted to administer upon these matters. Sir, you have got to trust judges after all, and the question is, What judges will you trust? I have an almost inexpressible feeling of gratification and gratitude, too, to the founders of our system of government that they did place rights of property beyond the absolute disposal of the Congress of the United States, and that they put these questions in the hands of the judiciary for final settlement.

We have got to trust the judges or else we have got to reverse the whole system of our Government. Then the question is, what judges will we trust? I have confidence in the judges of the United States courts that they will do justice, and in the Supreme Court of the United States that it will do justice. Some Senators may not have that confidence; I can not help it. In my retrospect of the history of that august tribunal I see no reason to challenge its honesty, or its integrity, or its ability, or to abate in the slightest degree by any remark that I might make the just influence which it exerts over the people and over the States of this great Union. Therefore I dismiss that argument. We must trust judges, and I prefer to trust the judges of the United States courts. We must have litigation; we shall have litigation about this case. I therefore prefer that this litigation shall come off immediately and be settled as soon as justice will admit of its being settled.

What is this amendment? It is simply providing that after this declaration of forfeiture is made, after Congress has declared all that it wants about it and all that it can declare about it, the Government of the United States in its own name, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, shall through its local district attorney file a bill or bring a suit in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas, that being an organized State and one of the States through which this line of railway runs, and that bill shall call in the claimant to this property, the Southern Pacific Railway Company, and shall call in any person else claiming the property under the act which made the grant of land to the Texas Pacific Railway Company. The amendment further provides that if there are other parties who are not necessary parties, but who are proper parties to be represented in their persons or in their property claims and interests which require to be litigated and settled, the court, as is the practice in equity courts, may call in those parties either by the direct service of process where they reside within the State, or by publication under the rules of practice where they reside out of the State, that they may come in and make themselves parties to the suit, that they may call them in, and if they are unwilling to become parties make them parties.

The amendment further provides that any person who may have an interest, or believes that he has an interest in these lands under this proposed act or under any act of Congress, may come into that court and file a petition and propound his interest; that the court shall examine it, and if it finds that the party has a sufficient interest to justify him in being brought in to have his rights adjudicated, he is made a party. In this way every human being who is in any wise connected with this title can be brought into the litigation, and that, too, at a very light expense, for the court has the right under its rules of practice and under the amendment to classify the petitioners, so that the decision in one case will be the decision in all, or in all of that class, thereby reducing the expense of the litigation, hastening the progress of the suits, and causing an early determination of the rights affected.

The amendment then proceeds further, and has what is in effect a statute of limitations in it. A person is debarred from his right to come in as a party by petition after twelve months from the date of the filing of the bill. If any appeal is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the final decree in the cause it must be taken within six months from the date of its rendition, and then the Supreme Court is required to advance that case on the docket so that there may be a speedy hearing and determination of it.

That may not be a perfect system, and yet it is the best one that I have been able to devise, and it is the one that the Committee on Public Lands, after due examination, have recommended in the general bill which I reported to this body as being proper machinery for the purpose of arriving at the speedy adjudication of all these questions and a settlement of the rights of every man who may have an interest in this controversy hereafter.

I have not heard the reasonableness of this plan attacked. I have heard nobody say that it was an inefficient plan. I have heard nobody say anything about it, except some surmises have been indulged that the object in offering it was to delay the forfeiture, to prevent justice, to shelter the railroads, and to keep them from surrendering up this grant which Congress declares they shall surrender.

Let me inquire what more can Congress do in regard to this case than merely to declare the forfeiture? What Senator in this body will assert that Congress can do more than declare the forfeiture? We declare that in consequence of the fact that this railroad company has not complied with the conditions of the act granting these lands, its title is forfeited to the United States Government, and we go further and dispose of it. We go further than really I think we ought to go, but still I shall vote for that feature of the bill. We go further and place it in the category of the public domain and we subject it to the land laws of the United States in respect of its future disposal.

That is all that Congress can do. What is the effect of that? What is intended to be the effect of it? It makes no difference whether we intend as the effect of that to cut off all future litigation and inquiry in respect of our right to do this thing or not; we can not do that; we have not the power to do it. The courts, as I have often remarked during this argument and heretofore, will take the subject in consideration and will adjudicate upon it. Then we go in this bill just as far as we can go; and yet we do not get the title. We can not get the title by an act of Congress. We can only take the necessary preliminary steps to get it, and the question whether we have got it is a question depending upon how the courts shall decide hereafter upon the validity and effect of our act.

I have not been very curious to inquire whether this declaration of forfeiture is a forfeiture which relates back to the date of the grant. It makes no difference as to that. We can not make it relate back, for in the law and according to justice it does not relate back, for if we were to do that we should do by ex post facto legislation the wrongful and unconstitutional thing of taking from a man his property without due course of law, and that we can not do. It is a question for the courts to determine whether it relates back or not, even though we should so declare; but in this case that happens to make no difference; for in the view that I take of it, and in the view of those who are opposed to the amendment, if there be such, this act of forfeiture declared by us has the effect under our law of what is termed office-found, and only that.

I have had occasion to expound this several times in the Senate. I need not have done it, because other Senators understand it as well as or better than I do; but I refer to it for the purpose of showing the status in which this property is left after we make this declaration.

It is precisely in the condition of a piece of real estate in England that was granted by the Crown to a citizen upon a condition-subsequent, as it is called, a condition upon the performance or non-performance of which would depend the completion of the title in the grantee. The Crown sees cause to try the question of title with its grantee. Thereupon it institutes the prerogative writ to which I have heretofore referred, and sends the writ to a judicial officer, to a coroner. The coroner takes further judicial proceeding by summoning a jury. The old common-law jury comes in, except that the number is not limited to twelve, he may make it thirty if he wants. He hears one side of the case; he hears the case of the Crown. It is an ex parte investigation. He charges his jury, and his jury find a verdict.

If that verdict is in favor of the Crown it is reported to one of the courts. Then what? Thereupon, if the citizen from whom the land is taken by this ex parte proceeding desires to litigate with the Crown, that citizen brings his petition of right, his writ of right, or he brings his bill in equity, and the court being thus put in possession of the case looks back over the whole question, looks back over that part of it which came under the jurisdiction of the coroner, looks back into the right of the thing, as it is termed in the English law-books; and the court thereupon determines whether the Crown is entitled to the property, or whether the citizen is entitled to the property. If the citizen turns out to be entitled to the property the Crown must not only yield the property to him, but it must also yield to him damages for having interfered with his possessory right. That is English law. That is English liberty. That is the power of a citizen under the English system.

Sir, when you come to compare the boasted powers and rights of the American citizen with those of a British subject upon this topic, the American citizen does not approach him in his liberty. We have never provided in our country that any citizen of the United States might sue the Government when the Government undertook to take away from him the title to a tract of land that it had granted. We have only doled out to our citizens once in a while the poor privilege of suing for money claims in a court of claims; but when you come to address yourself to the rights that the people have as individuals against the Government of the United States in respect of this vast domain of land which extended from the States of Pennsylvania and Kentucky and Georgia all the way to the Pacific coast you can not find upon the statute-books of the United States or in its Constitution the scratch of a pen or the impress of the type to show that there has ever been granted to the people of the United States the liberties and rights in respect of that domain which belong to the British subjects under the Crown of Great Britain.

Therefore, when the Congress of the United States undertakes to take a man's land away against his complaint and his protestation, he has nothing to do but to go into some of the State courts, or if perchance he can find his way into some Federal court where he can not bring his action against the United States, he may bring his action against some other citizen, in which suit the question will arise collaterally and not directly; and in that way, working from court to court, he brings the question before the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court may decide ultimately that the Government of the United States has no title to the land. The British subject can sue the Crown immediately. He can bring his petition of right or his bill in equity and try the question of title with the Crown, whereas the American citizen, this boasted inheritor of all the glory of his ancestry and of the light of the world, must probe his way around, fight his way about the piepoudre courts, and in a collateral way and in an inconsequential way have this immense question decided between him and the Government of the United States, and then it remains for Congress, by some act or other, to repair the wrong and the mischief which this system has done.

Now, what do I claim in this case? I claim it in behalf of a company that I believe have no legal right, that they shall still have the right to litigate, and inasmuch as I can not keep them from litigating and I know that they will do it if they choose, as they say they mean to do it, I want to draw that company into a competent court at once, and I want that suit prosecuted in the name of the United States Government, so that all controversy may be ended and that this question of title shall be settled.

Perhaps I have not framed the amendment in the best way. The committee agree with me that it is the best way that they could think of. Some Senator may be able to improve it. If he does, I shall thank him for it. But the principle of it is a very clear one to my mind; the duty of enacting it is a very clear one; and as to the public policy of putting it upon the statute-book for the purpose of having these rights considered and tried, I have no doubt.

My own experience teaches me, if I had nothing else to go to as convincing me that the public policy of this country requires that we should have these controversies settled, now that we are setting out to forfeit land grants and this is to become a fruitful subject of litigation, a very harvest of litigation sown in the land, that we should provide in a timely and proper way so that this matter may be settled early, speedily, by high courts, courts having competent jurisdiction and courts that are courts of justice, whatever other Senators may say about them.

Inasmuch as I shall support the bill just as it is, if my amendment is voted down, I ought to be allowed to state the reason for that. It is one that I state with great modesty and unaffected diffidence, because it is right in the very teeth of the opinions of some of the greatest lawyers in the United States, and I have no reason to believe that they have made any insincere statement of their opinions. They are honorable men, and I believe that when an honorable man comes before a committee of Congress, or a court, and is questioned as to his opinion upon the law, he will make a statement of it that he thinks he can sustain, and he will not be rash enough to state something that is foolish or something that is impossible to fortify or sustain by reasoning or by precedent.

When Mr. Evarts was arguing this case before the committee I asked him the question: "Do you, sir, ask of the Congress of the United States any affirmative legislation to ratify this grant which you claim that you have bought from the Texas Pacific Railroad Company?" He said, "We do not; we think we have got a good title." There I differ with him, and there it is that I venture to state the ground of my difference as justifying the declaration which I make here that I shall vote for this bill even though the Congress of the United States intends to relegate all these questions of litigation to some unknown court and the decision to some unknown period in the future.

What is my reason for it? I will state it briefly. The Texas and Pacific Railroad Company was organized for the great leading purpose of building a railroad about the thirty-second parallel of latitude to San Diego on the Gulf of California. No road was built under that charter to San Diego or anywhere approximating it. The Texas Pacific Railroad Company never broke ground across the border of Texas for the purpose of building the line to San Diego. They did absolutely nothing. While they were building their line out through Texas to El Paso del Norte a very strenuous effort was made in the Senate of the United States and in both branches of Congress to get for them a subsidy, an indorsement of their bonds in addition to the land grant, and that effort was based upon the idea which is entirely a correct one, that the Texas and Pacific Railroad, if built out to San Diego, would be a competing line with the Southern Pacific Railroad, which was then coming from San Francisco by the way of the Mohave Desert along down toward Yuma, and from Yuma on, as was insisted, to the eastern connection.

The great purpose of Congress in granting this land, and the great purpose of those gentlemen who advocated this bounty or this indorsement (and some of the most respected of my friends advocated it), was that they should get a competing line through to connect to the Pacific coast. They were not willing that the Southern Pacific road, which was alleged to be and is in fact a real part of the Central Pacific road, after having received the bounty of the Government from Ogden westward to San Francisco, should avail itself of the money which it made, the power and influence, the capital and credit which it concentrated, to sweep on down the Pacific coast to come back toward New Orleans, making thereby a mere prolongation of the Central Pacific through the name of the Southern Pacific; because they said, "When that is done you only double their powers of monopoly instead of getting up an opposition line in that country."

So my friends here to whom I have referred warmly insisted upon the assistance of Congress to the Texas and Pacific road. It is true I did not go for that. I did not go against it. The question did not come up finally for settlement by Congress, but that makes no difference; I am trying to prove the proposition that one of the great leading thoughts in regard to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, both in respect of the land grant that we are now about to forfeit, and in respect of the donation of public credit that was sought for, was that we should have a line open to San Diego, and that we should have competition in favor of the farmers and commercial men of this country by having two lines instead of one, and having one at least under the direct control of the Government.

While this was going on the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were here by their agents, lobbyists, &c., earnestly insisting that they did not want any grant of land. They opposed our making a grant of credit to the Texas and Pacific Railroad; they did all they could to keep Congress from building up the Texas and Pacific, for the reason that they did not want any competition. They announced here and everywhere that they could build that road out of their own money, and they did build it out of their own money. They built it down to Yuma in time to earn all their land grant; they built it within the time prescribed by the act which gave them the charter and also the public lands. They earned the land grant to Yuma. Then they came on to El Paso del Norte, saying to Congress and to the country: "We do not want a land grant; we are going to build the road with our own money; and more than that, we do not want you to subsidize this other road; it is useless to do it, because before you get your subsidy passed, almost, we shall have the railroad down to El Paso del Norte;" and they did that.

After getting their road down to El Paso del Norte what do they do? They simply buy out the land grant of the Texas and Pacific, and by a doctrine which I may call ex pres, by the substitution of one company for another, they claim that they have performed in substance what was intended to be performed by the Texas and Pacific road and what was required by Congress of that road, and in consequence thereof they have the right equitably to the grant. But they say, "Whether we have that right or not, whether there was any equity in our favor, treat us as persons who had never any connection with it at all. Your act of Congress under which you have granted these lands is of such a character that you have put it in the power of the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company to sell the entire grant, and we are the purchasers in good faith and for a valuable consideration."

Mr. President, I confess to you that as a lawyer that has been a very hard proposition for me to wrestle with. That same proposition came up in what is called the Louisiana Backbone grant. There the Backbone Company transferred its grant out and out to the New Orleans Pacific road, and upon the very identical pretext that the Southern Pacific claims the land under the transfer of this great body of property in this case. What was the New Orleans Pacific case? I will state it very briefly. It was that a grant had been made to what is called the Backbone road on the east side of the Mississippi River from the city of New Orleans, via Baton Rouge, up to Shreveport. That road was not built; scarcely a shovelful of earth was ever lifted in its construction. The Texas and Pacific road came along toward the east, and finding that they could get into New Orleans on the west side of the river, not on the east, they bought out the whole line of road there and commenced constructing from the end of that line up toward Shreveport, practically over the very territory embraced in the Backbone land grant. They went on without any aid from Congress; they built their road; they made their connection with Shreveport on out until they connected with the whole Texas and Pacific system. Then they went to the Backbone Company and bought the grant out and out; and that grant was brought before the House of Representatives at this session. A very large majority of the committee reported against its validity, but the House of Representatives on consideration ratified the transfer and refused to forfeit the lands.

Now, sir, shall it be said by Senators on this floor that Mr. Evarts, Judge Dillon, and such men as these had no justification whatever in law or morals for the position which they have taken in regard to this matter, when the House of Representatives by a solemn vote in precisely a similar case has ratified the transfer? I can not take that ground. I must meet it in some other way; yet I do not believe that the transfer was valid. Now, why do I not believe that? The reasons, I can say, are simply satisfactory to myself. I do not know that they will be to anybody else. They are not based upon any given precedent that I can cite, for the reason that a case of the kind has never, within my knowledge, arisen, and I will state the reason.

Here was a great public trust created by this act of Congress for a great public purpose, and these lands were dedicated by Congress to the use of the people; they were taken out of the category of lands that were to be sold for the replenishing of the Treasury, and they were dedicated to the use of the people. What people? Those that then occupied the country and the generations to arise that might occupy it in the future. It is a continuing dedication, as much so as a public highway or a park in this city, or a park in the city of New York or Philadelphia, a dedication for the general use and benefaction of those who may be there to enjoy it, and it is one of those things that Congress did not have in contemplation to take back as a dedication at all, for in the acts making these grants, instead of requiring that the lands should be returned to the Government of the United States in the event of a failure, it was merely provided that the Congress of the United States should have the power of substituting another agent for the purpose of executing the trust of the dedication. That is all. I do not think it takes much of a lawyer to see that.

I am opposed to recalling this dedication if I can get along in any other way with it, and I would be opposed to it in this bill but for the fact that communication between San Diego and El Paso del Norte has been established, and that to allow these lands to remain subject to that dedication would be a useless thing so far as the general public is concerned; and I do not want this railroad company, which has not got an honest and a fair standing before the country, to come in under the pretext of enjoying this dedication and preserve it for their private advantage instead of for the public good. That is my ground about it.

I believe that they had no right to transfer the grant without the consent of Congress. When a railroad company is selected by Congress for the purpose of receiving a grant of lands and the grant is made to the railroad company, not to the States; for, mark the difference now, when a particular railroad company comes in and receives from Congress a grant of land it must be assumed, for it is true, that Congress would not make that grant to a set of irresponsible or a set of rascally men, men of bad reputation. The dedication being for the general public use, Congress in selecting the trustees to execute this grand trust would never think of accepting a corporation until after it had canvassed the character of the men upon whom and upon whose faith and responsibility, and respectability also, it was willing to confer the execution of the trust. So it selected this Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, named the individuals who were the corporators in the act, or else required them to be named by the States and Territories through which the road was to pass.

What did Congress do there? Select a body of American citizens to execute a great trust for the building of a great highway through the land for the benefit of a great section of the country. Can that trust thus conferred upon a particular set of men by act of Congress be transferred by them without the assent of Congress to another corporation? If that may be done, they could transfer it to men none of whom were naturalized citizens of the United States; they could transfer it to men who would prefer to lock up the road, for instance, for the purpose of driving all the burden of commerce away from our own shores across the Canadian Pacific. If you can transfer it to any corporation at all in a body you can transfer it to that corporation which controls the Canadian Pacific Railway, or you can transfer it to that corporation which controls the railway across the Isthmus of Panama. Hence I say that in the very nature of the trust, of the duties to be performed by these men, and of the grand public objects to be encompassed by this legislation, it inheres in the very quality of the act itself that this grant can not be transferred to another corporation bodily without the consent of Congress. That is a necessary condition precedent to the transfer.

That is my argument about it. That is the ground I am content to stand on about it. But I must mistrust my judgment, for I can cite no precedent, I can only argue from analogy and from my conception of the objects and purposes of this enactment against the power and right of transferring this grant bodily, as the Southern Pacific Railroad Company claims the Texas Pacific Railroad Company had the right to do; and I acknowledge that I am confronted by difficulties in the argument; I am confronted by the opinions of men whose opinions stand far above mine in the estimation of the people of this country and of this body also.

In that case can there be any reason why we should not have this question adjudicated? Shall we undertake to cut it off when we can not cut it off, to suppress it when we can not suppress it? And shall we merely postpone it because that will give a fairer field to some political upstart or adventurer who may wish to go out in the country and attitudinize as the destroyer of railroads, the David that slew Goliath with a single sling? It would be a pity to deny to any gentleman the opportunity to figure in this extraordinary attitude; at the same time I think in justice to the people of the United States we had better do with this thing what is wise and proper and allow such gentlemen to take care of themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken upon this amendment I wish to submit briefly my views upon the bill itself and upon the amendment.

On a great question of this kind it would be difficult for the humblest member of the Senate to address the body if it was present, and under the circumstances I feel very little inclination to undertake to present such views as I have, for the reason that it is of slight consequence to talk to an absent body; and yet I do not feel that a question of this importance ought to be decided, ought to be voted upon, without giving it considerable consideration. It may be that those who are not present during the debate are already thoroughly grounded in all the important considerations which appertain to the decision that is about to be made.

The bill before the Senate proposes to forfeit about 20,000,000 acres of land granted in the year 1871 to the Texas and Pacific Railway for the purpose of assisting in the construction of a transcontinental route to connect Marshall, Tex., a town in the eastern portion of that State, with the Pacific coast, the general course of the railroad to be constructed along the line of the thirty-second parallel of latitude. The line never was constructed by the railroad company that was endowed with this grant. The portion of the line to be located in the State of Texas was constructed by that company or by those who succeeded to its ownership. The portion of the railroad, which I think to be about seven hundred miles in length, situated in the State of Texas, was endowed with a large land grant from that State, a grant, if I am not incorrectly informed, the same in quantity per mile as that which was received from the United States along that portion of the line which was to be constructed within the Territories of the United States, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

The land grant in Texas coming from the State of Texas was, as we are informed, a very valuable grant. Most of the lands, as is true, I imagine, of substantially all the lands in that great State, were very valuable, valuable for agricultural purposes, and I do not know but some portion of them on account of timber, and it may be on account of other resources located upon or within the soil. But even that portion constructed in the State of Texas was not constructed for many years; was not constructed as under the terms and conditions of the original charter it was supposed the road would be constructed. Arrangements had been made by Colonel Scott and his associates for raising the necessary funds for the building of this road, mainly in London, when the panic of 1873 occurred just before the consummation of his arrangements, and the whole matter fell through.

I ought, before proceeding, to state another thing. At or about the same time that this railway obtained authority to construct its line along the thirty-second parallel through Texas and the Territories and the State of California to the Pacific coast, a charter-right from the State of California, which was recognized in this grant to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, was given to what was created as the Southern Pacific Railroad to construct a line from San Francisco to the southwest corner of the Territory of Arizona, intersecting with this proposed line, the Texas and Pacific, at Fort Yuma, in the Territory of Arizona, close to the southeasterly corner of the State of California. The conditions and limitations to regulate the construction of these two roads were substantially the same. They were to be undertaken and to be built with equal steps, so that it was contemplated that when the Southern Pacific Railroad should have reached this point of intersection, Fort Yuma, on the Colorado River, the Texas Pacific would be built westerly and would have arrived at the same point.

Thus a third system of transcontinental railway, connecting with San Diego on the Pacific and by way of the Southern Pacific with San Francisco, a line to be seven hundred miles long of itself, would go, as it was contemplated, into operation substantially together. The Southern Pacific branch, the seven hundred miles, was an exceedingly difficult and expensive road to build. It was endowed by a land grant as well as the Texas Pacific. It was built year by year, in accordance with the terms of its grant, and finally, about the year 1875 or 1876, it arrived at the proposed point of junction, Fort Yuma, having built its entire distance in accordance with the requirements of the laws under which it was chartered in the State of California, and in accordance with the conditions imposed by the General Government in the recognition which it gave to this road in the Texas Pacific grant, and I think also in the Atlantic and Pacific grant. It was constructed at a cost of nearly $35,000,000. That is my recollection in regard to the cost of that road, as I knew it at the time. I may be inaccurate, but not substantially so. When it arrived at the period which I have designated at Fort Yuma, the Texas Pacific had failed utterly in its part of the proposed arrangement. It was still 1,200 miles away at a point called Fort Worth, a little west of the point of commencement, which was Marshall, in Texas, and all this long intervening extent of road was entirely untouched.

Mr. MCPHERSON. How much?

Mr. BLAIR. About 1,200 miles. So that the Southern Pacific road having built in accordance with the laws of the State of California and the laws of Congress, discharging its obligations in every particular, arrived with its investment of $35,000,000 at Fort Yuma, and of course an investment of $35,000,000 through that waste country was utterly lost, unless in some way it could find eastern connection.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator allow me right there to ask for an explanation? He speaks of a land grant having been promised or given by the State of Texas to the Texas and Pacific Railroad for that portion of the line running through the State of Texas. Fort Worth, if I understand the geography, is in Texas some distance from the line of New Mexico. Can the Senator tell me whether the State of Texas ever gave the Texas Pacific Railroad Company any lands? Did they earn them and were they surrendered over to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. BLAIR. I was about to approach those facts. I can not answer the question directly. I do not know whether there has ever been any actual transfer of the land grant of the State of Texas to the Texas and Pacific Railroad along the line of that portion of its road which has been constructed in that State. I have no doubt, however, that it has been done. The road was by subsequent arrangement constructed westerly to El Paso, which is on the Rio Grande, and is practically the point of intersection with the road built through the Territories, and I have no doubt that the grant has been made by Texas, as in justice and equity of course it ought to be.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me suggest, so that there may be no misunderstanding about the facts as to which the Senator is inquiring, that there was no grant by the United States to the Texas Pacific through the State of Texas.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly not. The United States has no public lands in Texas.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understand that; but the State of Texas itself made a grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The State of Texas did make a grant and the company earned that land. The State of Texas gave it to the railroad company. The State of Texas did give the land. That is all the land the company ever earned.

Mr. MAXEY. I can state that the State of Texas grants a certain number of acres to every railroad which completes as much as one hundred miles of railroad in the State. There was a grant to the Texas Pacific Railroad by the State of Texas which owns her own lands. That company completed its road to a point eighty miles from El Paso and up to the point that it completed the road the State of Texas paid to the Texas Pacific road every acre of land promised.

Mr. MCPHERSON. All they earned?

Mr. MAXEY. All they earned. They earned up to within eighty miles of El Paso and there the road stopped, and up to that point the State paid every acre promised.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator to state to the Senate the precise geographical location?

Mr. MAXEY. The road for eighty miles between El Paso east to the Texas Pacific was built by the California Southern. That part of the road does not belong to the Texas Pacific.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator be so kind as to state the geographical location of El Paso?

Mr. MAXEY. El Paso is on the Rio Grande at the extreme western boundary of the State of Texas. It is the last town on the east bank of the Rio Grande. Across the Rio Grande is Mexico.

Mr. BLAIR. One question more, because I did not find that definitely stated in such papers as I have seen. There is a distance of about ninety miles where there is a road which is used in common, a connecting link.

Mr. MAXEY. I can explain that in a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the name of that other place?

Mr. MAXEY. The California Southern runs through from San Francisco to El Paso and then eighty miles east, and there it joins the Texas Pacific road. At that point the California Southern turns southeast and runs to San Antonio, Tex., whereas the Texas Pacific runs east from that point to Fort Worth and Marshall, Tex.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the name of that other point of junction?

Mr. MAXEY. I can not recall it to mind.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Sierra Blanca.

Mr. MAXEY. Sierra Blanca; that is it.

Mr. BLAIR. And that is still in the State of Texas?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir. El Paso is the extreme western point in the State on the Rio Grande. Sierra Blanca, where the roads fork—the Texas Pacific running to Fort Worth and then to Marshall—is eighty miles east of El Paso, and therefore is in the State of Texas.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me a moment, because I think we all want to understand this question; but I do not wish to interfere with his argument—

Mr. BLAIR. It does not trouble me.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. BLAIR. I was very glad of the interruption, because I obtained information which I could not find in the papers.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand the State of Texas agreed to give the Texas Pacific road, for each and every mile of its railway in the State of Texas, a certain land grant; that as to a part of the line in the State of Texas, the Texas Pacific Company forfeited it because it did not build the road within the time specified, but the Southern Pacific did build a portion of the line within the territory of the State of Texas. Now, will the Senator answer me another question? Did the State of Texas confer upon the Southern Pacific Railroad for that portion of road it built within the State of Texas the same land grant it intended to confer on the Texas Pacific?

Mr. MAXEY. I will answer that in this way: Under the general railroad law of the State every company which would build and equip twenty-five miles of railroad was entitled to a land grant of 10,240 acres per mile; then for every additional section of five miles the same allowance. The Texas Pacific, as I stated, was paid in land to the point to which it built the road, Sierra Blanca. The eighty miles west of that, between Sierra Blanca and El Paso, were built by the California Southern, and I take it, without being able to state on absolute knowledge, that the California Southern got that land under the general railroad law of the State.

Mr. McPHERSON. So that in fact they have received it.

Mr. MAXEY. I suppose so. I do not know that the State owes an acre of land to any railroad company in the world.

Mr. BLAIR. It comes then to this, that on the entire line from Marshall to San Diego and from Fort Yuma by the San Francisco branch to San Francisco, the portion actually constructed by the Texas and Pacific road has received land grants, and received land grants to the same extent that the Southern Pacific claims itself to be entitled to through the Territories.

Mr. McPHERSON. Under the general railroad law of Texas, and not by reason of any right it may have had as the successors of the Texas Pacific.

Mr. BLAIR. I am only speaking of what the Texas Pacific had a right to. I am not alluding to any land grant which comes to the Southern Pacific in the State of Texas, for it appears now that the Southern Pacific, having constructed about eighty or ninety miles of the line within the State of Texas, did receive a land grant precisely the same as the Texas Pacific itself was entitled to, as the Senator thinks, under the general law of that State.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator, so that he may understand it, for I do not think he quite gets my idea, that the California Southern not only built those eighty miles of road, but built several hundred other miles of road around to San Antonio.

Mr. BLAIR. So I understand, by the coast.

Mr. MAXEY. But the junction of the Texas Pacific and the California Southern is eighty miles east of El Paso at a place called Sierra Blanca.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely.

Mr. MAXEY. Without being able to state of my own personal knowledge that the California Southern got its land for building that railroad, I have no doubt on earth of the fact, for I never heard of a company that did not draw its land from the State under the general railroad law.

Mr. BLAIR. It results from all this that the Texas and Pacific corporation, for all the railroad that is actually constructed, has received land grants and land grants per mile commensurate with the amount that the Southern Pacific, which constructed a portion of this same line through the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, claims that it is entitled to under the law.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator stated that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had also received a land grant. From whom was it? From the Government, or from the State of California?

Mr. BLAIR. I stated in regard to that that the Southern Pacific Railroad as originally created and authorized to construct the line connecting San Francisco and Fort Yuma received a land grant. That line, which is now described as located entirely within the State of California, received a land grant of course within the limits of the State of California. It built its road, as I stated earlier, strictly in accordance with the law year by year, the only land-grant railroad that I know anything of that ever did do it, and it received the patents for its land grant in accordance with the discharge of its duty under the law. When it arrived about the year 1877 at Fort Yuma, the Texas Pacific was still lingering 1,200 miles away in Eastern Texas. The Southern Pacific was there with its $35,000,000 invested connecting with nothing and with nobody, running out into the wilderness, with an absolutely useless waste piece of property, and it must, of course, remain so, this amount of money sunk irretrievably, unless an eastern connection could be obtained.

I state these facts more particularly because I was at the time of the great controversy, that is so often alluded to, a member of the House of Representatives and a member of the Railroad Committee during both those Congresses, and witnessed the struggle between Scott and Huntington and their respective corporations. The failure of Colonel Scott to negotiate his bonds abroad left him without any resources whatever for the construction of the Texas and Pacific road, and he came to the Forty-third Congress, which was before I was a member at all, and proclaimed his utter inability to construct the road without further assistance from Congress. In the Forty-fourth Congress he certainly came and insisted that without a money subsidy or a guarantee of the payment of a large amount of bonds, to be issued upon the road as a security, it was utterly impossible for him to complete the road.

There was a time when public attention was considerably excited over the enormous expanse of the land grants which had been made to various railroad corporations. There had been public scandals connected with the construction of some highways, and there was no inclination then in the public mind, there was no predisposition, to say the least, in the public mind when, as I recollect, the application was here in Congress to favor this pecuniary subsidy. It was perfectly apparent to any man of discretion and sound judgment that the application for a guarantee of $40,000 per mile, which was what Colonel Scott requested in one of his bills, and in another $60,000, and later in the controversy it was reduced to a smaller amount. I say there was no likelihood in the judgment of any impartial-minded person that the subsidy could be obtained.

The Southern Pacific was located as I have stated and situated as I have stated. It appeared in Congress asking to be allowed to build easterly, insisted that it was ruin of its capital not to receive that permission. It asked no help from Congress save as usual it requested the benefit of the land grant which had been made to the Texas Pacific. Sometimes it insisted, in its anxiety for permission to build easterly and form an easterly connection, that it would build it without any subsidy even in land. All that it asked, what it pressed upon the committees most emphatically, as I remember, was the privilege of building easterly to save its capital from ruin. It was able to do it, it said, and would do it, and in justice it ought to receive the land grant; but if it could not receive the land grant it would build any way, such was the stress for the saving of its capital already invested and the establishment of its easterly connection. So the controversy proceeded.

The application on the part of the Texas and Pacific for a pecuniary subsidy, which in its largest amount was more than twice what men were building railroads for among the hills of New Hampshire at that time, naturally to any sensible man amounted to a mere application for delay, and the Southern Pacific was not in a condition to endure delay, and therefore there was a direct and very violent collision between these two great captains of industry, as the chairman of our committee, the honorable Senator LAMAR, frequently expressed it during this controversy; and finally these two men and their corporations came to an agreement that the Texas and Pacific would build westerly as far as El Paso, the Southern Pacific would build easterly as far as El Paso, and there they would form a junction, and they would thus construct the line together, divide the land grant together, and fulfill the obligations which had been contracted on the part of the Texas and Pacific to the United States, and prorate. That bill they tried to force through Congress, but they disagreed between themselves in some way, and it fell through.

The result of it all was that, under the management of Colonel Scott, with the Southern Pacific no arrangement was made, and during those two Congresses nothing was done. But meanwhile the Southern Pacific obtained under a general law the creation of two other corporations in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, authorized by the Legislatures of those Territories, under and through which, they furnishing the capital, as I suppose, though I do not know in regard to that, the road was built easterly under the forms of law. Thus it came to pass that they constructed their line as far as El Paso. Meanwhile Colonel Scott had died, and the management of the Texas and Pacific fell into other hands. Mr. Gould and his friends got hold of it, I believe, and they having capital, and better times approaching, they built westerly to El Paso. There the two roads formed a junction, and now are jointly operated as one continuous line.

After these failures to obtain subsidy from Congress had come to pass and it was entirely apparent that no further aid could be obtained from Congress, these corporations got together and came to an understanding that if the Southern Pacific, through these two Territorial corporations, built easterly it should receive all the benefits and privileges, including the land grant through the Territories, that the Texas and Pacific road would have been entitled to when it constructed its line according to its charter. They came to that tacit agreement between themselves, and with that tacit agreement or understanding the construction proceeded through the State of Texas westerly by the Texas Pacific under the management of Mr. Gould and his friends, and proceeded easterly from Fort Yuma by the Southern Pacific under cover of two Territorial corporations as far as El Paso, the point of junction. This tacit understanding was reduced to writing in the year 1881, and was finally and definitely and conclusively passed into the form of a legal agreement between these parties in the month of January, 1882, on the 18th day of that month.

Previous to this time there had been an injunction obtained in one of the Territorial courts on the part of the Texas and Pacific against the Southern Pacific building through the Territories. That had lain along. This understanding had arisen meanwhile, and finally, when a conclusive legal agreement was made between these corporations, as a part of the same, there was a judgment entered in court which carried that agreement by the judgment of the court into effect so far as the judgment of the court could carry it into effect. The time limited for the construction of the Texas Pacific road through to the Pacific Ocean was the 3d day of May, 1882; and thus it came to pass that by the joint effort of these two corporations, the Texas Pacific building westerly as I have stated seven hundred miles to El Paso and the Southern Pacific building in the way they did easterly, the entire line was completed in accordance with the general provisions and purposes of the law and the purposes of Congress from Eastern Texas to the Pacific Ocean—a line connecting San Diego on the original survey.

Subsequently there was an effort made to get across by a shorter line directly from Fort Yuma through to San Diego, but Colonel Scott himself I remember stated that that was an impracticable thing to do and they would be obliged to build over the line of the Southern Pacific northerly toward San Francisco, and then diverging southwesterly complete their line to San Diego. That was a point of controversy, the Southern Pacific resisting their right to go over their line and duplicate the road from Fort Yuma northwesterly one hundred and sixty miles as I think the distance was. But, however, during the period of time within which the road might be completed, it was completed from Eastern Texas through that State and through the Territories into the State of California and so down to San Diego.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the Senator is aware that that road from Colton was not built by either the Texas Pacific or the Southern Pacific. It was built by a separate company.

Mr. BLAIR. But leased and operated and controlled by the Southern Pacific.

Mr. MORGAN. It is now the property of the Atlantic and Pacific road under a purchase from a Boston company.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know how that may be. Very likely that is so. The road is completed and it is in running order, and by running arrangements the cars are making their way to the Pacific Ocean, and that within the period limited by law, over the entire line from Marshall, Tex., to San Diego and to San Francisco.

It is true that the Southern Pacific came to Congress and offered, if it might receive the sanction and approval of Congress, if it might be chartered through the Territories, if the right of the Texas Pacific to build westerly beyond the line of Texas should be taken from it and conferred on the Southern Pacific, to build that line, sometimes without land grant at all, frequently pressed its claims to be permitted to build through the Territories and to receive the land grant, but as a matter of fact nothing whatever was done by Congress and no arrangement was made; and all this that I now speak of, the construction of the road under color of the creation of Territorial corporations and by tacit agreement between the two greater corporations, the Southern Pacific and Texas Pacific, was done without any action whatever on the part of Congress.

The Southern Pacific actually built the road from El Paso westerly precisely the same and complied with the laws just as much as did the Texas Pacific westerly through the State of Texas to El Paso, for which it received by the action of the State of Texas its land grant; and now the Southern Pacific comes to the executive department of the Government and claims that by virtue of the assignment made by the Texas and Pacific of its land grant along that portion of the line actually constructed by the Southern Pacific, it is entitled as the assignee of the Texas Pacific to the land grant. I am not here to say whether that is a just claim or an unjust claim; but I am here to say, because I believe it is justice to say it, that I do not join in the general denunciation of the action, the purposes, and the things really done by the Southern Pacific corporation with reference to the construction of this road.

It found itself, after having complied with the law strictly, with $35,000,000 invested in a way that was likely to be utterly destroyed. It sought of the Government of its country the privilege of building across its Territories easterly in order to accomplish the great public good for the performance of which the Texas and Pacific had been chartered and which it had failed to perform, and admitted its inability to perform. It asked the privilege of building on precisely the same conditions easterly that the Texas and Pacific had been authorized to build westerly and had failed, and admitted that it was impossible to do otherwise than fail without a subsidy which was sufficient to more than twice build every line of the road along which it asked for the subsidy, for roads were then being built in my State at that lower rate. I sent and got the certificates of the men who were constructing a road for less than $25,000 a mile, some $22,500 a mile, in our hard country. Here was a company asking for a subsidy from Congress in addition to its land grant, before it would undertake the construction of the road, of $40,000 a mile in one bill and as I recollect $60,000 in another bill, insisting that it could not construct the road across the Territories without it.

Under these circumstances the Southern Pacific did just what any business man would have done, just what it was its duty to do. It pressed for the opportunity to construct itself the road to form its easterly connections; and finally, no action being taken by Congress, it proceeded to this thing which was indispensable to the prolongation of its rights, to build its road, and built it under color of the law by means of the Territorial corporations to which I have alluded. Within the time limited in the original Texas Pacific grant, by these arrangements and understandings between these two corporations, the highway came to be constructed from Marshall, Tex., to San Diego and San Francisco; and the understanding as to the assignment of the land grant was arrived at years before the completion of the road, and it was formally carried into execution and the articles of agreement delivered and sanctioned by the decree of a court within the time limited for the construction of these roads.

I am aware that there is public clamor, and that we are reminded of various things which may not have been right, and are pointed to things which were not right, yet which are utterly irrelevant to the question now before the Senate of the United States, and which never could be urged and ought not to be urged before a jury sitting to try the great rights of property that exist between these parties; but although we are constantly reminded of these things which are entirely aside from the merits of this case, there is great color of justice, to say the least, in the claim of the Southern Pacific Railroad that it is entitled to hold this land grant. The report of the minority of this committee, drawn by my friend who has just addressed the Senate, and signed by myself with two other members, without its being read by myself, taken on the statement of my friend that it was practically a report in favor of his court amendment, contains at the commencement of it a statement of certain facts with reference to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from which I take this opportunity absolutely and emphatically to dissent.

I do not believe that there is any lack of equity in the claim of the Southern Pacific Railroad to this land grant. Whether it has a right to it in law I do not know, and I am not in favor of giving this land grant in the present condition of our public lands to that corporation unless it can hold it in law; but if that corporation has the right to the land in law, I believe that its claims are re-enforced by the real equity of the case.

Mr. President, I am not here to argue the legal question. This debate has come on quite unexpectedly to me. I thought it would be later in the session. I proposed to look over the authorities somewhat, and I can now only speak from my general recollection of the law, but I understand that this grant having been made to the Texas Pacific, and its successors, and assigns, and being a grant in presenti, did give to the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company a right to assign the lands along such portion of the line as any other party might construct the road in such way that that party might hold those lands, provided that that party complied substantially with the conditions-subsequent contained in the grant. That these parties have complied substantially with the conditions-subsequent may be a question of fact. I do not know enough about the particulars of the case to say how that is. I do say, however, that it is one of those important questions of fact that should be judicially investigated. I say that it is one of those important questions of fact which the Senate should ascertain by a careful trial, by summoning and examining witnesses, finding that fact with as much formality as would a court in any case, if the Senate is to act as a forfeiting body and by a legislative forfeiture undertake to settle this entire transaction.

This is patent upon a general view of the subject that in all great essential particulars the Southern Pacific has constructed this road in accordance with the provisions of the law as it was contained in the charter of the Texas and Pacific, that in all essential particulars there has been a compliance with the grant. I know it is said that the Southern Pacific and Texas Pacific do not now constitute what the original act proposed or contemplated, a great competing line with any other through line of railroad that has been constructed. That is a question of fact which is by no means clear. What other through great competing line is there? All the evidence before the committee was to the effect that if any other corporation owned the Southern Pacific Railroad Company it was the Central Pacific, that the capital came by and through and from the Central Pacific and that portion of the Southern Pacific which is within the State of California.

Is the Central Pacific any great through competing line; for it is a through competing line that is spoken of in the act, and consolidation with which is prohibited, and not any line which is partly across the continent and not a through competing line? There was then no other competing line in existence unless it was the Central and the Union Pacific, which were well known then and are now known to be in hostility with each other, although having running arrangements yet still two hostile corporations. The Southern Pacific is really owned by the Central Pacific if it is owned by any other corporation than itself, and to-day the interests of the Central Pacific are more located along the line of the Southern Pacific, if it is all one corporation, than in that portion of its line which connects San Francisco with the Union Pacific.

It has now its connections from San Francisco southeasterly to Fort Yuma seven hundred miles, then through the Territories five hundred and fifty miles, and from there to New Orleans, and then on by through connection to the Chesapeake and Ohio, and more southerly still along the Gulf coast, I think, debouching very near the port of Brunswick. So the real interests of the Southern Pacific or the Central Pacific, which owns the whole, now are located in and along this line of road, and there is no consolidation with any competing through line even upon that state of facts; but what the real state of affairs may be I do not know; it never has been investigated. The fact has never been found for or against the Southern Pacific; but it is a fact that ought to be investigated and ought to be found, for it is of the very gist and essence of the whole controversy, before we undertake to take this land away and put it into the public lands and open it for sale and settlement under the ordinary laws regulating the settlement and sale of the public lands, leading thus the way to indefinite confusion, lawsuits, and litigation in the future.

As I said, Mr. President, I am not sufficiently acquainted with all the details of these matters of fact which are essential to be known and to be determined before there is the final and fatal action with reference to this land grant which is contemplated by the bill. I understand this to be the law, that the assignee of the grantee of an estate upon condition subsequent has only to substantially comply with the conditions in order to be entitled to the benefit of the estate. In fact, the original grantee himself has only to comply substantially. Estates made dependent on conditions subsequent are not favored in law. The estate itself is transmitted at the time of the original grant. New interests are likely to arise; improvements may be made in the estate; the man receiving it hopes and expects to comply with the condition subsequent, and he may make his homestead, he may improve it largely, he may invest large masses of money, so that the courts will not hold him to any but a substantial, not a literal, compliance with the condition subsequent. The manifest justice of this rule of law is apparent to everybody. It has been the rule of law from the beginning; for a thousand years it has been the rule of the law in reference to conditions subsequent, and in these latter days the rule has been even still further relaxed until now a condition subsequent can hardly be maintained by any court in Christendom.

This is true with reference to the construction of this railroad. It was not likely to be built at all but for the action of the Southern Pacific road. It was by the action of the Southern Pacific road constructed within the time limited by law. The Indian question which was costing us millions annually in those two Territories was thus settled, and the expenses of the War Department alone during the existence of this railroad have been reduced in a larger amount than the entire value of this land grant.

Here were these 15,000,000 acres—I believe they put it at 15,000,000 instead of 20,000,000 acres—which were utterly worthless until this road was constructed. By the terms of the law, this road having been constructed, the United States is enabled to open to settlement those two great Territories, and along the line of the road it has now its public lands valued at two dollars and a half an acre, which, prior to that time, were not worth a cent an acre—utterly uninhabitable. The Indian question has been settled. The public lands that in the grant were reserved still belong to the United States, and have been made very valuable, if lands of that kind can be valuable at all. The corporation has done this. It has built the road. Now when it comes here with these formal assignments made within the time limited by law, made as I believe under the rules of the law in such a way as to carry the rights of property possessed by the Texas and Pacific to the Southern Pacific, I think it exceedingly foolhardy, to say the least, for Congress to proceed to a legislative forfeiture without asking any questions, without ascertaining any of the real facts that are in the case, and placing this land grant, after having received the benefits of the construction of the road, back in the domain of the public lands to be sold to settlers under the ordinary rules and regulations that appertain to the same. It is very unjust, it seems to me, not alone to the railroad that wants to litigate but it is very unjust to the settler who is to go to occupy these lands. That territory of course is to be occupied largely by homesteaders in the future. Though very much of it is sandy desert, still there are sections of it I am told which are valuable, and where people will locate, where towns and villages will spring up as soon as this matter is decided so that titles can be obtained without danger of litigation. It is a very important thing to do. Saying nothing further in regard to this railroad corporation, if we really want to do that thing which is beneficial to the people of the United States and to the settlers who will go on these lands, we ought certainly to adopt the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Alabama opening a way to an immediate, practical, and conclusive settlement of this question as to the title.

While I am opposed to the forfeitures of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Northern Pacific Railroad grants because they are still constructing their highways, making efforts in good faith to complete them and have already very nearly completed them, and are only waiting to be let alone by Congress to raise the funds to actually complete them—while I am opposed to those forfeitures because I believe that the conditions are likely soon to be carried out and the country at large to receive the benefit of those great transcontinental lines completed and in full operation, yet here in regard to this particular case, the road being completed and nothing remaining but the proper judicial inquiries, I am in favor of the grant being forfeited, subject to the action of the courts. And if this amendment can be attached so that the question can be early and finally and conclusively decided, I shall be very glad to support the bill; but unless these parties, who I think have equities, and who, I am inclined to believe, have the law on their side, can have the opportunity to have their litigation settled in the same way that every other citizen of the United States and every other corporation in the United States is entitled to settle its litigation, I shall feel impelled to vote, without any regard to consequences, against this bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave at this time to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa suspend for a moment?

The Chair asks leave to lay before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting further information relating to the leasing of lands on the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 19, 1885.

SIR: Referring to my letter of the 17th instant, submitting certain papers relating to the leasing of lands on the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory, I have the honor to present herewith a copy of a letter from Agent Armstrong on the subject, dated February 10, 1885, also a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of January 27, 1885, submitting a proposition made by John T. Murphy to lease lands on said reservation.

I respectfully request that these papers be attached to and printed with the documents sent with my said report of the 17th instant.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed with the accompanying papers.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice the request of the Secretary that these papers be printed with another document which has been previously transmitted. If that document has not already been printed, I suggest that the order for printing be in the line of the request of the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it has not been printed, this will be printed with it as a matter of course. If it has, it would derange matters and make a good deal of additional expense to print this with that.

Mr. INGALLS. The other report came in this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the papers will be printed together as a matter of course.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, informing the Senate of the settlement pro tanto of certain claims of the State of Massachusetts for war expenses, and recommending an appropriation. The letter will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 19, 1885.

SIR: At the request of HON. H. L. DAWES and G. F. HOAR, United States Senators, I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress the report of the allowance by the accounting officers of the Treasury of the tenth installment of the war claim of the State of Massachusetts in the sum of $30,770.39, which has been placed to the credit of the State to await an appropriation for its payment.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print additional copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the relations between labor and capital, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3343) for the erection of a public building in the city of Auburn, N. Y., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now to present to the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 13, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 43, 45, 51, 52, 62, 63, and 64.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, and 65, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For salary of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Turkey, $10,000."

"For salary of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of Colombia, $7,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$319,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,880;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Secretary to read about amendment No. 44 again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That, the Chair thinks, simply amounts to the Senate receding from its amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. That was why I asked the Secretary to read the clause again. I think it does not amount to that, if the Chair will allow me. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, with an amendment which restores the word struck out. If there is any doubt about that—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it will bear that construction. If the conference report is agreed to in both Houses the bill will undoubtedly be enrolled in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agrees to the amendment retaining in the bill the word "Shanghai."

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And provided further, That no allowance shall be made for the keeping or feeding of any prisoner who is able to pay or does pay the above sum of 75 cents per day; and the consular officer shall certify to the fact of inability in every case;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $25,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,

EUGENE HALE,

JAS. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAS. N. BURNES,

R. W. TOWNSEND,

W. D. WASHBURN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa who has the bill in charge what became of the amendment inserted by the Senate giving to the President a discretionary fund to be used for the advancement of the commerce of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. That provision is retained in the bill, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, but the amount is reduced from $50,000 to $25,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask what became of the amendment inserted by the Senate changing the classification of the consul at Jerusalem.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate provision is retained, leaving that consul at $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the report of the conference?

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 17th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 591) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley;

An act (S. 1335) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of the late John V. B. Bleecker, a paymaster in the Navy;

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MAHONEY. I ask leave to make a report at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAHONEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON. I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for the purpose of reference.

Unanimous consent was granted.

Mr. WILSON. I report back from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads a letter from the Postmaster-General transmitting a report on the subject of the adjustment of postmasters' salaries and the additional temporary clerical force asked therefor; and also an amendment relating to the subject of the letter. I ask that the amendment be printed and that it be referred, with the accompanying communication, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 26 of the Post-Office appropriation bill it is proposed to insert:

To pay accounts in cases of salaries of postmasters and late postmasters, which have been readjusted and allowed under the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters, in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, §133,267.43."

To pay accounts that may be found under said act between the 14th day of February, 1885, and the 30th of June, 1885, to be due, $255,436; and to pay accounts that may be found, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, to be due, $229,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to immediately employ ten temporary clerks, at a rate of compensation not to exceed $1,200 per annum, for the work of adjusting salaries of postmasters under said act until such adjustments shall be completed; and a sufficient sum therefor is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed, and, with the accompanying letter, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND-GRANT FORFEITURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have no desire to occupy any great length of time in the discussion of the questions which arise upon this bill. I find that the original act of Congress passed on the 3d day of March, 1871, after creating the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and naming the incorporators, in the ninth section provides—

That for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad and telegraph line herein provided for, there is hereby granted to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, every alternate section of public lands, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as such line may be adopted by said company, through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad in California, where the same shall not have been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States.

Here is, therefore, an express grant by act of Congress to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns. There is in this act no clause of forfeiture, no reserved power whatever. It is not like the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad, or the Oregon Railroad, or the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, where that power was expressly reserved, but it is an unconditional grant. This was passed on the 3d of March, 1871, and the corporation named in the act was the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. On the 2d of May, 1873, a little over a year after, Congress passed another act, in which they changed the name of the road from the Texas Pacific Railroad Company to the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, and vested in the company by its new name all the rights, privileges, and franchises theretofore conferred on the Texas Pacific Railroad Company.

It is plain as any proposition can be that these two grants contemplated the building of a railway from Marshall, in the State of Texas, to San Diego, in the State of California, for governmental purposes. Taking these two acts together, the object of the incorporation was to secure, I repeat, for governmental purposes, because special privileges are given to the Government, the construction of a Southern transcontinental railway, by whatever name you choose to call it. There is now such a road. It is called the Southern Pacific Railroad. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company built a portion of the line. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company, by an arrangement with the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, claims to have become the purchaser or assignee of that company of the lands in question. In the act changing the name from the Texas Pacific to the Texas and Pacific, Congress inserted in the fifth section this clause:

That the said company shall commence the construction of said road from San Diego eastward within one year from the passage of this act, and construct not less than ten miles before the expiration of the second year, and, after the second year, not less than twenty-five miles per annum in continuous line thereafter between San Diego and the Colorado River, until the junction is formed with the line from the east at the latter point or east thereof.

That is the line from Marshall, in Texas. Now Congress provides:

And upon failure to so complete it, Congress may adopt such measures as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion.

That is the power that Congress reserved and the only power in all this legislation. This railway company has performed that act, and the Government is to have the benefit of that road and can not be deprived of it. The line is continuous between these two termini, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company claims that by purchase from the Texas Pacific it has become the assignee or successor to this title.

These lands to a greater or less extent have been mortgaged, and bondholders or lienholders have claims upon them. The case, so far as the equities of others than the original grantees are concerned—

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator right there allow me to correct him? The lands that are now sought to be forfeited were never mortgaged by any railroad company.

Mr. LAPHAM. There is the difference between the Senator and me.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Between the Senator and the facts.

Mr. LAPHAM. The honorable Senator from Alabama stated this morning that as he understood it they were under mortgage.

Mr. MORGAN. It is contended by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or its counsel, that the mortgages which they have given on their road to their bondholders included these lands.

Mr. LAPHAM. I so understand; that position is taken and the holders of the bonds which have been issued claim that they have a lien upon these lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I state that while the committees of both Houses were open to everybody pretending to claim under a railroad company when a forfeiture was endeavored to be enforced, no attorney, no bondholder came before the committee of either House with a pretense that there was any sort of mortgage upon these lands now in controversy.

Mr. LAPHAM. For the obvious reason that the House committee or the Senate committee could not try any such questions if they had come before them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. LAPHAM. I say for a very good reason, that neither the House committee nor the Senate committee could try or determine any such questions if they had come before them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I state that the fact does not exist that there is any mortgage on these lands in controversy.

Mr. LAPHAM. So I understand the Senator to say; but other Senators, members of the same committee, claim the opposite. I know that Mr. Evarts, who is within a few days to take the seat which I have so poorly filled, with honor I trust to himself and to the Senate, claims that in his argument.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will allow me a word?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This is the second time that allusion has been made to the prospective Senator from New York. I would ask my friend from New York if Mr. Evarts made that statement or expressed that opinion in an official capacity, or did he do it as the attorney and counselor of this company?

Mr. LAPHAM. He did act undoubtedly as attorney and counselor, but he is an honorable attorney and counselor, and is the last man in the world who would take a position that he knew was untenable. He is the last man in the world to say that these lands were covered by a mortgage when he knew they were not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will allow me to say again that the brief of William M. Evarts, submitted to the committee and printed, made no such pretense and no such allegation.

Mr. LAPHAM. I can not say as to that. I was not a member of the committee, and did not hear his argument. I am only stating what I am informed about it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. His argument was printed.

Mr. LAPHAM. Here is, therefore, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company claiming title to these lands; here are, therefore, a large list of bondholders who are claiming that they have liens upon these lands; and the proposition is now made under a law containing no clause of forfeiture whatever, but providing that in case the company failed the Government should have the right to complete this road, to forfeit these lands and make them a part of the public domain.

Suppose this bill passes without any condition and these lands are opened to public settlement and a thousand individuals go upon them and obtain patents from the Government; no lawyer can fail to see that every one of those settlers will be open to precisely the question which this amendment proposes shall be determined in advance. Every man who takes a patent from the Government under this bill would be liable to a suit between himself and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or between himself and the lien-holders, the mortgagees, or the trustees that are named in the mortgages, and they could not escape it; and what is the result? The result is that the title to these lands is to go into an endless field of controversy.

Mr. ALLISON. As illustrated by the Des Moines lands.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will take care of the Des Moines lands, I advise my friend; they occupy a very different position from these; but my honorable friend from Iowa, with his colleague, concedes that that bill is like a railroad forfeiture, or else they can not maintain themselves here.

Now, I repeat, every purchaser from the Government, if we declare this forfeiture, who goes on and takes a settlement of these lands, a pre-emption or homestead right, and pays his money and goes into occupancy, has got to have this litigation on his hands.

The amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Alabama provides for the settlement of all these questions before the lands are opened to the public. It is an amendment in aid of peace, to discourage litigation, to prevent a multiplicity of actions, and it is such an amendment as the Senate placed upon the bill to forfeit the land grant of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by a vote of nearly two to one.

Sir, there are stronger reasons in this case for attaching that provision to this bill than there were in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Company. There were only the rights of lien-holders involved. Here is the right of an assignee under a solemn grant that paid money for these lands, which is to be determined, and there are the additional rights of the lien-holders supplemented to those of the assignee. I trust, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be annexed to this legislation, to the end that all doubt about this title may be cleared away, that all obstacles in the way of the settlement of these lands and the giving of complete titles by the Government may be cleared away before they are opened for settlement.

Now, Mr. President, in its legitimate sense I have no objection to being classed as the friend of railroad companies. That term has no terrors for me. I would be a friend of a railroad company to the extent of its legal and just rights, as I would of the claim of an individual. This clamor against the railroad corporations of the country is one in which I have no disposition to indulge; and that is the offspring of the zeal which lies behind those who are pushing this bill to completion. In no enterprise in which the people of the United States have ever engaged has there been so much capital sacrificed, so many investments unproductive, as in the building of railroads in the United States; and yet they are not like a manufacturing company or a mercantile company, that when they fail leave nothing behind. The men who have invested their money in the building of railroads, although utterly unproductive, have done what? "They have built a road; the Government has the benefit of that road. This Southern Pacific Railroad is built, and there it will remain forever.

There is no class of investments in this country so unprofitable at this very hour, in proportion to the amount invested, as the moneys which have been invested in the building of railroads. There is scarcely one of these roads which to-day is receiving an income which is a paying investment on its capital. I know the honorable Senator from Nebraska will talk about watered stock and all this, that, and the other thing in answer to this; but I speak of the great mass of roads that have no element of that kind in them. I speak from personal experience. I invested in the building of a railroad from the village where I reside to Niagara Falls in 1852. I paid my money and I gave two years of professional services, and I lost it all, and yet there the road is and it is just as valuable to the public as though my investment had proved a 10 or 15 per cent. investment. The community through which it runs have the road, and it is the fruit of my expenditure and of the expenditures of those who joined with me.

Just so in this case. Here is a road from Marshall, in Texas, to the Pacific Ocean upon the precise route designated in these acts of Congress. I care not by what name it is called, it is there, the country has it, and we have a Southern Pacific, a Central Pacific, and a Northern Pacific—three great transcontinental lines. Now, before we open the lands, which were granted to this company in the outset as the inducement to this enterprise, to public settlement, and inveigle the citizens of the Government into their settlement and paying their money, let us settle all questions which remain in regard to the title. That is all I ask. That is what this amendment proposes to have done.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the details of this measure, or to any extent the amendment that has been offered. I certainly should not object to the amendment very seriously or earnestly if I did not believe that, from the situation of the business of Congress at this particular juncture of time, if it be attached to the bill it must necessarily cause the defeat of the forfeiture. There is one objection in my mind, however, to the proposed amendment that seems to be worthy of attention.

It has been stated that the amendment is in analogy to what is known under the common-law doctrine in Great Britain as the petition of right, that where the government has an interest as against its subjects it allows the petition of right in favor of those against whom a forfeiture was declared. But a marked difference must be noticed in the remedy offered in this case. Instead of giving to those who hold interests or who claim to be interested in the lands forfeited the right to enter a court and exhibit that claim and ask a judgment upon the claim, the effect of this provision is to put the Government of the United States to hunting up, to going out and searching for people who claim to have some interest in these lands. True, the main provision is directed at the parties who are said to be the grantees or those interested under them.

It may be a very difficult matter for the Attorney-General or his subordinates to learn who these parties are. They may have great difficulty in finding, when they start in their action, against whom the process shall run. It would be much more agreeable to me if the provision was reversed, and it allowed the right to those whose lands are forfeited within some specified period of time to enter the proper court and set forth their claims and prosecute them to a final determination.

But the main objection that I have to the putting of this amendment upon the bill is, as I have said, that from the posture of business at this particular juncture all must be observant of the fact that it will necessarily lead to the defeat of the measure. That being so, I am disinclined to favor its being placed upon the bill.

Besides, sir, I am well satisfied in my own mind that the phantom which is conjured up in favor of this measure is largely without substantial foundation. I do not believe that if this forfeiture is made with the provisions of the amendment attached, this company will enter the courts of the United States to litigate; nor do I believe that if they shall do so it will lead to the unlimited litigation that is prophesied. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill are so plain, the forfeiture is so well established and so clear that no question can be practically raised on the forfeiture clause of the bill. I am aware that under section 9 of the original grant it is said that all right that was reserved to the United States in the original granting act was the right, in case the company failed to complete the road within the time specified, to designate some other company to construct it. But I think that it is not a correct conclusion. I do not think that is a correct interpretation of section 9 of the act, which I will read:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and that the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

The first point I make upon that is that the leading purpose of this section was that should this road not be commenced within the two years prescribed in another section and prosecuted in the manner and within the time and to the effect that other provisions of the bill prescribed, the Government might enter and prescribe some other method for the prosecution of the road. I can not conceive that in the case like the present, where the time has completely and fully elapsed, where another corporation has built upon the line of the road, the Government can be held to be in the position that it must build a parallel line or leave these parties with the lands granted, because that is precisely the absurdity of the position if the interpretation given by the advocates of the amendment is correct. In order to see the force of this let us read section 8, which states the condition to which section 9 is said to be a subsequent and additional condition.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than fifty miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the main line of the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1878.

The road was not constructed. The Government of the United States did not intervene within the time during which the grant was to run. Six years and more have elapsed since the time expired; another company has built upon the line of the road, and the argument is that if we declare a forfeiture now these parties may say to us that the only right we have reserved to the United States was to offer to some other company the chance to build a parallel line to the road already built; or, in other words, to require the Government of the United States to do an absurd and useless thing. Such a construction seems to me not one that was contemplated at the time the law was passed.

Besides, sir, the resulting forfeiture would be to the United States, and the United States, after a complete failure of compliance with the conditions-subsequent, would have the right to say whether they would give this grant to another corporation or to proceed in some other method to the completion of the road or take the lands to themselves; and there having been in the mean time another road built upon the line by another company, that fact would seem to me to be conclusive of the proposition.

Another point is made by the Senator from Alabama, one that strongly fortifies me in the conclusion that we can not make any mistake in declaring the forfeiture. He admits that under grants of this character the grantee can not without the consent of the grantor transfer the grant. The Texas Pacific could not transfer to another corporation or company this land grant without the consent of the Government of the United States. It seems to me that the Senator stated that proposition so strongly, and it was so well fortified by the reasons he gave, that we need apprehend no danger from the course we are taking.

Perhaps it might be well under other circumstances and in other times, when it would not be likely to defeat all that has been done and not be likely to defeat a measure so important in its results, to attach this amendment to the bill; but under the present circumstances, when every Senator will recognize the fact that by placing this amendment upon the bill we shall send it to certain defeat, it seems to me that we ought not to support the amendment, and therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Oregon that what we ought to do about this bill or any other is to do what is right. If the Senate thinks this is a proper thing to be done I do not know why if we amend the bill in the Senate it should send it to certain defeat. I can not understand why it should be so, unless we assume that the other House does not intend to take any different view than merely the bill it has sent over to us. That bill does not meet the demands of justice in full, and it ought to be amended. It ought to be amended for the sake of the Government and people of the United States, as well as those who are claiming an adverse right or interest in this property.

It has been suggested that the Senator from Oregon would have thought better of the amendment if it had permitted a number of persons, whoever they may be, to come in and assert their suit against the United States Government in the courts that they might select. Now, I would not be willing to expose the Government of the United States to a large number of suits under any acts of Congress that we might pass in a matter of this kind, when, by bringing a bill to quiet title, remove doubts from the title, as every lawyer must know, we can settle every controversy that arises out of this case in one suit.

I looked over that ground, and of course the idea struck me at first that the proper thing to do in order to make the analogy complete between this amendment and the petition of right would be to allow the citizen to bring suit against the Government of the United States; but then I thought of how much worry, how much expense it might be, and my mind recurred to what I conceive to be a much better system: that of the equity practice, the equity practice as it obtains in England as well as in the courts of the United States—that is, filing a bill on the part of the Government of the United States, which has declared that it has a right to these lands for the purpose of removing every cloud upon the title.

If I am in possession of a tract of land and my neighbors set up title to it, which I conceive to be entirely without value, I have a right to go into a court of equity and file a bill to remove the cloud. Why?

Because I can not enjoy the full benefit of my property until I have the cloud off the title. I can not sell it for its value; I am threatened with lawsuits; I am kept uneasy about it. The Government of the United States can not dispose of these lands to bona fide settlers until this litigation is over with the security it would give after it is over. Suppose we sell these lands now with this right of litigation hanging upon them—and nobody can deny that there is a right of litigation. We can not prevent that, do what we may.

In selling these lands under such circumstances we only embarrass the purchaser, and after a number of years, after we have offered these lands for sale, these very men will be coming back to us with demands for reclamation. They will say, "Congress has declared that these lands belonged to the Government, declared it in the most emphatic way. We went on and bought the lands and made improvements upon them in consequence of this forcible and powerful declaration on the part of Congress. We now find that the courts have set aside that title, that the transfer of this property had been made to this other company, it no longer remained the property of the Texas and Pacific corporation, and therefore could not be forfeited as the property of that company; another company had become the owner of it."

After it has gone on for a number of years these holders of the lands bought from the Government of the United States subject to this forfeiture will be back here for the purpose of making reclamation against the Treasury of the United States, saying that Congress has deceived them into the belief that they had title. If we can devise a means—and the Senator from Oregon I think can not answer the amendment upon that question—if we can devise a means by which we can quiet the title and remove the cloud, we ought to do it in advance of disposing of the lands, as a necessary precautionary measure as well for the protection of the persons who go upon the land as for the protection of the Government of the United States against subsequent reclamations for damages.

I suppose it will not be earnestly insisted upon here that the bill that I propose in this amendment will not have the effect to quiet the title to this property. Nothing is more common than for a person to file a bill in equity saying that A, B, C, D, and E, F, and other persons claiming under them unknown to your orator, set up claims against this tract of land and embarrass the title; I aver that these claims are not valid; I aver that they are set up merely for a pretense of embarrassing and throwing a cloud upon my title. They will not sue me; they will not come into court and try the question of title; and I wish this court would call them in and decree in the premises, compel them to come into court and set up their titles and see what they are, and let us have it determined whether my title is good or not, and whether these claimed incumbrances are upon my title. There is nothing more common in equity practice than that, and that is precisely the measure that is presented in this amendment.

It will not do for us to say that it is better to allow a number of suitors to go upon private account into any court they may see proper to select, State or Federal, and sue the Government of the United States in a number of cases. That is not justice to the Government. We can not afford to do that. We had better let it go as it is.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the honorable Senator allow me to suggest that we have in the State of New York such an act entitled "An act for the purpose of settling conflicting claims to real estate," providing for this very thing.

Mr. MORGAN. In Alabama we have an act providing that you can settle by an interpleader the title to personal property, but in Alabama we rely upon the old common-law remedy of a bill in equity for the purpose of clearing the clouds from the title to real estate. It is a very common mode which every lawyer I have no doubt has found convenient in his own practice. Perhaps there is not a lawyer in the Senate who has not at some time during his professional career filed a bill for the purpose of clearing up the title to a tract of land against incumbrances that are set up against it. I thought that was the best thing we could resort to for bringing quiet and peace upon this question and do it speedily and almost summarily, for such a bill is almost a summary proceeding. It has a statute of limitations of a year in it.

The Senator from Oregon asks if it is to be expected that the Attorney-General will go out and hunt up everybody who may have a possible claim to this property, and if he fails to find him the action shall fail as to him. Mr. President, you file your bill against the whole domain and against everybody on that domain. It is an action almost in the nature of an action in rem, by which you claim the title to a certain tract of land and you summon in the corporations and persons claiming title to it, and there can be no one unless it is the corporation or some person claiming under the corporation. When I call in a man for the purpose of controverting with him a cloud that is set up on my title, I need not call in every lessee or subtenant he may have put on the land, or every party to whom he may have made a conveyance of a legal or equitable interest therein. I can call in the man who claims the great body of the grant, and through him, if I were to name nobody else, I can call in those who are interested in that very title.

Now, what title do we attack here? It is one title in its origin though it may be ramified or diversified into a great many branches. What is it? A title arising in favor of this corporation under the land grant and under the assignment. When we attack that and we find out through the agency of a court of equity that that assignment was invalid, and that fact is established, the law of privity comes in and those who have privity of estate with the person who holds the land are bound by the decision. I do not suppose it is worth my while here to descant upon law that everybody understands as well as he does the laws affecting privity of title, and the results of a decree upon a title as to those persons who are in privity with the title although they may not be parties to the record itself.

But this amendment goes still further. It authorizes the Federal court by an act of Congress, which I suppose will not be disputed as to its authority, to proceed and call in those persons who are not necessary parties, but may be proper parties; and it goes further than that and it authorizes those persons who may have titles that the Government of the United States may know nothing about, to come in by petition and make themselves parties defendant to the suit, thereby receiving all the benefits and advantages of any decree that may be made for them and all the disadvantages of any decree made against them.

In that respect it is like a creditor's bill. Where you file a bill in the name of one creditor for marshaling the assets of an insolvent or bankrupt debtor, you file it for the benefit of all. The court makes publication, saying, "Here is a bill, and the creditors of this insolvent person can come into court within a certain time and file their demands for these assets going to be administered and settled up." The court takes hold of the estate and it converts it into money so that it can be distributed. Then those creditors who by reason of their laches, or, if you please, because they do not know of the pendency of the suit, remain outside and take no interest in the litigation, are cut off by the decree of the court absolutely. That fund is taken and administered for the benefit of those who come in under the order or decree of the court and set up their claim.

This feature is proposed to be put in by statute. It may be that you can not find in a bill to quiet titles in the equity system of Great Britain precisely a case like that which is met by this proposed statute, but when you put it into this measure you give a remedy, you enact a statute of limitations, or what is equivalent to it, and those who do not come in for the purpose of having their titles settled of course are barred. Now, have we power to do that? We have just as much power to do that as we have to say that a claim against the Government of the United States which we recognize to be honest shall be presented within one year from the date of this act, otherwise it shall be forever barred.

So I think that the objections which are made by the Senator from Oregon are not substantial. I took great pains in trying to study out the proper method of the application of this proceeding. Perhaps it is not right, but I confess that the argument of the Senator from Oregon does not shake my faith in it, for it is easy to be answered. It is easy to show that while the bill proposed does not accomplish everything, it is a far more economical and speedy procedure than would result if we were to say that every claimant of this land of every kind and character might come into any State court that he saw proper to select, or into a Federal court, and have this question litigated.

I wish to say one word more. I remarked a while ago that I reported back from the Committee on Public Lands, under their instruction, a general bill, which is now on the Calendar, covering precisely the same ground as this amendment, so that the committee gave their sanction as I understand to the principles of the amendment. The subject has been very much discussed and talked over privately as well as in committee. I have accepted, and I am willing now to accept, any modification to the amendment that any Senator can show a substantial reason for trying to introduce into it, for I want to get nothing more nor less than a proceeding which will quiet down these questions immediately and before we commence to dispose of this land.

I do not want to have the people of the United States coming back and complaining of Congress and saying, "You declared that these lands belong to you, and the courts of the country have overturned your decision. You declared that they belong to the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, and therefore you forfeit them as property granted to that company, and it turns out that there was an assignment made of the whole body of the grant, and that assignment which you declared to be inoperative and void and not in the way of our title is upheld by the courts as being a valid title, and under such conditions we claim from the Congress of the United States the damages into which we have been unwittingly betrayed by your hasty and ill-considered legislation."

Mr. President, it is far better that we should wait a year even. I do not ask for delay, and I do not believe it will come, but if it should come it is better that we should wait a year and get this matter straight before we launch out on this new field than to go hastily to work about it. This land is not going to run away; these titles are not going to become any more complete. There will be no loss of property to the United States Government. We are not in need of the money that comes from this land, and, more than that, we do not expect to get a stiver out of it, for in the bill itself we open it entirely to homestead and pre-emption entry. We are merely providing for a certain class of citizens as against another class of citizens who claim adverse interests in this land. There can not be any necessity for that sort of hasten about it which would betray us into inconsiderate or unwise legislation.

So I think we had better put the amendment on the bill. The House of Representatives have not considered this matter in a light to shut out the hope that they will concur with the Senate on this amendment. They have merely insisted further upon their disagreement, and they have invited a further conference and appointed conferees. It is true that has been done irregularly, because the bill was not before the House, but I assume that the House, as is the ordinary practice, would disagree to the amendments on this bill in order to throw it into a committee of conference. That is the way in which our legislation takes place between these bodies now. There is actually no final legislation where there is a disagreement between the two Houses on any important or contested bill, except through a conference committee. That will be the effect of it.

Mr. President, I wish to protest about one thing. I have not any pride of opinion about the amendment or about anything connected with it. If I know my own heart I would very gladly have escaped all responsibility for it or all connection with it of any kind. It is not a subject that I sought after, but when a matter has been presented in the way that it has, and I find that according to my earnest conviction it is the sound and wise policy for us to observe, it seems to me that the Senate ought to take it into consideration and ought to provide so that there shall be no difficulties about this legislation hereafter.

It ought to be remembered that we are now entering for the first time upon a great system of land-grant forfeiture, and in doing that we ought to measure the ground over which we step with carefulness and see that while we are trying to do justice to the Government and trying to reclaim lands that have not been earned by these railroads and that are justly liable to forfeiture, we do not transgress the bounds of our jurisdiction, and that we provide what ought always to be provided in such cases, a convenient and secure and speedy remedy for any person who may have an interest in the subject in controversy.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I should not detain the Senate with any remarks upon this question except for the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] denying the right of Congress, as I understood him, to declare a forfeiture of these lands. There can be no question I take it upon that proposition, and while I do not desire to dwell upon that point it has suggested a few other thoughts in connection with this matter which it might be well to present to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator allow me to correct him?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. LAPHAM. I did not advance the position that Congress has no power to forfeit these lands. I stated that the act granting the lands contained no clause authorizing the forfeiture. Upon the question of the power of Congress, I did not advance an opinion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed the Senator meant that, otherwise there would seem to be no force in his suggestion.

Mr. LAPHAM. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed it to be the intention by that suggestion to infer that Congress had no power.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggested that if the Government was exercising here a doubtful right, a right by implication, it should tread more cautiously than it would in a case where an affirmative right was reserved to Congress to do the act.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator I think is so good a lawyer that he evidently did not desire to throw himself upon that position, because he is aware of the doctrine so often declared, that where the condition of a grant is expressed there is no need of reserving a right of entry for a breach thereof in order to enable the grantor to avail himself of it. So in fact there was nothing in the point, and as I understand the Senator did not intend to make the point, that settles that branch of the case, that Congress has the power and the right to do this thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the condition in the grant?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator from New York has the book will he please read the condition in the grant? I have not the book before me. He had it a moment ago.

Mr. LAPHAM. I sent the book back. It provides simply that in the case of a failure by a specified time to complete this road from the east to San Diego, the Government shall have the right to go on and construct it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There was no occasion, however, for the Government to do that in this case. In this case the Government was relieved of that provision.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Southern Pacific have done it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; and the Southern Pacific came here and they besieged Congress not to give the aid. The Southern Pacific came here and stood as an ally of the Government and emphatically said, "Withhold this aid and we will construct the road."

Mr. HOAR. May I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska back one moment to the question which was asked by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], I do not know whether publicly or not? What I wish to know is whether there is an express condition in the grant. If I understand the Senator from Nebraska, he says that there is an express condition in the grant, that it was a grant upon condition, and he finds the condition in the words that after the grant to the company, its successors and assigns—I suppose in the usual terms—the act goes on to say that if the company fail to build a road, as therein specified, the United States may then proceed to do what they shall deem necessary to complete the road. I ask the Senator if that is the clause which he construes as the express condition, or if there be other words?

Mr. VAN WYCK. There is a condition in the act as to how the road should be built, how much should be built one year and how much the next. There are express conditions as to the mode and manner in which the work should be done.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator answer my question? My attention was called to the subject within three minutes, when I looked at Mr. Evarts's brief and got this idea from that. Perhaps it is a dereliction of duty that I have not investigated it earlier. I understand that the Senator finds the words which make a condition in the law in the language saying that if the road is not built Congress may do what it sees fit to secure the completion of the road, and in the further language which gives direction in what mode the road shall be constructed. Is there any other language or condition except that?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will read the act.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator read all the language which he considers to make a condition of law?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will read it. The act of May 2, 1872, provides:

That the said Texas and Pacific Railway Company shall commence the construction of its road at or near Marshall, Tex., and proceed with its construction, under the original act of this supplement, or in pursuance of the authority derived from any consolidation as aforesaid, westerly from a point near Marshall, and towards San Diego, in the State of California, on the line authorized by the original act, and so prosecute the same as to have at least one hundred consecutive miles of railroad from said point complete and in running order within two years after the passage of this act; and so continue to construct, each year thereafter, a sufficient number of miles, not less than one hundred, to secure the completion of the whole line, from the aforesaid point on the eastern boundary of the State of Texas to the Bay of San Diego, in the State of California, as aforesaid, within ten years after the passage of this act; and said road from Marshall, Tex., throughout the length thereof, shall be of uniform gauge; Provided, however, That the said company shall commence the construction of said road from San Diego eastward within one year from the passage of this act—

That they never have done—

and construct not less than ten miles before the expiration of the second year, and, after the second year, not less than twenty-five miles per annum in continuous lines thereafter between San Diego and the Colorado River, until the junction is formed with the line from the east at the latter point or east thereof; and upon failure to so complete it, Congress may adopt such measures as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion; and it shall also be lawful for said company to commence and prosecute the construction of its line from any other point or points on its line; but nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to authorize the grant of any additional lands or subsidy, of any nature or kind whatsoever, on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Is that anything more than an ordinary enactment in the law, or is it made a condition of the grant?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts was so good a lawyer—

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Massachusetts is not a very good lawyer, and he has not examined this question. I did not know what the question was until five minutes ago. I am putting the interrogatory, not as antagonizing the Senator's argument but simply for light.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should wonder what it would be called if it is not a condition. What would the Senator think it could be named in legal phraseology? It requires certain acts to be done, expressly designating what they are and the manner in which they are to be done. Would the Senator consider it anything else except a condition?

It would seem that there could be no sort of question about this matter. The act certainly did not intend to give to the company this land unless they obeyed the law and did what it contemplated, because it says that in case the company does not do it then the land belongs to us to complete the road if we choose.

There is no pretense of any claim on behalf of the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company. They never built a mile of the road. They never conveyed an acre of this land; they never gave a mortgage for a dollar of value upon it; and the question stands here naked and bold as between the Government of the United States and the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company.

That company came and besieged Congress. They undertook to tell Congress and the American people that this land grant could not build the road. They came and asked that Congress should subsidize them besides by guaranteeing interest upon their bonds. While they were negotiating still more with Congress a new factor enters, and that is the Central Pacific Railroad Company, organized for this purpose as the Southern Pacific, but the same company. When the Texas Pacific Company came to Congress and asked that their bonds should be guaranteed, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company interposed and came to Congress and said, "Withhold your aid; refuse to guarantee the interest on those bonds; offer no subsidy to this railroad company; stay where you are, and we will build the road ourselves without subsidies or without lands." That is what they said.

Now, what is proposed just at this juncture? It is proposed that by some sort of ingenuity in the construction of language or the meaning of a phrase we shall donate these 20,000,000 acres to a corporation which never earned them, because they did not earn this grant. They constructed the road in defiance of the grant. All they asked was that they should have the privilege to build the road without money and without price. That was the attitude. It can not be denied that they never had any assignment from the Texas Pacific Railroad Company until the road was all constructed to the Texas line. After the Central Pacific Railroad Company had fought their way in Congress, and fought their way by building their road to the west line of Texas, then for the first time was it that those two great railroad builders, Jay Gould and Huntington, united forces.

Mr. BLAIR. I trust if the Senator is narrating history he will be willing that it shall be correct.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Most certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Does not the Senator remember that the committee was informed that it was the understanding between these parties thus constructing toward each other that each should have the land grant opposite what it built?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, well, the thing was consummated some six or eight months before the expiration of the time, and the articles delivered.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir. Here is Mr. Huntington's history; I have not the time to read it in full. It is the most wonderful piece of history in our country. You remember Mr. Huntington's letters. In these letters he shows distinctly, as we know, that he was antagonizing the Texas Pacific. In those letters he expressly stated that they stood ready to build the road without subsidies in money or grants of land. All they asked, he said, of the Government was that they should be allowed to do that; and it was not until after the road was constructed to the west line of Texas, after the road was completed without the Texas Pacific grant, its dead land grant to the Southern Pacific, because at that time they had united, that the heads, the operators of the two lines—

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me, I allege it as a fact that it was certified before the committee, and it is historically true, that these two great agencies built one the seven hundred miles and the other the five hundred miles toward each other with the understanding that they were to be united and to prorate. Does the Senator believe that the Texas Pacific would have built seven hundred miles westward to connect with nothing? There was the Southern Pacific building from the west eastwardly. Could it have been otherwise than that there was an understanding that they were to unite, as they subsequently did, and carry into effect their understanding as they did in writing, under instruments delivered and sealed and sanctioned by the judgment of a court?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Huntington and the Central Pacific were fighting their way through to the Atlantic Ocean in defiance of the claims of the Texas Pacific, and boldly claiming that they were prepared to build the road and would build it without any aid in subsidies or land from the General Government.

Mr. BLAIR. That is all very true. They asked in return that the Government would give them a charter through, that the Government would put an end to the claims of the Texas Pacific over those Territories through which they were obliged to lay their line in order that they might save their millions invested in the seven hundred miles from San Francisco to Fort Yuma. The Government took no action but left the law precisely as it was; and these two great corporations, under an agreement to prorate and to divide the land grant and the privileges and perform the duties that the Texas Pacific had undertaken in its charter with the General Government, constructed their line, and in accordance with that understanding the assignment was made from the Texas and Pacific of the land grant along and contiguous to that portion of the line constructed by the Southern Pacific, which the Southern Pacific now undertakes to hold, and which the Attorney-General of the United States in at least three instances of like character has held to be a valid assignment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think one of the provisions of the act incorporating the Texas Pacific Company was that it should not consolidate with a competing line. Am I not correct?

Mr. BLAIR. That provision, though not put in the way the Senator quotes it, was that they should not consolidate with any through competing line. In the short remarks which I submitted to the Senate I showed how the consolidation, even if it were with the Central Pacific, is not a consolidation with a through competing line. The only possible through competing line would have been the Atlantic and Pacific, which is not constructed to this day. The other line, the four hundred miles, under no circumstances would be a through competing line.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to know one fact, and it is the turning point in this whole case. Is it true that the Southern Pacific road, before any assignment was made to it, built its line of railroad through to the Texas border?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It did.

Mr. SHERMAN. At that time the Texas Pacific was a subsisting corporation, and it had not yet reached the Texas border and had not earned a single acre of land under the terms of the grant?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not an acre.

Mr. SHERMAN. They did not even lift a shovel or spade?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; not an acre did they earn.

Mr. SHERMAN. At that time were the two companies engaged in hostility with each other in seeking to get a law through Congress on the subject of their grants?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Texas Pacific, which had this grant, was seeking at that time to have additional assistance by a guarantee of the interest upon its bonds. The Southern Pacific came here, and, as I shall show from Mr. Huntington's own letters, with the expenditure of a large amount of money, asked Congress to stop, showing that there was no necessity to guarantee those bonds or to grant a subsidy, and that there was no necessity to give them any lands; that they were ready to build the road through to the Texas boundary without any aid.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. The state of facts which the Senator describes existed in two Congresses. The Southern Pacific having made its investment and seeing that the action of the Texas Pacific, then twelve hundred miles away, depended upon its obtaining its $40,000 per mile from the General Government (which was substantially nothing but an application for still greater delay), and that its capital was rotting meanwhile, opposed that by saying that it was ready to build for the land grant if the Government would take away the rights of the Texas Pacific within those Territories. It then said it was ready to build without any land grant even, if the Government would charter it through those Territories, and the Government declined to do that.

What then? The Texas Pacific was still in Eastern Texas. There was no prospect of any Government sanction under which the Southern Pacific could build easterly through the Territories, and the controversy in Congress having ceased, and the Texas Pacific having fallen under new management, the Gould management, Scott and his friends having disappeared, these great capitalists came together in agreement and the road was constructed subsequent to the controversy in Congress, through the Territories easterly by the one, through Texas westerly by the other, with an understanding, which had been put in form earlier still, that they should thus build and thus prorate, an understanding carried out in that way, and the construction taking place after the efforts at legislation in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses.

So it is not true as a matter of fact, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, that the construction went on while the Southern Pacific was demanding legislation from Congress authorizing it to build through those Territories. But when Congress had failed to legislate, when the subsidy was defeated, in the public interest as every man must believe, then these great agencies constructed the road about equally in length toward each other, and united with an understanding that the land grant was to be divided, that the land grant in the Territories was to be given to the party which built through the Territories. That understanding was formally reduced to writing and carried into effect, and the instruments delivered and the judgment of a court had thereon prior to the expiration of the ten years within which it was originally agreed in the Texas and Pacific charter that the whole line should be constructed. That is the truth about it.

Under such a grant as that, under such an assignment as that, in the instance of the Backbone Railroad and in two other instances, if I recollect aright, held valid by the Attorney-General of the United States, the Southern Pacific Railroad claims a right to be heard in court. The amendment simply gives the company a right to try that question in the courts and have it judicially decided and not foreclosed in a way that we would hardly exercise toward the humblest individual in the land.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska give me a little light on the question? The Southern Pacific Railroad, if I understand it aright, was first chartered by the State of California, and its line was built until it reached the Territories of the United States. As to the Territories and the public lands belonging to the United States, what did the Southern Pacific Railroad ever ask of Congress? Did they ask for a right of way over the Territories?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They obtained that by legislation from the Territories.

Mr. BLAIR. After the attempt to get legislation from Congress had ceased, had failed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Congress granted lands in California to the Southern Pacific.

Mr. McPHERSON. Has the Southern Pacific Railroad ever asked for any assistance either in the shape of land grants or subsidy bonds, or anything of that kind from Congress?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It not only did not ask for it, but insisted that such aid should not be granted it.

Mr. McPHERSON. That aid should not be granted to the rival line?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That it should not be granted to any company.

Mr. McPHERSON. To the Texas Pacific?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; or granted to any company. They stood there and said they would build the road without either lands or subsidies.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did the Texas Pacific actually build a part of the line?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not a mile.

Mr. BLAIR. The other road claims it as assignee of the Texas Pacific.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend the date of the assignment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The date of the assignment was after the completion of the road.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then at the time of the assignment the Texas Pacific had not earned a single acre of land within the Government lands?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It had not earned an acre of public land. The road was finished before the agreement was made in 1881, to which my friend from New Hampshire referred. The Southern Pacific was in hostility to the Texas Pacific; they had been in litigation, and were up to the time they made this contract in 1881, after the Central Pacific had built to the west line of the State of Texas. Those are the facts. Mr. Huntington, in 1878, wrote:

If it were once understood that no subsidies would hereafter be granted by Congress, the incomplete gap (between Fort Worth, the western terminus of the Texas Pacific then, and Yuma) would be filled within five years by private capital alone, without asking or committing in any way the national revenues to the work.

Before the Senate committee, in 1878, he said:

We are ready to construct right along, and willing to provide an outlet to the East for ourselves without cost to the Government.

Who would suppose for a moment that they would have the impudence in the face of this declaration to come now and endeavor to steal 20,000,000 acres of the public domain? Again, in 1878, when Mr. Huntington asked the Government to take its hands off and let there be a free race without cost to anybody, he said:

The question before you is whether you will give the Texas Pacific a guarantee of nearly 40,000,000 of bonds for building a road, two hundred miles of which is useless, and six hundred miles of which we offer to build without aid.

Look at that. Mr. Huntington says "which we offer to build without aid." He comes before a committee of this body in 1878 and begs the Government to stop; he says: "We will do it, and we will do it without aid, without the cost of a dollar to the Government." It is remarkable that these men should have the impudence to come here now. Is it not still more remarkable that Senators should be found here advocating their proposition, infamous as it is?

That is not all. Here is a letter from ex-Senator Gordon explanatory of his course in supporting the Southern Pacific plan of opposing Scott:

Mr. Scott was asking a guarantee on about fifty millions of bonds. Mr. Huntington, on the other hand, was asking nothing of Congress either by way of indorsement of his bonds or as subsidy in lands. He asked only to be let alone and allowed to build the road on the same general line, and was actually constructing it without any Government aid. I opposed the Scott bill and favored the Huntington plan. He declared he could and would build the road without a dollar of Government aid or subsidy. He did it. He declared he would make the eastern terminus of his lines southern ports and only southern ports. He has done it.

There are the facts. Here was the Texas Pacific organized with this enormous land grant. The act provided that they should not sell out to a competing line. The object of that legislation was that there should be competition from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The act expressly restricted these parties and declared that they should under no circumstances do it. Yet by the contract, to which my friend the Senator from New Hampshire refers, made in November, 1881, after the construction of this road the Texas Pacific actually contracts and agrees that under no circumstances will it build the western portion of the road.

Congress said in the act incorporating the Texas Pacific, giving them this empire of land, that they should not under any circumstances convey their interest to a competing road, and yet in the very contract to which my friend refers, made in November, 1881, after the completion of the road, the Texas Pacific guarantee and bind themselves that under no circumstances will they build west from the connecting point which they made with the Southern Pacific. Here it is:

In consideration for the privileges of using jointly the road into El Paso, and of a perpetual privilege in Los Angeles and San Francisco, as well as San Diego, equal to the most favored, the Texas and Pacific has relinquished its claim to the land grant, right of way, and franchises west of El Paso to the Southern Pacific companies. The Texas and Pacific engages not to extend its road west of El Paso so long as the covenants with the Southern Pacific are observed, and the Southern Pacific agrees not to parallel the Texas and Pacific east of El Paso or either of the roads mentioned, in Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri.

Mr. HOAR. Is that the first agreement between these roads?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; the first, made in November, 1881, after the completion of the road. Then they make their pool. They say:

Through business is to be done on a pro rata basis by both companies, and this stands all the way to San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to state to him one fact, which he can ascertain from the records of Congress? Either in the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress there was a bill introduced behind which were Scott and Huntington, both proposing to prorogue, which bill was to carry out the provisions of the Texas Pacific charter. As far back as that, and after legislation failed in those Congresses, these parties, by a mutual understanding that they made, met and then carried their agreement into writing, and it was signed, sealed, and delivered; but the understanding under which they were acting and investing their money was precisely as binding in law as though it had been reduced to writing and delivered beforehand. It was just exactly as if I agree verbally with a man that he shall convey to me his real estate and I pay him for it, and the agreement is partially executed, a court of equity will compel the passing of the title by the execution and delivery of a deed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I repeat, I think without the fear of contradiction, that these parties antagonized each other here in Washington, and by and by I shall show what Mr. Huntington says it cost to get some things done here in Washington. I shall show his estimation of this matter. He and his friends were antagonizing the Texas Pacific here session after session, and it continued in the courts, suit after suit, which resulted after the construction of that road in the making of the contract in November, 1881, to which I have just referred.

That was the attitude in which the very object sought by Congress in giving a land grant was defeated. It was defeated by the active support and by the contract of the Texas Pacific itself, the company to which the land was granted. Though the act denied them the power in any event to make any connection with competing roads, they actually sell or undertake to sell or convey; and they actually bind themselves so that the people shall be denied the privilege of a competing line.

I have read these extracts from Mr. Huntington, detailing the history of the transaction, and I think partially detailed, until November, 1881, when an agreement was made between Mr. Huntington and Mr. Gould. Mr. Gould, it seems, had become the possessor of the property of Scott, and therefore he and Mr. Huntington were in an attitude to contract. Mr. Huntington had fought his way through and made the connection with the western line of Texas. Then it was, as I say, that they made this agreement preventing any competition, making the road an absolute monopoly; and after that they seek to resurrect this dead grant and divide it between themselves. There is the position.

We are not embarrassed here by the considerations which sometimes arise in these grants because there have been no sales. Not a mile of the road was built by the company entitled to the land contiguous to the line in any part of this large domain. Not an acre of this land was ever sold by the railroad company. Not an acre of the land was ever mortgaged by the railroad company. There are no considerations to go to the court which my friend from Alabama suggests, because the question of forfeiture is pure, simple, naked. There are no embarrassing questions. The question is merely between this Government and the railway corporation; and I desire the Senate to bear in mind that never an acre of the land was sold and never an acre of it mortgaged, and the Texas Pacific never built a mile of its road.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him for the sources of his information which he states with so much confidence? How does he know those facts?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I know from examination before the committee of the Senate for years that it never has been claimed in all the long delay; it never was pretended, as I understood, that they had built a mile of the road or had mortgaged an acre of the land.

Mr. MORGAN. I must be permitted to state my understanding of the matter. The Southern Pacific Railroad had made heavy mortgages to secure its debts, and it contended of course that the transfer of this property from the Texas Pacific Company carried it into this corporation, and being a part of its property that the mortgages included that; that it went to the mortgagees.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me I will state that the land could only be embraced in that mortgage under the operation of the after-acquired property clause.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the idea.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think that a grant of land like this for public use, in the operation of a railroad, would be covered by such a clause in a railroad mortgage? I do not think it would.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not stating what is right about it or what is the law of it; I am stating what they claim; that is all. I do not admit that the transfer was valid. I shall vote for the bill just as it is, whether the amendment goes on or not. At the same time I think it is right to adopt the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. Huntington himself, who, I suppose, is good authority in this matter—and we have a good deal of that—was representing with a great deal of shrewdness the Central Pacific, then the Southern Pacific, and Mr. Huntington writes, November 28, 1874 (without reading the former part of his letter):

Storr says it will make Scott very mad, and he thought it best not to send it, and may be he is right; but if Scott kicks at it, I propose to say to Congress, "We will build east of the Colorado to meet the Texas Pacific without aid, and then see how many members will dare give him aid to do what we offered to do without."

Mr. Huntington was speaking for the corporation that is here to-day, I say to my friend from Alabama; and he says distinctly that—

"We will build east of the Colorado to meet the Texas Pacific without aid, and then see how many members will dare give him aid to do what we offered to do without." My only fear then would be the cry that the C. P. and the S. P.—

was all one and would be a vast monopoly, &c., and that is what we must guard against, and that is one reason why you should be in Washington.

Here are these organizations, represented in the person of Mr. Huntington. That is what he says on that branch of the case. The line was built without any pretense of aid, built in opposition to the road which had Government aid. He says away back in 1875—

If we had a franchise to build a road or two roads through Arizona (we controlling)—

Now mark. I ask my friend from Ohio to give me his attention right here—

If we had a franchise to build a road or two roads through Arizona (we controlling, but having it in the name of another party), then have some party in Washington to make a local fight and asking for the guarantee of the bonds by the United States, and, if that could not be obtained, offering to build the road without any aid—

Which they did—

offering to build the road without any aid, it could be used against Scott in such a way that I do not believe any politician would dare vote for it. Can not you have Safford call the Legislature together and grant such charters as we want at a cost, say, of $25,000?

Here is another letter from Huntington:

NEW YORK, November 13, 1875.

FRIEND COLTON: Your dispatch that you had sent $200,000 gold is received. Dr. Gwin left for the South yesterday. I think he can do us considerable good if he sticks for hard money and anti-subsidy schemes, but if it was understood by the public that he was here in our interest it would no doubt hurt us. When he left I told him he must not write to me, but when he wanted I should know his whereabouts, &c., to write to R. T. Colburn, of Elizabeth, N. J. I have had several interviews with the Houston and Texas Central Railroad people.

There will be no Government aid granted this session, and if we can get the H. and T. Central to stand in with us and offer to build a line through, we build to El Paso from the west and they from the east, I think Scott's fish will be cooked. Budd is doing good work in the Gulf States.

I was told a few days ago that Scott said he would make us let go of his Texas Pacific—

There was decided enmity between Scott, who was controlling the Texas Pacific, and Huntington, who did not want to control it—

I was told a few days ago that Scott said he would make us let go of his Texas Pacific. The South are getting very much in earnest in their opposition to Scott's project.

I shall do what I can, but you had better make your calculations to build the road east of the Colorado River on what you can get out of the Territories and the road itself. If you expect to get anything in Arizona and New Mexico I would suggest that you do not do as we did in Utah, wait until the enemy was in possession.

REPORT ON LABOR AND CAPITAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Nebraska suspend for a moment? The Chair will lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution which has been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments. The resolution with the amendments will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 4, 1884.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 19, 1885.

Resolved, That the House concur in the foregoing resolution of the Senate with the following amendments:

In line 6 of the resolution strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "six."

In line 7 of the resolution strike out the word "sixteen" and insert the word "thirteen."

In line 8 of the resolution strike out the words "and one" and insert the word "five;" and strike out the word "copies" in same line.

In line 9 of the resolution strike out the words "Senate Committee on Education and Labor" and insert "Bureau of Labor Statistics, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection be made, the resolution and amendments will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know that there is any necessity for that. Perhaps the amendments may as well be concurred in now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood some members of the Committee on Printing desired that the matter be considered by them.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The resolution and amendments were referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to say in connection with that matter that it has been delayed now a year or a year and a half. I hope it may be speedily acted on by the Committee on Printing.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed, excepting the maps:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 16th instant from the Secretary of the Interior submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill, "To accept and ratify an agreement with the confederated tribes and bands of Indians occupying the Yakama reservation, in the Territory of Washington, for the extinguishment of their title to so much of said reservation as is required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same."

The matter is presented for the consideration and action of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1885.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State of the 19th instant, recommending the enactment of a law for the protection of submarine cables in pursuance of our treaty obligations under the international convention in relation to the subject, signed at Paris on the 14th day of March, 1884. I commend the matter to the favorable consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

Washington, February 19, 1885.

GEORGE W. MARGROVE.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (S. 2273) granting a pension to George W. Margrove was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and the bill placed on the Calendar. The action was taken on the 17th day of February.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate heretofore taken indefinitely postponing the bill (S. 2273) granting a pension to George W. Margrove be reconsidered, and the bill with the adverse report of the committee placed on the Calendar. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

JOHN F. HICKEY.

Mr. PLUMB. I also make the same motion with regard to the bill (S. 1855) granting a pension to John F. Hickey, reported on the same day. I ask that it may take the same direction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas also asks unanimous consent that the vote on the bill (S. 1855) granting a pension to John F. Hickey be reconsidered, and that the bill with the adverse report be placed on the Calendar. If there be no objection that order will be entered.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to that motion?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; I have only a few more words to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield to the motion of the Senator from New York. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was in hopes we could conclude this bill. I had not intended to say anything upon it, except for the remarks made by the Senator from New York, and I beg pardon of the Senate for having made so much talk. I did not desire to discuss matters familiar to every member of the Senate. There is one thing, and only one thing, further I wish to refer to.

The company to which this grant was made never built the road. A hostile, opposing, antagonizing company did build it. They built it in defiance of the company to whom the grant was made, protesting throughout that they would build this road without any aid from the Government. These companies were in collision, one forcing itself through without Government aid and protesting that it did not want it, and the other seeking additional aid from the Government for the purpose of building it. That is all the fact necessary to be taken into the consideration of this case, and I ask pardon of the Senate for having said so much.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska or the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, or both, whether from the investigation they have given to this case they are of opinion that the right of the United States or of its grantees to this land whose forfeiture is declared will be contested in the courts by this railroad company.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Am I asked whether they have threatened to do this thing?

Mr. HARRISON. Whether they are likely to contest the right of the United States or of its grantees to this land in the courts?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not know as to that point.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think they will?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have threatened it as a matter of course. They have not only threatened it, but they have actually defied the committee and said, "No matter what you do we will go into the courts in any event." They wanted to convey the impression that they were not afraid of our action.

Mr. HARRISON. I asked that question for this reason: I have no trouble at all in voting for this declaration of forfeiture; I think upon the facts of the case as I understand them we clearly ought to make that declaration and make it now. If the claim of the railroad companies was so slightly held by them that they were likely to acquiesce in this declaration without litigation, then I should deem the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to be unnecessary, as in the Oregon case; but if, as seems to be the opinion all around, there is to be litigation over this title after the declaration of forfeiture, I am clearly of the opinion that the United States ought to take the burden of that litigation, that it should choose the forum where that litigation should be prosecuted, and that it should prosecute it by its own officers in a suit that will involve the whole question.

I am not willing for one to make this land subject to disposal at the land offices of the United States and to allow some man to purchase one hundred and sixty acres and then let the railroad company fight out this question with him. He is not an equal antagonist in such an encounter. I want some provision that will re-enforce him in that contest with the power of the United States. I want to avoid that which has been charged to be the case in the Des Moines land-grant controversy.

It has been said there that suits in which the titles of the settlers was involved were collusive suits; I do not know with what truth, but I do know that there is danger in these cases that these suits may be collusive between the railroad company and some humble settler who has but a small tract of land to defend; and if there is in all these cases such a serious claim made by the railroad company that the controversy must be settled in the courts, then I take it it must be clear that the United States should take the burden of that controversy upon itself, and should prosecute it promptly and vigorously to a determination.

For one, I do not like to put the General Government in the attitude of peddling out lawsuits to its citizens. I do not like to put the General Government in the attitude of conveying a clouded title and leaving its grantee to fight it out at his own expense, particularly when the Government gives him a conveyance that has no warrant in it upon which he could recoup damages, leaves him simply to the grace of Congress to recover the money he has paid into the Treasury of the United States.

I think, therefore, that in all these cases where there are serious controversies and where there must be litigation the United States should take it upon its own shoulders and press it to a speedy determination. I think it is in the interest of settlers. It seems to me a cruel thing to do to declare these lands open to public entry and to invite our people to go and settle upon them, and then to leave them to make their own title good if they can in a controversy with one of these powerful railroad companies, possibly to have it settled against them by the courts—I hope not—but possibly to have that result, and then to leave them in the distressed condition in which we find our people in two or three other cases. Therefore, upon the statement of the committee that there is likely to be litigation over this controversy, I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, which provides for settling the controversy before we sell the land.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has touched the gist of this whole controversy. I have put myself in regard to this railroad legislation in apparently an inconsistent attitude. I have said nothing about it, but I will state now the reasons of my varying votes.

On the Atlantic and Pacific bill I voted for the proposition of the Senator from Alabama requiring a suit to be brought, for the reasons stated by the Senator from Indiana. On the bill relating to the Oregon grant I voted against that proposition. The reason was that in the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad case it was manifest that there were contending parties, each claiming at least a prima facie right to the lands, and that for the reasons stated by the Senator from Indiana we ought not to turn those controversies over to be litigated by pre-emptors and homesteaders.

But in the Oregon case I thought there was no ground whatever for dispute, that any railroad or any person claiming under a railroad grant under the circumstances in that case would have no kind of ground, no kind of showing for a contest with a pre-emptor or homesteader or a purchaser from the United States; and therefore I thought that to invite or require this litigation was simply seeming to do a useless thing.

When this question first came up I believed that the Texas Pacific case was a much clearer case than even the Oregon case. It always seemed so to me. The absurdity of the position here is this: The Texas Pacific Railroad Company never earned one acre of this land; it never stuck a spade in the Government land west of Texas; it earned its land from the State of Texas, but never earned a single acre from the Government of the United States. It had insisted, on the other hand, that it could not build a railroad through New Mexico except by a subsidy and demanded that subsidy, and then a rival line, wishing to get a large portion of this important tract, ran its road through to the Texas line without aid and renouncing all aid, refusing all aid, and completed the road.

Then these two railroad corporations meet together and the Texas

Pacific sells out to the Southern Pacific what it had never earned, and the Southern Pacific buys from the Texas Pacific what the Texas Pacific never owned. This seemed to me a parody on justice, so that I thought no court or tribunal under heaven would sustain any pretense of a right to sell what did not exist and to buy what did not exist; and therefore I thought we could safely declare this forfeited without conditions. At the same time, I have no objection to voting for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, except that I fear that in the present condition of the public business, looking at it as a practical legislator, we shall probably defeat this bill, while we might accomplish the object he desires by passing a general bill, either at this or the next session of Congress.

I think in the mean time this bill ought to be so amended that the land shall not be open for pre-emption entry or for disposal of any kind until a reasonable time has elapsed, say a year or two, within which the proper legislation may be had. I think a suit ought to be brought in the nature of a bill to quiet title as against these two rival railroad companies, now connecting railroad companies, in order to settle forever their rights under the various acts passed by Congress in regard to the Texas Pacific Railroad.

The only objection I have to voting for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is not that it is not wise, because I think it is wise, but it may at this time defeat the passage of any bill on the subject; and I do believe the public interest and the comfort of the people in that region of country demand that the declaration of forfeiture should be made, and that proper legislation to settle titles should follow hereafter; but the bill should be amended in that one particular, withholding the lands from pre-emption and homestead entry until such time has elapsed that a provision may be made for contesting the various rights of the parties litigant.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish to make a speech, but after the very conclusive remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] I ask that the views expressed by me in the report from the Committee on Public Lands may be read. They are very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection the paper referred to by the Senator from Oregon will be read.

Mr. DOLPH. I present this as an explanation of the vote I intend to cast on this question.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I concur in the main with the views of the minority. I do not believe that a Congressional declaration of forfeiture of a land grant is conclusive upon the company to which the grant was made or upon its grantees of the whole or any portion of the grant, either as to the extent of the forfeiture, or as to the existence of the facts necessary to authorize the forfeiture. I am of the opinion that those questions, notwithstanding a Congressional declaration of forfeiture, may be litigated and determined by the courts in all cases in which the title to any of the lands covered by the grant comes in question, and that as a matter of policy all such questions should be judicially determined as speedily as possible after a declaration of forfeiture of a grant and before the land is offered for sale by the United States.

I therefore favor the amendment accompanying the minority report.
J. N. DOLPH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say in connection with what has been said by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Ohio, that several years ago, and I think when Judge Thurman was the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, or about that time certainly, the matters of these forfeitures were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee reported to the Senate a measure which provided in one bill for the forfeiture of every unearned grant everywhere, and provided, as has been suggested by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Ohio, that it should be the duty of the Attorney-General forthwith to institute suits to declare those forfeitures so as to protect from all future litigation the title of the settlers who should come in under the United States.

It did not at that time comport with the pleasure or convenience of the Senate, with its great press of business, to consider that bill. I am very sorry that it was not done, because all these questions would long since have been disposed of and endless difficulty, like that in the Des Moines matter, would have been avoided by a settlement once and for all without grinding the poor settler to death by having to fight these great corporations.

That is all I wish to say, sir.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. PLATT. I think the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when the name of Mr. JONAS was called). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] is detained from the Senate by illness. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS]. It did not occur to me when I voted in the affirmative, and I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. CALL (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Florida, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is detained at home by illness. He is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES], but understanding that he would vote against this amendment I feel privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is necessarily absent this afternoon, and is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] generally. His colleague [Mr. CULLOM] does not know how the senior Senator from Illinois would vote on this amendment, and therefore I shall not vote on it. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when Mr. VANCE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. My colleague, if here, would vote "nay."

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay" and the Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea." I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLERBERGER]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired on this question.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Dolph,	Harrison,	Mitchell,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Morgan,
Bowen,	Fair,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Brown,	Groome,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Chace,	Hale,	Lapham,	Platt,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	George,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Beck,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Slater,

Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Colquitt,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Dawes,	Lamar,	Vance,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the judgment of the Senate an amendment to make this bill conform to the suggestion I made; that is, that the lands shall be withheld from entry, say, for a period of two years. I suppose they are made subject to entry under the general laws of the United States. I move to insert these words:

But not subject to be disposed of under the general laws of the United States until after the expiration of two years from the passage of this act.

I merely submit the amendment to members of the Committee on Public Lands, as it would make the bill conform practically to the suggestion I have made, allowing two years to provide the proper legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer the amendment he suggests?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. Will the Senator repeat it so that it may be taken down?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will offer it in this form:

And for two years from the passage of this act be made subject to disposal under the general land laws of the United States.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10 of section 1, after the words "domain and" and before the word "made," it is proposed to insert "after two years be;" so as to read:

And the whole of said lands restored to the public domain, and after two years be made subject to disposal under the general laws of the United States, as though said grant had never been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. The word "disposal" would include a homestead entry, would it not?

Mr. INGALLS. I should like very much, in pursuance of the sentiment of Congress and I believe of the people on this subject, to confine these lands to homestead entry.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. INGALLS. We have, I believe, voted such a provision on the bill to repeal the pre-emption and timber-culture acts; but that bill has not become a law; probably it may become a law before the close of the session. If this land is to be restored to the public domain, I suggest that it be held for entry under the homestead law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to inserting that.

Mr. DAWES. All the lands that have been restored to the public domain from the Indian reservations for several years past have been expressly confined to the homestead law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will adopt the suggestion if it is agreeable. I will say "disposal under the homestead laws, and not otherwise."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is another amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "disposal," it is proposed to insert "under the homestead laws, and not otherwise."

Mr. SHERMAN. Strike out "under the general laws of the United States."

Mr. BECK. Without the amendment the lands will be open to homestead entry at once. As I catch it the amendment only provides for a postponement of two years. Under the general laws the lands would be subject to entry by pre-emption. The pre-emption law is not repealed yet. The meaning of the amendment, therefore, would be to leave the lands open to controversy for two years. That is the practical effect of it; it can be of no other use, so far as I observe.

I thought in 1878, when the Thurman bill was passed, we were taking some control of the management of these railroads. From that day to this we have taken none. The House bill sent to us to do it now is evidently going to fail by a counter proposition. The Reagan bill attempted to do something so as to take the control in another direction. That has evidently failed by a counter proposition. A number of other matters have been up, and they have all been fought because nothing will be done. That is all that the railroads desire.

Now I propose to vote to do something. I propose to vote even against good amendments if in my judgment they will tend to accomplish nothing. I would rather allow some imperfect legislation to pass, trusting to what may be done hereafter, than to have bills at this late hour of the session fail between the two Houses with nothing done; therefore I will vote against this amendment and other amendments that I might think useful, because I prefer doing something rather than to have a series of efforts all of which will prove futile.

Mr. MORGAN. The purpose of the Senator from Kentucky is to draw a distinction between the action of the House and the action of the Senate on these bills. I voted against the Reagan bill along with a good many Democrats and then voted against the Senate bill along with several Democrats, and I voted in the exercise of my duties as I supposed them to be. I advocated the amendment which has just been voted down. The Senate voted it on the Atlantic and Pacific bill, and some of the Senators who vote against it now not only voted for it but spoke for it then, which induced me to suppose, of course, that they were acting in good faith candidly and that they meant what they said, both by their speeches and by their votes.

Now, sir, in this matter I have been acting somewhat with gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber and somewhat with gentlemen on this side of the Chamber; and the effort of the Senator from Kentucky to impeach the Democracy of those gentlemen who have taken this course on the Reagan bill and on this bill will not at all deter me from taking such course as my private judgment dictates. I was in the Democratic party before the Senator from Kentucky enjoyed the privileges of citizenship in this country. I have been a true and a faithful Democrat, and it does not rest with him to impeach my Democracy by such flings as that.

I shall be a supporter of the incoming administration upon principle, if it is an administration of principle, as long as the Senator from Kentucky will stand up to his creed and to mine, and I do not enjoy these declarations which are made at the expense of his party associates. They are not kind, and they are not just, and there I leave them.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have only this remark to make, that I made no allusion to the Senator from Alabama or to any other Senator. He was not in my mind. He is not quite as important in my estimation in regard to this question as he may suppose I think he is. The Senator from Ohio had moved an amendment which I thought might delay for two years the settlement of this question, and I thought it would delay and perhaps defeat the passage of the bill if we amended it in that or any other regard, no matter how good the amendment might be, and I desired to see something done.

I did not happen to be born in this country, but I was not consulted about that. I have been a citizen of the United States since 1833. That was a good while ago, and the Senator may have been a very important public man at that day, but I doubt whether he was. I have endeavored to perform my duty as a private citizen and as a public man to the best of my ability since that time, and if he thinks it either adds to his dignity or that it diminishes from my standing to make the suggestion that I was born in Scotland instead of here, he is welcome to all the honor he thinks he has made out of that fling at the place of my nativity. Many good men have been born where I was born, and very many men who were born here trace their descent with pride back to the ancestry from whom I trace mine.

I might say more but I will not. However, I desire the United States to take some control of these matters before this Congress closes. I regard the suggestion as to my birthplace as unworthy of the Senator, unworthy of the Senate, and unworthy of reply.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I made no reference to the Senator's nativity; I made reference only to the length of time the Senator had been in the Democratic party and the length of time that I have been in it, and while my services to that party have not been so conspicuous as those of the Senator from Kentucky, they have been quite as honest and quite as dutiful. No Scotchman who is worthy of the name will take to himself as a personal allusion a matter that was not intended in that sense.

I revere that character more than the Senator from Kentucky does. I would not have pretended to rise on the floor of the Senate and interpose my nativity, which was not alluded to by a Senator, as a plea to shelter me from the results of an attack which he did make upon the Democrats upon this side of the Chamber who have not assisted in the passage of the Reagan bill and in the passage of this bill in the form in which it came from the House of Representatives. There can be no doubt about the object of the allusion. I do not understand the Senator even to deny it, except to say that he did not have in the range of his vision a subject so entirely microscopic as myself.

Mr. President, when a Senator is in command of such heavy artillery as the Senator from Kentucky, he ought to beware how he fires off; he may wound some very insignificant people unwittingly; he may hurt a man's feeling without intending to do it. He ought to have more consideration for men on this floor who at least are entitled to as much personal respect as he is.

He speaks about my remarks being unworthy of the Senate and unworthy of my position here. Sir, I do not indulge in remarks that are unworthy of myself or of the Senate. I might follow that example which I have oftentimes heard laid down by the Senator from Kentucky and indulge myself in such things, but I do not think it is respectful.

I have advocated this bill in the form that it is from the very best of considerations. I announced when I started out that I would vote for the bill as reported by the committee; I would even vote for it as it came from the House; but I believe it could be bettered very much indeed by having this subject carried into the courts before we commence to dispose of these public lands; that thereby we should save the people of this country very large expense. I was encouraged to hold that opinion by the fact that Senators who now vote against this amendment voted for it and spoke for it. In my innocence I supposed that they meant what they said; but it seems to me now when there is a chance to give a political turn to this matter we are disposed to withdraw from our convictions and our conclusions solemnly expressed on this floor and to take the political turn.

Mr. President, I am not a retail dealer in small politics. What little reputation I may enjoy and the position that I enjoy is not in the slightest degree attributable to the fact that I have taken up with currents of popular sentiment for the mere sake of getting myself forward before the people. I have tried as well as I knew how to discharge my duty faithfully as a Senator to the Constitution and the country and everybody in it, the rich and the poor, the high and the low; and when I have left this body I shall have left it I think with a perfectly clear conscience upon this point. That is my whole ambition. I desire neither place nor preferment, but while I keep a seat on this floor Senators must not suppose that, insignificant as I may be, unworthy of public notice as I may be, they can trample upon me without finding resentment and retaliation.

The Senator from Kentucky meant his remarks at somebody. He meant them at those men who he conceived were preventing the passage of bills that he thought were demanded by popular clamor. He admits that he would vote for a bill imperfect in itself in order to get certain legislation on the statute-book. I will never make that admission. I consider that, if you will allow me, unworthy of a Senator, to say that he will vote for a bill that he thinks imperfect in order to get it upon the statute-book. That shows the simple partisan; that shows the man who desires to carry out a purpose of his own or of his party at the expense of justice and at the expense of right legislation. I do not belong in that category, nor will I ever be found in it. The Senator can take that position and enjoy it if he wishes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, one word only, and that merely because of the last suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama. I did not say anything that indicated that I was desirous to enforce the Thurman bill, the Reagan bill, or this bill, or any other bill because of public clamor or in obedience to the demands of party; nor did I attempt to reflect on any Senator who differed with me. I desired to state my own position and the reasons why I am endeavoring to accomplish something, even though it might not be as perfect as I should like to have it and as I would desire to make it if time and circumstances allowed; and believing that if we proposed to do anything within ten or twelve days of the close of this Congress, with the vast mass of business pending between the two Houses, the fewer amendments put upon a bill that had merit in it was the best chance to accomplish some result.

The RECORD will show, and I am willing to stand on the RECORD, that no intimation or allusion of mine called forth any criticism from any gentleman who differed with me, no matter whether he was a Republican or a Democrat; and I am not to be told here that if the Senator was not alluded to somebody else was or some one of my party associates was, in order to have it understood that I was reflecting upon him. However unworthy he may think it may be in me to vote in the way I have stated I will continue to do so, because of my desire to accomplish something in the direction which a majority of the Senate, I think, desire to take. That is all I care to say.

I have never had a wrangle in my sixteen years of service in Congress that I now recall with anybody on this floor or anywhere else in regard to my public duties, and I have never given just cause of offense to any one that did not seek an opportunity to bring it on himself because of some assumption that was not to be drawn from anything that I had said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CONGER. I was about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me a moment? I merely want to call attention to the fact that the Senate have adopted a number of amendments which the Committee on Public Lands have recommended to this bill, so that when it goes back to the House it must be the subject of consideration there. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I appeal to the Senator. It will take but a few moments to finish the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. INGALLS. Has it not been modified since first suggested by the Senator from Ohio? If so we had better hear it read once more.

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is all one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there were separate amendments to different parts of the bill; but for the information of the Senate the Secretary will report both amendments in their connection.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10, after the word "domain," it is proposed to insert a semicolon; after the following word "and" to insert the words "after two years be;" in line 11 to strike out the word "general" and insert "homestead;" and in line 12, after the word "States" to insert "and not otherwise;" so as to read:

Be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the whole of said lands restored to the public domain; and after two years be then subject to disposal under the homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise, as though the said grant had never been made.

Mr. INGALLS. After two years from the passage of the act?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question on the adoption of both these amendments at the same time.

Mr. INGALLS. The words "passage of the act" are not there.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what it means.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to one fact.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to understand this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Secretary will now read it again, just as it stands, it will speak for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California was upon the floor.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will yield the floor to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is, in line 10, after the word "domain," to insert a semicolon; after the next word "and" to insert "after two years be;" in line 11 to strike out "general" and insert "homestead;" and after the word "States," in line 12, to insert "and not otherwise;" so as to read:

And the whole of said lands restored to the public domain; and after two years be made subject to disposal under the homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise, as though said grant had never been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. To satisfy the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas I will move to insert "after two years from the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will permit me, that leaves the land up to the period of two years subject to disposal either by homestead or pre-emption or otherwise.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly it does.

Mr. ALLISON. Then strike out the semicolon.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio proposes to modify his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. By inserting the words "from the passage of this act."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Ohio what he means by inserting a semicolon at that particular point?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think grammar rather requires it. I am not particular about it.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me if that is done it may be subject to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly wish to avoid that, and if the Senator will suggest any language that occurs to him—

Mr. ALLISON. I think striking out the semicolon will do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I will strike out the semicolon, and I would even strike out a period.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I inquire of the Senator from Ohio, or any other Senator who knows, if any machinery is provided in the bill for settling the title during the two years?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; none whatever. But a bill is now pending lying on our tables to provide for this in all cases, a general law that has been reported from the Judiciary Committee, and ought to pass.

I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, except that it will tend to defeat this bill at this time, but I have no doubt within two years ample provision will be made for commencing suits in the proper courts to quiet the title against these corporations by the United States. I am in favor of such proceeding. My only object now is to prevent the hurry and scurry of homesteaders, &c., on the public lands before these provisions can be made. That is all I desire by the amendment. If there is any trouble about it, I shall withdraw the amendment, if Senators think there is any difficulty.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am not aware that there is any. I only desired to know if the bill itself provided machinery for settling the title within the two years. It seems it does not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the lands embraced in this bill are not, as a general thing, fit for homesteads, probably not one-tenth of them. There are mineral lands along the line of this road embraced within this grant.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are not subject to entry.

Mr. MILLER, of California. They are not subject to entry now except under the laws relating to mineral lands. There is a general mineral-land law providing the manner in which mineral lands may be acquired. If you confine the disposition of these lands to homesteaders entirely, as the amendment does, the mineral lands can not be disposed of, because nobody will take up a homestead for the purpose of working mineral lands. It seems to me the limit of time, two years, is well enough in order to have the titles settled, but it had better be left so that after the expiration of the two years the lands may be disposed of under the existing land laws of the United States. I doubt whether the Congress of the United States will ever pass a bill to change the laws relating to mineral lands. All these lands are good for is pasturage and for the minerals which may be found in them. But if you pass a law now that these lands shall not be open to disposition except for homesteads it repeals by implication all the other land laws, all the laws relating to mineral lands, and all the laws heretofore enacted in reference to that matter.

Mr. WILSON. The mineral lands are not embraced in the grant; they were excepted.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But this is a subsequent law.

Mr. SHERMAN. This only restores the lands granted; and if mineral lands were not granted they are not forfeited and are not covered by the provision.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Then the objection may not be tenable as to mineral lands, but the great objection is that these lands are pasture lands, and there will be no homesteads taken up there. There is not one-twentieth part of the lands embraced in the grant that are fit for homesteads. I call attention to that fact so that Senators may know what they are doing.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggested privately to the Senator from Ohio the same point that is made by the Senator from California. I think but very few homesteaders will be benefited by the amendment, and it might interfere very materially with the mineral lands. The lands along the line of this road, where valuable, are valuable for grazing purposes in New Mexico and for mineral purposes in New Mexico and Arizona. The homesteads are in the valleys, and they have been taken up probably one hundred years or some over one hundred and fifty years on the Rio Grande and in the valleys, and I do not think there are any lands covered by this grant that will probably be valuable for homesteads. The grazing and mineral lands are valuable for those purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio to add at the end of line 12 the following:

But none of such lands shall be offered for sale or entry until two years after the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from New York that the amendments suggested by the Senator from Ohio are three in number.

Mr. LAPHAM. I know they are, but they have been treated as one, and the question was put on them as one at one time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair at one time said if there be no objection the Chair would put the question on the various amendments at the same time, but no such agreement has been arrived at as yet.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will not accept this in lieu of his proposition?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been trying to find something to which everybody agrees. The Senator's proposition may be subject to the objection that it makes no provision sufficient for homesteaders. I wish to preserve these lands entirely for homesteads, but the Senator from California objects that that prevents entries on mineral lands. The answer to that is that the mineral lands were reserved from the grant to the Texas Pacific Railroad. Consequently when the lands granted are reclaimed to the United States there are no mineral lands in the reclamation.

Now the Senator from Texas wishes to make some provision for grazing lands. How are grazing lands purchased now except under the pre-emption or homestead law? I do not know of any way. It seems to me that unless some Senator can make some proposition that will be free from difficulty I would rather stand by my amendment. I do not care whether it is voted down or voted up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BUTLER. It is getting very late in the evening, and I will move an adjournment.

Several SENATORS. Let us finish the bill.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senator will allow us to have an executive session. There are some nominations that ought to be referred.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion if the Senator from Michigan will make the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER (at 6 o'clock and ten minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the next amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the next and last amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I now offer the following amendment: At the end of line 12, section 1, I move to insert:

But none of such lands shall be offered for sale or entry until two years after the passage of this act.

It is suggested in some quarters that this does not cover the case of homesteads. It covers all kinds of entry that the law authorizes; and if we restrict entries to homesteads only it applies to homesteads. If the laws remain in force as they now are it will apply to the laws as they now are. It will leave everything according to the state of the law two years from this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? The question will be put on the amendments in gross if no separate vote is required.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LAPHAM. Now, Mr. President, I renew the amendment I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 12, section 1, it is proposed to insert:

But none of such lands shall be offered for sale or entry until two years after the passage of this act.

Mr. LAPHAM. I trust that amendment will prevail, to the end that an opportunity may be given for proper legislation to determine these questions in contest according to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio.

The question being put, it was declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what good this amendment will do unless the means are provided for settling the question of this forfeiture during the two years? Will it not only as it now stands postpone every question for two years and leave us just where we are at this present moment?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 12, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Blair,	Hoar,	Mahone,	Pike,
Brown,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,

Farley,	Kenna,	Morrill,	Walker,
Frye,	Lamar,	Palmer,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I think some of the Senators who voted against the amendment I offered in committee voted against it because they supposed the bill was being acted upon as it came from the House. There are scarcely ten lines of this bill remaining as it came from the House. We struck out one entire section and amended and added to a considerable part of other sections.

Mr. BLAIR. It is impossible to hear what is going on in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will please suspend. The Senate will be in order. Senators will please cease conversation.

Mr. MORGAN. Believing that there are Senators on this floor who really approve of the principle of the amendment and acknowledge that it is properly applicable to this case, I will offer it again in the Senate. I now offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas to hear and determine all questions and controversies concerning the rights and equities in said forfeited land that are claimed or asserted by the United States, or by any person or corporation claiming the same under or in consequence of any law of the United States, or any act of its lawfully authorized agents, and to enforce any judgment or decree, either interlocutory or final, that said court shall render in respect of said lands or any interest therein.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the northern district of Texas, under the direction of the Department of Justice, immediately to proceed in the circuit court of the United States for the said district, by bill in equity, in the name of the United States of America as plaintiff, against any corporations or persons that claim any interest in the lands hereby declared forfeited, arising under said act of Congress approved July 27, 1886, or under this act, so as to bring before said court for its determination the validity of such claim, whether the same be legal or equitable.

SEC. —. That any person or corporation not made a party defendant in said proceeding, but claiming any interest under the laws of the United States in the lands, or any part thereof, which are declared forfeited by this act, may present such claim by petition in said cause, duly verified by oath; and if the court, upon consideration thereof, shall decide that the adjudication and settlement of such claim are necessary to do complete justice in said cause, the court shall direct that such further proceedings be had upon such petition as that the same may be fully heard and determined, and shall proceed to decree upon the same as fully as if such petitioner had been made a party defendant in said suit: Provided, That no such petition shall be filed after twelve months from the date of the filing of the bill in said cause.

SEC. —. That the court, if it shall see fit, may tax all the costs of the suit under the third section of this act against the United States, and shall apportion the costs of any proceeding under the fourth section of this act between the parties according to justice and equity. Any party to the suit instituted under this act shall have the right of appeal from any final decree thereon to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same conditions as are prescribed by law and the rules of said court for appeals in equity cases; and the Supreme Court shall cause said appeal to be advanced on the docket so that the same shall be speedily determined; but no right of appeal shall exist after six months from the time when said final decree is entered on the records of the circuit court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired on this amendment with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], or I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired on this question.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If here, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS 26.

Allison,	Dawes,	Harrison,	Mitchell,
Blair,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Morgan,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pike,

Farley,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Frye,	Lamar,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when Mr. JONAS's name was called). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] is detained from the Senate by sickness, as I have before stated, and is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CALL (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Florida, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. KENNA's name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is detained by serious sickness. He would vote for the bill if he were present.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as stated, with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. His colleague [Mr. CULLOM] assures me that he would vote the same way that I should vote if he were here. So I vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I am informed that if present he would vote "yea," and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]; but believing that he would vote in the affirmative, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I was paired on a single amendment only and not upon the bill. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. VANCE] is absent and paired. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] is absent, paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am paired, as I have stated, with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS]; but I am informed he would vote for the bill if present, so I vote "yea," as I am in favor of the bill.

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 2; as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the next special order, being Order of Business 872, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 1652) to provide for the improvement of the channel between Galveston Harbor and the Gulf of Mexico."

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1091, being the funding bill, so called.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will resume their seats and be in order.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to go on with the bill to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the order of business he has named. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 6771) to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C.; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same.

ACCOUNTS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, asking an appropriation for expense of transcribing records and making tabular statements of accounts in the United States courts; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GRANT & CO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with inclosures, relative to the propriety of an appropriation to pay interest on the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of Grant & Co., confirmed by the Supreme Court; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, asking an appropriation for editing and publishing opinions of attorneys-general; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF GREELY EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of expenditures or accounts of the expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and party; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for to-day, on account of sickness.

DEPUTY MARSHALS AND SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I ask to make a privileged motion, or, if not privileged, I ask the request embodied in the motion made be granted.

Yesterday the Treasury Department sent a communication to the House in response to a resolution of inquiry introduced on the 6th instant calling for information touching the amount of money paid out for deputy marshals and supervisors of election for some years past.

Since this communication was sent up the Department has discovered that one of the entries was erroneously made. It is important that the truth should be stated and the correct entry inserted. The request is, therefore, that this paper be withdrawn for the present, corrections made, and the footings of the columns containing the corrected entry changed to harmonize with the statement as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

VENEZUELAN AWARD.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the report of the Committee of Foreign Affairs in regard to the Venezuelan awards on yesterday, I omitted to state that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cox] desired to file a minority report, which I now ask that he have the privilege of submitting.

There was no objection, and the views of the minority were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, I ask to introduce a resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it a privileged resolution?

Mr. STORM. I believe it to be a privileged resolution. It is one in relation to the distribution of some documents. But I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair could not recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. STORM. Prior to the commencement of the hour rule can not such requests be entertained?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule says distinctly that the Chair shall not at any time entertain a request for unanimous consent, unless it be a request for reference or to dispose of amendments of the Senate to House bills.

Mr. STORM. As I have said, I think this resolution, however, is privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all documents and books ordered to be published by the present Congress, and which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of December next, together with documents and books heretofore ordered to be printed which have not been actually printed, to which members of the present Congress are or would have been entitled if published prior to the 4th of March next, and which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of next December, shall be allotted, as heretofore, to members of the present Congress and transmitted to their residences as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution was submitted on yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and ruled by the Chair to be not in order as a privileged matter.

The Chair sees no reason whatever for changing its opinion in that regard.

Mr. KEIFER. It has been held to be privileged in prior Congresses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to be heard in opposition to the ruling of the Chair, the Chair will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to state that in the Forty-fifth Congress, I think, on a similar resolution it was held to be privileged.

Mr. STORM. I will withdraw it under the ruling of the Chair, with the understanding that I may be recognized to submit it after the hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not the privilege to recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent at any time under the operation of this rule.

Mr. KEIFER. We ought to have an opportunity to be heard on this question before it is disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has intimated its readiness to hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. A resolution of a similar character was offered in the Forty-fifth Congress, as the Chair will doubtless remember, by Mr. Garfield, and another resolution of like substance was presented about the close of the Forty-sixth Congress. It was held then, and has since been held, that such a resolution is a privileged matter, because it relates to the convenience of the present members of the House. These resolutions have been entertained as privileged matters because of the fact that they concern the convenience of the members personally and in the aggregate, and I think the precedents can be found showing uniformly the rulings in this respect. And it looks reasonable, too, in view of analogous questions which come up from time to time. Besides that, I do not think there will be any objection to the consideration of a resolution of this character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not see that this has any reference to the convenience of the members; and feels compelled to hold that it does not present a privileged question.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAMB. I rise to submit what I understand to be a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 315 relative to certain papers in the State Department, by error—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is this resolution?

Mr. LAMB. It is in regard to some papers placed there by error, and we ask to withdraw them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it is a privileged report.

Mr. LAMB. Then I withdraw it.

CONTESTED ELECTION—FREDERICK VS. WILSON.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to a privileged question. I send up, Mr. Speaker, a report from the Committee on Elections in the case of Frederick vs. Wilson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions appended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James Wilson was not elected as a Representative in Congress from the fifth district of Iowa, and is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Resolved, That Benjamin T. Frederick was duly elected as a Representative in Congress from the fifth district of Iowa, and is entitled to be sworn in as a member of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be printed and laid over.

Mr. BENNETT. I give notice that I shall call it up for consideration at an early day.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask leave that the minority of the committee be permitted to file a minority report.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SENATE REPORT ON LABOR, ETC.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to make the report which I send to the desk: The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 4, 1884.

Resolved, That the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the relations between labor and capital, with the accompanying testimony, be printed, and that 25,000 additional copies be printed, of which 8,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 16,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the Senate concurrent resolution, recommend the adoption of the following as a substitute:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the relations between labor and capital, with the accompanying documents, be printed, and that 25,000 additional copies, unbound, be printed, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 13,000 for the use of the House, 5,000 for the use of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

With these amendments, which pertain to the distribution of the documents and which greatly reduces the cost in binding, the committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EATON. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it a privileged report?

Mr. EATON. I think it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having looked at the report sent up). The Chair does not think the report furnished by the gentleman from Connecticut is privileged.

Mr. EATON. It is the result of a resolution of inquiry directed to the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the gentleman from Connecticut to say that this is a resolution of inquiry which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. EATON. It is the result of a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States, with the correspondence on file in the Department of State relative to the claim of William J. Hale against the Argentine Republic, report—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not regard this as a resolution of inquiry. It has reference to a private claim, and is not a privileged report.

Mr. EATON. The resolution of inquiry was addressed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs through the direction of the House to the President of the United States, and I supposed there could be no doubt but the action of the committee under those circumstances could be reported as a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands a resolution of inquiry was passed by the House; but this is evidently not a resolution of inquiry.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour set apart by the special rule for the calling up of bills, resolutions, &c., will begin at 12.37 p. m. The Clerk will report the business coming over from the last hour.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 458) for the relief of William H. Crook.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this bill two minutes are left of the time allowed in opposition.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask for the reading of the bill. I do not know what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill was read on yesterday. If there be no objection it will be again read.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STORM. I object.

Further objections being called for, twelve members rose—more than the requisite number.

SETTLERS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. LAIRD. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1737) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, reported by the Committee on the Public Lands with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of reimbursing persons, and the grantees, heirs, and devisees of persons, who, under the homestead, pre-emption, or other laws, settled upon or purchased lands within the grant made by an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas Railroad and Telegraph," approved July 23, 1880, and to whom patents have been issued therefor, but against which persons, or their grantees, heirs, or devisees, decrees have been or may hereafter be rendered by the United States circuit court on account of the priority of said grant made in the act above entitled, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as shall be required for said purpose, is hereby appropriated: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid to any one of said parties until he shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of the said decree, duly certified, and also a certificate of the judge of said court rendering the same to the effect that such a decree was rendered in a bona fide controversy between a plaintiff showing title under the grant made in said act and a defendant holding the patent or holding by deed under the patentee, and that the decision was in favor of the plaintiff on the ground of the priority of the grant made by said act to the filing, settlement, or purchase by the defendant or his grantor; and said claimant shall also file with the said decree and certificate a bill of the costs in such case, duly certified by the clerk and judge of said court. Thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the amount due to each defendant on the basis of $3.50 per acre for the tract his title to which shall have failed as aforesaid, and the costs appearing by the bill thereof. He shall then make a requisition upon the Treasury for the sum found to be due to such claimant, or his heirs and devisees or assigns, and shall pay the same to him, taking such release, acquittance, or discharge as shall forever bar any further claim against the United States on account of the failure of the title as aforesaid.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

On line 31, page 2, after the words "basis of," insert "what he shall have paid, not exceeding."

Add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided further, That when any person, his grantees, heirs, assigns, or devisees, shall prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that his case is like the case of those described in the preceding portions of this act, except that he has not been sued and subjected to judgment as hereinbefore provided, and that he has in good faith paid to the person holding the prior title by the Secretary herein referred to the sum demanded of him, without litigation, such Secretary shall pay to such person such sum as he has so paid, not exceeding $3.50 per acre, taking his release therefor as hereinbefore provided."

Mr. OATES. I make the point of order that that bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House. It makes an appropriation of $250,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the point of order does not hold as against bills called up under the special rule.

Mr. LAIRD addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. COX, of New York. If the report in this case had been read I am satisfied there would have been no exception taken to the passage of the bill. There are about two hundred families interested in this, as I understand.

Mr. LAIRD. Three hundred settlers.

Mr. COX, of New York. These people got patents from the Government, and yet got no title, because the Supreme Court decided they were ousted. It is an awful swindle on these people by the Government unless we provide a remedy.

They went into the wilderness, improved these lands, brought them to a high state of cultivation, and unless we interpose they are to be turned off under a decision of the Supreme Court and be without remedy. Surely we should give a remedy. It is equitable in the highest sense. Every man who cares about the Government having a character for honesty should vote for the bill. It only asks relief for such persons and their grantees, heirs, and devisees or assigns as under the homestead, pre-emption, or other laws have settled on these lands.

I hope since our friend from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has come out under such adverse circumstances [alluding to a severe injury received by Mr. LAIRD in a recent accident] we will give him a fair hearing.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, if I may have attention I think I can explain this matter in two minutes so that the House may understand the case with a little more exactness.

This grant was made in 1866. Nothing was done with reference to it by the railroad company until 1870. The grant was of alternate sections of land for ten miles on each side of the railroad to be located. The railroad company filed its map of the definite location of its line on the 25th of March, 1870, in the Interior Department here in Washington. No notice was given of that filing to the people in the West until the 13th of April of the same year, and between those dates—the 25th of March when the map was filed and the 13th of April—some two or three hundred settlers went in there and made entries of these lands at the local land office.

The question was then presented whether the settlers took title to the lands by going upon them before they had notice, or whether the railroad company took the title from the time its map was filed here in the Interior Department. When the question was presented to the Interior Department the Land Office decided that the settlers were entitled to the lands and entitled to hold them. Accordingly the settlers, some three hundred of them, went on and made their improvements in good faith, and the matter remained in that condition until 1880, when a grantee of the railroad company brought suit, claiming that the railroad company took title from the date of the filing of the map. The case is that of Van Wyck vs. Knevals, reported in 16 Otto, and the Supreme Court decided that the railroad company took title by and from the filing of its map, without regard to notice.

Now, this bill simply proposes to make good to the two or three hundred settlers who settled upon these lands in good faith the amount of money that they had to pay to buy in the railroad title, not exceeding $3.50 per acre—an act of justice that commends itself to every honest man. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. OATES.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the facts of this case have been succinctly stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. Within the nineteen days between the two dates he has mentioned some three hundred entries were made of these lands. This is simply a case where a grant had been made to a railroad company, and these settlers went in and made entries and located upon the lands. Subsequently the grantee company brought suit against these parties for the lands, and they were forced to enter into a compromise, and they paid, some of them, $3.50 an acre, and others that have not been sued are given the opportunity of paying $3.50 an acre to compromise, and it is proposed by this bill to make that money good to these settlers. In other words, this bill puts the Government of the United States in the position of an insurer of its title.

Mr. SPRINGER. It ought to be in that position.

Mr. OATES (continuing). A thing which it has never been. All purchasers have been purchasers under the maxim caveat emptor, and have been required to look to their titles. Now I think that as a matter of equity and justice the Government ought not to retain the money which it received from these settlers for these lands, but ought to refund that money.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] think it is justice to pay back to a settler a dollar and a quarter an acre for his land, when he has made improvements upon it worth perhaps two or three thousand dollars, especially when the Interior Department has affirmed the validity of his title for fifteen years?

Mr. OATES. I understand the case perfectly well; but I think that is all the Government can afford to do. If you commit the Government to the position of being an insurer of its title it will have enough to do at every session to make good titles that have failed.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Government should not do it I should like to know who should.

Mr. OATES. It is a dangerous precedent. I know that it is a hard case for these settlers, and I would have the Government refund every cent of the money it has received from them for these lands; but further than that it can not safely go.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the facts now being developed, it is quite clear that this bill opens up as important a question as any we shall have to deal with for years to come—questions growing out of the grants of land made to corporations. If this measure stood alone, I should feel no hesitancy or anxiety about it; granting relief to those victims of corporate power and rapacity would not of itself involve any important results; but it does not stand alone. Cases of the same kind in every section of the land-grant region are coming to light. A corresponding transaction to that named in the bill occurred in the Des Moines Valley several years ago, and from time down to the present time instances of similar injustice to bona fide settlers of the same character have been coming to light and demanding the attention of Congress. The Government has issued patents for lands which in innumerable instances were claimed to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, and with strange uniformity the claim of the corporation has been sustained, and the settler with a patent from the United States for his homestead has been turned out of possession. The adjustment of the countless conflicts arising constantly between the settlers on the public lands and the railroad companies to which land grants have been made by Congress is pressing upon Congress for attention as well as the adoption of a proper measure of relief for instances of injustice already consummated in the interest of these corporations.

Some years ago George Crilley, of Iowa, came here asking Congress to do justice to himself and other settlers in the Des Moines Valley of that State. The old gentleman, with a patent for his land from the United States, land which he had enriched by years of labor, had, with many others, been turned out of house and home under wrongful acts of Congress for the benefit of a railroad corporation. He waited and waited until, overwhelmed with despair and a sense of the monstrous injustice done him, his mind gave way and he left here with reason dethroned—a victim of the remorseless cupidity of a railroad corporation and the injustice of this Government.

There are many cases of this general character growing out of our railroad land grants, and it is difficult to say just what the Government should do about them. A serious question is forced upon us. That the Government should refund the money received for the lands must be manifest to every gentleman; but beyond that many difficulties arise. Homestead settlers made no payment, yet relying on the good faith of the Government have made valuable improvements on their lands. I had hoped that a general bill covering all cases of this class would have been reported and properly considered at this session of Congress, and it is unfortunate that that has not been done. The Government should at least do some measure of justice to the actual settler. I feel for one great hesitation in legislating on this subject. I think there should at least be a limitation confining the provisions of this bill to bona fide settlers. Speculators in the public lands stand on a different ground. And to that end I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House; so that the gentleman's amendment is not now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, before asking for objections, requests that the House come to order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that before objections are asked for an amendment which I have drawn may be read so as to ascertain whether it is acceptable or not to the gentleman having this bill in charge.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope that may be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks that a proposed amendment may be read for information. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall only extend to actual and bona fide settlers on the lands above specified, and who settled on such lands prior to the said decision of the Supreme Court touching the title to said land; and shall only entitle such settlers to the compensation above provided for to the extent of the land so actually settled upon, not exceeding, however, one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. LAIRD. In the present temper of the House I am willing to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] indicates his willingness to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Sixteen members rose to object.

So the bill was not considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7584) for the relief of A. B. Montgomery.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 7585) for the relief of M. Gardner.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 125) to provide for the expenses of the inauguration ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1885;

A bill (H. R. 2623) to remove the political disabilities of Alexander W. Stark; and

A bill (S. 2592) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation, situate in the State of Nebraska, of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

THOMAS THACHER.

Mr. POTTER. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2483) for the relief of Thomas Thacher. This bill proposes the cancellation of several judgments of forfeiture obtained against a quantity of distilled spirits for alleged violation of the internal-revenue laws. The passage of the bill has been unanimously recommended by two successive Committees on Claims of this House and by various Government officers, including the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill be read before the debate proceeds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be canceled and discharged of record a certain judgment entered on the 20th day of October, 1877, in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, in an action entitled "The United States of America vs. One hundred and two Barrels of Distilled Spirits seized at No. 72 Courtland street;" and also a certain judgment entered in said court on the 17th day of January, 1882, in an action entitled "The United States of America vs. Eighteen Packages containing Spirits seized at 174 Duane street;" and also a certain judgment entered in said court on the 17th day of January, 1882, in an action entitled "The United States of America vs. Ten Barrels of Distilled Spirits seized at 12 Beaver street;" and also a certain judgment entered in said court on the 17th day of January, 1882, in an action entitled "The United States of America vs. Thirty-six Barrels of Distilled Spirits seized, twelve at 51 Beaver street, ten at 62 New street, and fourteen at 50 Broadway," as well as the stipulations filed in connection with said judgments, signed by Thomas Thacher, upon the payment by said Thacher of all costs taxed or taxable in favor of the United States in said actions.

Mr. POTTER. I will say only a word or two in explanation of this matter, and then yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who, as a member of the Committee on Claims, has had knowledge of this case.

Mr. WELLER. Is it proper at this time, Mr. Speaker, to call for the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no right to call for the reading in the five minutes allowed to the gentleman from New York unless that gentleman consents.

Mr. POTTER. Judge Blatchford, who conducted the trial upon which these judgments of forfeiture were rendered, has certified, as stated in the report, that there was no evidence the claimant had knowledge of the fraud. The district attorney who had charge of the case on the part of the United States reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that he was satisfied there was no knowledge or complicity on the part of Thacher in any fraud. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated that "Mr. Thacher, in purchasing the spirits in question, observed the ordinary care of the trade, and was innocent of fraud in the matter." He also states that in his opinion the interests of the Government will not suffer by relieving Thacher from the payment of these judgments, and recommends that the relief be granted. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication dated February 14, 1883, recommends the relief now proposed.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. My knowledge of the circumstances of this case arises out of my membership of the Committee on Claims in the Forty-seventh Congress. Thacher, who was in the commission business, obtained from Saint Louis one hundred and thirty-six barrels of spirits, which were seized by the Government. It turned out that a fraud had been perpetrated by a prior owner, who made a false return upon "Form 122." In the trial of the case, Judge Blatchford held that although Thacher was an innocent purchaser, the forfeiture could not for that reason be avoided under section 3451 of the Revised Statutes, the concluding language of which is "that the property to which such false or fraudulent return relates shall be forfeited." Under this statute the innocence of Thacher could not prevent a judgment of forfeiture.

The evidence is abundant that Thacher had no connection with the fraud, knew nothing of it, was an innocent party. But owing to the peculiar phraseology of the statute and the construction it had received in the case of Henderson's distilled spirits (14 Wallace, 44), the plea that Thacher was an innocent purchaser was not available. Hence four judgments were rendered against him, aggregating $6,714.

The object of the present bill is simply the cancellation of these judgments. The bill does not take a dollar out of the Treasury, but merely cancels these judgments, leaving this innocent man to pay $1,000 of costs, from which Congress can not relieve him. He ought by all means to be relieved from these judgments, which were rendered against an innocent man. The relief which this bill proposes to grant is recommended by the district attorney, Mr. Bliss, by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and by the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in favor of this bill has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to have the report read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2483) for the relief of Thomas Thacher, having considered the same, respectfully present the following report:

The history of this case is as follows:

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have canceled and discharged of record a judgment of forfeiture entered in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, October 20, 1877, against one hundred and two barrels of distilled spirits, seized at No. 72 Courtland street, New York; a judgment entered in said court January 17, 1882, against eighteen packages of spirits, seized at No. 175 Duane street; also a judgment entered in said court January 17, 1882, against ten barrels of distilled spirits, seized at No. 12 Beaver street; and also a judgment entered in said court January 17, 1882, against thirty-six barrels of distilled spirits, seized, twelve at No. 51 Beaver street, ten at No. 62 New street, and fourteen at No. 50 Broadway, and to discharge also the stipulations filed in connection with said judgments, signed by Thomas Thacher, upon the payment by him of all costs, taxed or taxable, in favor of the United States in said actions.

These spirits, one hundred and sixty-six barrels in all, were seized in May, 1878. They were shipped from Saint Louis to Thomas Thacher, a commission merchant in New York, who advanced to the shippers nearly the amount of their value, and made subsequent payments for expenses, &c., beyond the value of the same. The property was bonded at a valuation of $6,714.85. At the time of the seizure the one hundred and two barrels were in Thacher's possession, the remainder were in the possession of different parties, to whom he had made sales, and to whom, after the seizure, he had to make good the amount of the purchase money.

The principal portion, if not all, of these goods were consigned to Thacher by one Bensberg, a rectifier, of Saint Louis, who was reported to be "one of the most daring and unprincipled operators in crooked spirits" in that city.

The evidence in the case of the One-hundred-and-two-barrel lot showed that the spirits were marked and stamped in the manner required by the internal-revenue laws to indicate that the tax had been paid, but the rectifier had, in order to procure stamps for rectified spirits, made a false return on Form 122 to the collector, that he had emptied these spirits for rectification.

It was a common practice in connection with the whisky frauds in the West for the rectifier to procure rectifiers' stamps in this manner, for the purpose of stamping illicit spirits. Judge Blatchford held that the false Form 122 forfeited the spirits under section 3451 Revised Statutes.

An application was made to the Secretary of the Treasury for remission of the forfeiture of this one-hundred-and-two-barrel lot. The judge, in the statement there of facts accompanying the petition, said that there was no evidence that the claimant had knowledge of said fraudulent document.

The application for remission was rejected by the Secretary of the Treasury, and a warrant of non-remission was issued October 3, 1877.

The judgment in the district court, in the case of the One-hundred-and-two-barrel lot, was affirmed by the circuit court and afterward by the United States Supreme Court (13 Otto, 679).

The One-hundred-and-two-barrel case was made a test case, and after the failure to obtain remission in that case, and the decision of the Supreme Court, judgment was taken in the other cases under the same state of facts.

The amount of judgments recovered in all the cases was as follows: In the one hundred and two barrel case, $3,890.56 and $250 as costs; in the ten barrel case, $483.37 and $250 as costs; in the eighteen barrel case, $384.73 and $250 as costs; in the thirty-six barrel case, $1,456.19 and $250 as costs; total, $6,714.85.

It was decided by the Supreme Court, in the case of Henderson's distilled spirits (14 Wall., 44), that the fact that the claimant was an innocent purchaser without notice of the wrongful acts of the antecedent owner constituted no defense to the claim for forfeiture. Henderson was an innocent and bona fide purchaser of spirits in a bonded warehouse, which he removed and paid tax upon without knowledge of any fraud. Congress afterward afforded him relief (act of February 17, 1879). That case differed from the present one in some respects, and your committee do not consider that act as constituting a precedent which should necessarily be followed in this instance.

The question in the present case is, whether the claimant Thacher is entitled, as a matter of equity, to be relieved from these judgments.

George Bliss, esq., then United States attorney, in a letter dated August 14, 1876, on file in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury with the claim for remission, reported that he was satisfied that there was no knowledge or complicity on the part of Thacher concerning Bensberg's "crooked" business.

M. B. Blake, collector internal revenue, second New York district, reported that he had known Mr. Thacher as doing business with his office for a long series of years, and had considered him a particularly conscientious man, and did not think it possible that he could have had knowledge of any fraud at the West in connection with these spirits.

Your committee consider this case a hard one. Mr. Thacher has been put to a good deal of expense; and to pay these judgments would be a severe penalty upon a man himself innocent of any violation of law.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue did not feel inclined to recommend a compromise of the judgment while the case was pending in the Supreme Court, a construction of the statute under which the seizure was made being deemed of importance.

But considering the severity of the statute under which the forfeiture was made, and the fact that Mr. Thacher, in purchasing the spirits in question, observed the ordinary care of the trade and was innocent of fraud in the matter, the Commissioner is now of the opinion that the interests of the Government will not suffer by relieving him from the payment of these judgments, and recommends that the relief be granted.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication dated February 14, 1883, addressed to one of your committee, recommends the relief of Mr. Thacher.

In view of the facts of the case and the approval of the proper officers of the Treasury, your committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to call attention to the fact that this man Thacher took the consignment of this whisky from "one of the most daring and unprincipled operators in crooked spirits" in Saint Louis, showing by this report the fact must have been publicly known. And now he comes here and asks this court of last resort to strike a blow in the face of the other courts, in which he had all the remedy he was entitled to. He had all the time, all the opportunity, in these courts of law, and might have gone into a court of equity if he had seen fit; but he failed to do that. After the Government, at a great expense, has secured this judgment, and he can not find any relief in the courts, the proper place to try this question, he comes to this court of last resort and seeks to have this judgment swept away and the Treasury depleted to this extent. I hope there will not be ten objections, but a hundred, to this bill, as there ought to be.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. WELLER objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of supporting the objection to this bill will rise.

More than fourteen members rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House.

DREGAS DEL LLANO DE LAS AGUAGES TRACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the surveyor-general of New Mexico in the case of New Mexico private land claim No. 117, known as the Dregas del Llano de las Aguas tract; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, at private sale, or by condemnation in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, all the land that he may deem necessary, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable brick or stone building for the use and accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, custom-house, post-office, and other Government offices in that city, at a cost not exceeding $100,000, including the purchase of land; and the building hereby authorized shall be so erected as to afford an open space of not less than fifty feet between it and any other building; and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein mentioned: Provided, That no money appropriated for said building and lands shall be available until a valid title to the site selected is vested in the United States, nor until the State of Florida shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out, after the word "directed," the following: "to purchase at private sale, or by condemnation in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, all the land that he may deem necessary" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "to select, of the lands owned by the United States in the city of Key West, Fla., a suitable building site."

Strike out also, after the word "dollars," the words "including the purchase of land."

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to make an appropriation for the erection of a Government building at Key West, Fla., the southernmost city of the Union. There is not, in my opinion, on the Calendar of this House a bill providing for the erection of a public building, nor has one been passed, more meritorious than this one. The necessities of the public business transacted at Key West, the security and preservation of the public records, the importance of the city, all demand that this appropriation should be made. The Government owns no suitable custom-house there, no revenue office, no post-office, no court-house, and yet the customs collection in the city of Key West for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, was $320,457.02; revenue collection between $135,000 and $150,000; and the post-office receipts, even with the limited mail facilities of the city, were nearly $5,000.

In the Forty-fifth Congress a bill providing for the erection of a public building there was favorably considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but for want of time it was not reported. In the Forty-sixth Congress a similar bill was considered and reported, but was not reached on the Calendar. In the Forty-seventh Congress the Senate passed a similar bill. This now is a Senate bill reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House, and I deem it unnecessary to consume the time of the House in saying more in reference to it. Not only a court-house is needed, but a post-office, revenue office, and custom-house.

I can tell this House from personal knowledge that the buildings in which the public offices there are kept are altogether unsuitable and inadequate. The post-office is a very ordinary frame building of one story; in fact, I may say it is but a shanty, and is a reflection on the dignity and character of our country. I hope there will be no objection to the bill, which has been considered and reported favorably so many times.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., beg leave to report:

The city of Key West is the largest city in the State of Florida, and a large foreign trade is carried on, particularly with the West Indies. That it is the seat of a United States court, which is held in a rented building without proper accommodations; and that the post-office accommodations are insufficient.

The matter of a public building at Key West has been urged in Congress as far back as the Forty-sixth Congress, and was then favorably reported, with a limit of $125,000 as to cost. The necessities of the public business make the demand still more urgent now. The present bill limits the cost to $100,000.

The Government owns a site suitable for the location of the building; and in view of this fact the committee recommend the passage of Senate bill 229, with amendments as follows:

Strike out, after the word "directed," the following: "to purchase at private sale, or by condemnation in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, all the land that he may deem necessary," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "to select, of the lands owned by the United States in the city of Key West, Fla., a suitable building site."

Strike out also, after the word "dollars," the words "including the purchase of land."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What is the population of Key West?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Between 15,000 and 16,000.

There was no objection, and the bill was brought before the House for present consideration.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I move, in line 10 of the bill, to strike out "fifty," between the words "than" and "feet," and insert "forty."

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to say a word in this connection. I regret very much that my friend from Florida has not seen proper to introduce here the provision, which I have heretofore suggested in connection with these bills, touching the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the approval of the plans, and limiting the cost to the amount appropriated for the purchase of the site and the erection of the building. After the former action of the House upon similar questions I do not feel justifiable in again insisting upon a vote, but express my regret that it has not been incorporated, since it is the only security we have that the appropriation will not be exceeded.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman from Florida if he will not be willing to put the amount at $50,000?

Mr. DAVIDSON. The difficulty would be that it would send the bill back to the Senate again, and might jeopardize its passage.

The bill as amended was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, AUBURN, N. Y.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3343) for the erection of a public building in the city of Auburn, N. Y.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Auburn, in the State of New York, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and United States courts, and for other Government uses. The site, and the buildings thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $150,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of New York shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. PAYNE. If I can have the attention of the House for the five minutes I do not think there will be any objection to this bill. The city of Auburn has a population of over 25,000 people. The United States courts are held there, and it is the geographical center of the northern district of New York. We ask the construction of a court-house and post-office building for the use of the Government of the United States at that place. In the Forty-fourth Congress a bill was introduced having in view this object, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, after an investigation of the matter, recommended the construction of a building to cost $250,000. This bill asks only $150,000. At that time the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the necessity of a building at Auburn, and received in response a letter which I send to the desk and ask to have read. This is founded upon a report made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury upon a personal examination and inspection of the locality.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 3, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th ultimo, inclosing copy of House bill 2430, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, providing for the erection of a court-house and post-office at Auburn, N. Y., and requesting the views of this Department as to the propriety of the passage of the same.

In reply, I inclose herewith a copy of a report made by the Supervising Architect, to the effect that under date of March 3, 1875, an appropriation of $4,000 was made to cover the expenditures for preparing plans and specifications for a building to accommodate the public officers in the city of Auburn, and that accordingly he visited that city and found that the post-office and United States courts were located in buildings totally unsuitable and insufficient to afford the necessary accommodations, and that plans have been made for a suitable building, the cost thereof not to exceed the sum of $250,000, including the expense of site.

In consideration of the seeming necessity for the erection of a suitable building at the city of Auburn, I am induced in this instance to depart from the policy which has governed the Department in such matters during the past two years, and to recommend that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the commencement of such a building.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,

Chairman Committee Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PAYNE. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute remaining. Unless some gentleman desires to be heard, in the five minutes remaining in opposition to this bill, the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. COOK. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York in what parts of the northern district of New York the Federal courts are now held?

Mr. PAYNE. At Buffalo, which is about one hundred and fifty miles west, and at Albany, one hundred and fifty east; and there is also a circuit court at Utica and one at Rochester, in the northern district.

Mr. WELLER. How far are these places, Utica and Rochester, from the point where this building is proposed to be constructed?

Mr. PAYNE. Rochester is some eighty miles, and Utica perhaps a little farther. This is the geographical center of the district, as I have said.

Mr. PERKINS. And the courts have been established there, as I understand, already.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir; since 1814.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Do I understand that a United States court is held there now?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir; and has been since 1814.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the population?

Mr. PAYNE. There are 25,000 people now, and it is rapidly growing in population.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask permission to insert an amendment, in line 15, by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "forty," between the words "least" and "feet;" so that it will read "at least forty feet."

I demand the previous question upon the amendment and on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. C. MARSH.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 1031) for the relief of W. C. Marsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be authorized and directed to pay to W. C. Marsh, of Tennessee, $2,054, the same being the amount taken from him on or about the 10th day of February, 1863, by the officers commanding the gunboat New Era, and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. This bill passed the Senate and has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of this House. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the Senate report (by Mr. DOLPH), which is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1031) for the relief of W. C. Marsh, respectfully reports:

That the said claimant, William C. Marsh, who was at the time a citizen of the United States and a resident of the county of Tipton, in the State of Tennessee, on or about the month of January, 1863, obtained permission from the military authorities at Memphis, Tenn., to ship a quantity of cotton to Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, and that in accordance with such permission he shipped his cotton—about eighteen bales—to Saint Louis, and sold it for $3,500 in United States currency, which he converted into $2,228 in gold coin, and then took passage on a regular steam transport plying between the cities of Saint Louis and Memphis, and started on his return, via Memphis, to his home in Tipton County; that when said steamer had reached a point at or near Island No. 10, in the Mississippi River, which was on or about the 10th day of February, 1863, the Federal forces upon the United States gunboat New Era seized said transport and took charge of her and the passengers on board, and seized and took from the said claimant the sum of $2,054 in gold coin, which was taken to the city of Cairo, where the same was duly libelled by the district attorney of the southern district of the State of Illinois in the district court of said district as forfeited to the United States, for the reason that the same at the time of the seizure was being transported from a portion of the United States, to wit, the State of Missouri, to another portion of the United States, to wit, the State of Tennessee, contrary to the act of July 13, 1861, which libel was filed June 2, 1863; and afterwards the said claimant appeared and filed a bond and stipulation in the said court, and the said gold coin was delivered to him; that afterwards and on the 23d day of January, 1864, the cause coming on to be heard in the said court, the said claimant appeared, by his proctor, J. O. Broadhead, esq., and confessed the allegations of the libel to be true, and it was thereupon ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the libellant (the United States) have and recover from the said claimant the sum of $2,054, the amount of his bond and stipulation filed in said cause, and that execution issue against the said claimant and Jacob Burns, his surety, therefor. On the same day the claimant filed in said court a petition praying for the remission of the forfeiture of said gold coin, and the district attorney having consented that the same might be heard, the court proceeded to hear the proofs in support of said petition, and ordered that the execution of the decree of forfeiture should be stayed until the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in the premises, and proceeded to hear the evidence, and made the following findings of fact:

First. That the claimant, William C. Marsh, is an illiterate man, unable to read or write, and that he is a poor and honest laboring man.

Second. That said Marsh is no trader or speculator, and his business is that of a farmer, and that he rents the lands cultivated by him.

Third. That the $2,054 gold coin found on the person of said claimant Marsh was his own property, no other person having any interest in it, it being the proceeds of certain cotton raised and sold by him.

Fourth. That said claimant Marsh was carrying said gold coin home with him for the use of himself and family in good faith, without any intention of fraud, he being ignorant of any law, order, or regulation forbidding the carrying of coin into said State of Tennessee.

Fifth. That said claimant Marsh is and ever has been loyal to the Government of the United States, and that while Tipton County, Tennessee, the home of said claimant, was under rebel rule, he persistently and continuously avoided giving them any aid or comfort, or in any way recognizing their authority.

Sixth. No proof was taken in support of the libel or against the petition of the owner.

S. H. TREAT, District Judge.

The petition and findings having been presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, on April 30, 1864, addressed the following communication to the Solicitor of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 30, 1864.

SIR: Application has been made by William C. Marsh, of Tipton County, Tennessee, for the remission of a forfeiture of $2,054 in gold coin, seized at Island No. 10, in the Mississippi River, and libeled in the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, for violation of an act of Congress approved July 13, 1861.

After a careful review of the summary examination had before the judge of said court, I see no sufficient reason to grant the prayer of the petitioner. You will accordingly please instruct the United States district attorney for said district that the application for the remission of the forfeiture in said case has been denied.

Respectfully,

GEORGE HARRINGTON,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

EDWARD JORDAN, Esq.,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

While the facts found by the district judge upon the summary hearing of the petition for a remission of the forfeiture would seem to have justified the Secretary of the Treasury in granting the prayer of the petitioner, there may have been circumstances which are unknown to your committee which render a strict enforcement of the act of July 13, 1861, necessary. Your committee is of the opinion that the claimant is equitably entitled to relief, and recommends that the bill be amended by striking out the words "in gold coin," in line 5 of the bill, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Before the Clerk had completed the reading of the report, The SPEAKER pro tempore. The five minutes allowed in favor of the bill have expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the balance of the report will be read.

Mr. WELLER. I desire that the remainder of the report shall be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the time against the bill?

Mr. WELLER. Yes, sir; although I favor the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. WELLER (interrupting). So far as I am concerned I have heard enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the reading continue. The five minutes have not expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three minutes are still left of the five. The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN (interrupting). For myself I do not ask for further reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to call up a bill for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] is recognized. The hour provided by the special rule has expired.

WIDOW OF FRANK W. LYNN.

Mr. ERMENROUT. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution which I send to the desk, report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of Frank W. Lynn, late an employé of this House, a sum equal to his salary for six months and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed $250.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ERMENROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 337) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a support of entry and a port of call at Port Angeles, Wash.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN KANSAS.

Mr. ANDERSON, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, urging the passage of the bill to adjust the grants of lands to certain railroads doing business in the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask that these resolutions be printed in the RECORD. They are very short.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 10.

Whereas the title to a vast amount of land in the different counties of this State is held in dispute between railroad corporations and settlers; and Whereas such disputed title has caused many vexatious lawsuits, feuds, bloodshed, and loss, greatly to the detriment of the prosperity and settlement of the counties so situated; and

Whereas a bill is now before the Congress of the United States, which, if passed, it is believed would greatly aid in adjusting these land titles: Therefore,

First, Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use their best efforts to secure at the earliest day possible the enactment of such a law as will afford the relief sought.

Second, Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to forward copies of these resolutions, properly verified, to each of our Senators and Members of Congress.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal.

Done at Topeka this 12th day of February, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. BRATTON. A few days ago a resolution which I reported from the Committee on Printing was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is a Senate resolution, authorizing the printing of 3,000 copies of the list of claimants on account of French spoliations. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the report, and that it be recommended to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to dispense with the morning hour, and beg to state that at a certain time agreed upon with the Committee on Appropriations I shall yield the floor to them. Upon that understanding, and with that agreement, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

REPORTS OF UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 338) providing for the printing of additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 339) providing for printing additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

MONOGRAPH II OF UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 340) providing for printing the usual number of Monograph II, of United States Geological Survey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M. GARDNER.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7585) for the relief of M. Gardner, with amendments by the Senate, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a political disability bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] desires to move concurrence in the Senate amendments.

There was no objection.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In lines 2 and 3 strike out "M. Gardner" and insert "William M. Gardner." Amend the title so as to read, "An act for the relief of William M. Gardner."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 927 strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$800,000," so that it will read: "Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $800,000; which sum," &c.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 25, noes 73.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BAYNE, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 114.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I will not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point as to no quorum being withdrawn, the amendment is not adopted.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. HISCOCK), as follows:

In line 926 insert the following:

"But the mouths of said rivers shall not be rectified upon any plan that in the opinion of the Mississippi River Commission will render it necessary to build levees on the Mississippi from the said Atchafalaya River down the Mississippi River."

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, when I offered the amendment a moment since to strike out the lines in this bill providing for the rectification of the mouths of the Red River and the Atchafalaya, and made the assertion that those lines committed the Government to the building and the perpetual support and maintenance of levees from the mouth of Red River down, I was told by some friend of this measure that I was mistaken. To meet that allegation I have offered this amendment, providing that the mouths of those rivers shall not be rectified upon any plan which involves the building of such levees. Everybody knows that for the requirements of navigation there is no need of levees from the mouths of those rivers down; there is plenty of water there; the navigation is perfect; and I have offered this amendment to meet the assertion which was made here on the other side of the House by some friend of this scheme that my statement that it would be necessary to build and maintain such levees was not true.

I now say to members of this committee more than that; I say that this provision in the bill commits the Government for all time to paying the damages that may be sustained from the chance breaking of those levees or from overflow. It commits the Government to the maintenance of the levees at its own cost and expense, and obligates it for all time to preserve the owners of these alluvial lands from the discharge of water upon their lands on account of the closing of the mouth of one of these rivers and the opening of the other. I do not believe that this committee or that Congress is prepared to commit itself to any such policy, but I shall have done my duty in reference to this matter when I have so distinctly brought the question into this committee that every member can understand precisely the point upon which he is voting and the effect of the adoption of this clause of the bill without amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is more stuff, as this House well knows.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to offer a substitute for the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment (offered by Mr. ELLIS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HISCOCK), as follows:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands by overflows: Provided, however, That the commission are authorized to repair and build levees, if in their judgment it should be done as a part of their plan to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river and to deepen the channel.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, after years of consideration we adopted a plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River. That plan has succeeded, and the proofs of it are now visible on the river wherever that plan has been adhered to. A portion of the plan has failed, while another essential portion of it has been neglected. This bill brings back the commission, and restricts them to the original plan with perfect fidelity. Now, sir, having chosen the plan, having chosen the agents to carry out that plan, why should we seek to fetter their brains? Why should we seek to darken counsel by words without knowledge? Why should we seek to fetter the judgment of the men who are in charge of this work, having restricted them to the plan which has succeeded, and which will succeed when adhered to? This provision contains the same language that was used heretofore, and it absolutely prevents the throwing of a single spadeful of dirt for private purposes, for the protection of private property, for the protection of lands from overflow. That is absolutely prohibited; but if they find it necessary for the purpose of deepening the channel of the river and affording ease and facility to the vast commerce that floats upon its bosom—if these purposes can be subserved by making higher banks, the commission are at liberty to do so. The amendment, I am sure, must commend itself to the judgment of this House, and I trust it will be adopted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last proviso in the substitute just offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS], and I desire to say that the objection which I make to this clause in the bill without my amendment is that the clause itself commits this Government to the building of these levees. The Government would be legally obliged to build them. The moment it turns this immense volume of water into the Mississippi it assumes the liability of protecting the owners of the lands against overflow. That is the purpose of it. It does not depend upon affirmative legislation, but, on the contrary, the Government practically says to the people: We have increased the flood in the Mississippi River and we assume the liability of protecting you from the incursions of that flood.

This scheme is concealed—I do not say it offensively—this scheme is concealed in the simple words of this clause, and therefore I say that no language that can be offered here limiting it will correct the evil if you undertake to rectify the mouths of these rivers in accordance with the plans which have been submitted by the Mississippi River Commission.

The effect of it is to threaten the people upon the line of that river below that point with destruction of houses, villages, and farms by flood; and the Government is compelled to step in and build these levees to protect those people against its own act. Ay, more than that, when damages have been sustained in this way the Government is bound in equity and honor to make compensation to the owners of those alluvial lands for that damage.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not appeal to the rules of this House but to the good faith of members. It was expressly understood that only amendments intended to be substantial and only speeches in support of such amendments were to be allowed in this extended time. I do respectfully appeal to gentlemen on this floor not to violate their agreement.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have not occupied a minute on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no further amendment is in order until the pending amendment is voted upon.

Mr. ELLIS. If the House will allow me one minute I will dissipate the fears expressed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIS. I must object to any extension of the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the substitute and the proposed amendment.

The substitute and amendment were read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care to press the amendment to strike out the last proviso. I withdraw it so as to let the question come squarely on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on agreeing to the substitute). In the opinion of the Chair the substitute is adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for a division.

Mr. WILLIS. In order to save time I ask that tellers be ordered at once.

There being no objection, tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIS and Mr. HISCOCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 63. So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I now ask to have read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute just adopted the following:
"Provided, That no existing outlets through which the flood waters are carried off shall be closed."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it will be admitted, I think, that the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River is one thing and taking care of the flood waters is a very different thing. I am in favor of the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, and I doubt not that jetties and revetments are valuable in the improvement of navigation; but I do not believe it is within the power of man to confine the flood waters of that gigantic river and keep them within artificial embankments.

There was a time, and that within comparatively recent geological time, when the Gulf of Mexico was where New Orleans now is. At that time the surface of the Mississippi River must have been some sixteen feet lower than it is now all the way up to the first falls, and the bed of the river was then much lower than it is now. Extend the mouth of the river into the Gulf; build walls to hold the flood waters, and the waters will continue to rise and its bottom to follow it up, and you may go on indefinitely without being able to confine within your artificial embankments the floods that will occasionally come. For this reason I am opposed to appropriations for the building of levees to confine the flood waters. If I believed the plan would be a success I should not object to appropriations for it; but I do not believe in the plan, and I do not believe that engineers agree at all upon such a plan. I believe in more outlet room for flood waters.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, it was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

In lines 923, 924, and 925 strike out the words "including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. As will be seen, Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the committee is to rectify the banks of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers. It is intended to carry out the Eads plan of closing up the outlet from the Red River into Grand Lake through the Atchafalaya. Now, it is a well-known fact that when the floods come the Mississippi River extends at least seventy-five miles wide. To talk about closing up the outlet of the Atchafalaya means to build up a levee all along the southern bank of the Red River. Is there any man from Louisiana who will deny that?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do deny it.

Mr. LEWIS. I deny it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now let me read to these gentlemen. On April 5, 1882, General Humphreys was before the Committee on Commerce, and I desire to read from his testimony taken at that time:

Mr. REAGAN. In determining, as you did, the necessity of extending the levees from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Mississippi, did you consider whether it was practicable or possible to retain the floods of the Mississippi River within those levees?

General HUMPHREYS. Yes; that was the question. The object of constructing levees and raising them to certain heights was to confine the river within them, otherwise it would be a useless expenditure of money. The great object of making these measurements was to determine the question how high the river would rise if all the water were kept within its channel, and the observations were made because no one had any means of answering that question before.

Mr. HORR. And did you conclude that it could be done?

General HUMPHREYS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Did you contemplate the construction of a line of levees immediately on the banks of the river or at some distance back from them?

General HUMPHREYS. Wherever it was practicable it would be preferable to place levees some distance back from the river, leaving the local proprietors to establish the levees outside.

Mr. REAGAN. In providing on your plan for retaining the water of the river within its channel by levees, did you contemplate putting reverse levees along the affluents of the Mississippi within the alluvial bed or did you propose to leave those open?

General HUMPHREYS. The affluents must be leveed also. We contemplated that, though, if I remember aright, we did not include it in our estimates.

Mr. WHITE. You understand that the Red River is disposed to run into the Atchafalaya now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; at times it discharges entirely through the Atchafalaya.

Mr. WHITE. Now, it has been stated that if we levee the Mississippi we shall have to levee also the Red River and the other affluents for some considerable distance back.

General HUMPHREYS. That would be for the protection of the country along those rivers.

Mr. WHITE. Would that necessitate the raising of the levees on the Mississippi? Or would it be better to lead the surplus water there off by another channel, say down the Atchafalaya, and levee that also—that is, would it be better to have a parallel river with low levees, and the Mississippi itself with low levees, or to have all the water concentrated in one river with high levees?

General HUMPHREYS. I should not think for a moment of closing the Atchafalaya or any of those natural bayous. How much that surplus water of the Red River I don't know, nor how much the banks would have to be raised by levees.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. HEPBURN) was read, as follows:

After the word "river," in line 926, insert: "Provided, That no work shall be done at this point that will make the improvement or increase of levees necessary on the banks of the Mississippi River."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, there are three plans which have been submitted for the rectification of the mouth of the Red River. One involves an expenditure of $10,511,000; the other involves an expenditure of $8,061,000. The plan favored by the commission involves an expenditure of $4,800,000. By this rectification of the mouth of Red River from throwing its floods into the Mississippi River is involved an expenditure in levees to make secure the present levees below Red River, assumed as in previous cases at two feet mean rise, of $2,872,000. To provide for the increased discharge below Red River consequent upon the execution of this plan would require the additional raising of grade, which, assumed as in a preceding case at one foot increase to mean height, would cost $1,907,000. There are more than $4,000,000 made necessary in building levees alone from this mode, compelling the waters which now flow through the Atchafalaya into the Mississippi.

Now, there is certainly a reason for this. As it is, certain lands contiguous to the Atchafalaya are flooded because of this discharge, and they are owned by somebody and that somebody desires their protection, through the diversion of the waters which at times flood them, at the expense of the Government of more than $4,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. The commission has adopted no such report.

Mr. HEPBURN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 81.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. WILLIS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 15, noes 116.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

"And for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the effect of striking out these lines is to strike out the idea contained in this bill, that you must close up the outlet at the head of the Atchafalaya. The committee goes upon the idea that because Mr. Eads made a success at the mouth of the Mississippi River he can do anything he pleases with the Mississippi River. Now, Mr. Eads never discovered that jetties would be a benefit to the mouth of the Mississippi River. I read from the same document I read from a while ago, where General Humphreys testified before the Committee on Commerce in 1882 as follows:

I was the first person to demonstrate that the use of the jetties would deepen the river at its mouth, because I was the first person to get the facts by measurements.

That same gentleman who told us that jetties would be a success and who urged their use and said they could be built at the mouth of the Mississippi River, that same gentleman, Mr. Chairman, utterly opposed the idea that the Atchafalaya should be stopped up. Furthermore, he contended that if you began to close up all such outlets as the Atchafalaya you would have to raise all the levees along the banks of all the affluents emptying into the Mississippi River from Cairo down, and if you began on that system it would cost hundreds of millions of money. Why, sir, $150,000,000 is not an approximation to the cost of leveeing thousand of miles. Both banks of the rivers must be leveed as a consequence of the adoption of any such theory.

Mr. DUNN. How much money?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. You propose covertly in this bill to have Mr. Eads saddled upon this Government by undertaking to carry out any such theory of tickling the flanks of the Mississippi River, tickling the flanks of the banks of its affluents, tickling their flanks by building higher levees on both sides, thus incurring an expense, as I have already said, of hundreds of millions of dollars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 89.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that point of order will not be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not avoid it. The point of order is made.

Mr. WILLIS. I appeal to the good faith of this House whether that ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no way to stop it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE and Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 141.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. BOUTELLE) was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out from the word "including," in line 923, down to the word "river," in line 926, as follows:
"Including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River."

Mr. WILLIS. That has been voted on.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Voted on three times.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is a curious coincidence the amendments should be identical.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The point of order has been made on this amendment that it has already been voted on.

Mr. WILLIS. It has been voted on within the last twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair knows nothing has been done except adding after the word "river" the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] and another addition to that proposition by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS], and therefore as at present advised the Chair would not rule the amendment out.

Mr. WILLIS. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], as well as other amendments, covered this same point.

The CHAIRMAN. They were amendments which were voted down.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a ruling whether the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As at present informed the Chair holds it to be in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. If this amendment had been presented would it now be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is precisely the same as offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair has ruled my amendment to be in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is precisely the same amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and voted down.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be true, that the amendment is precisely the same, the Chair would sustain the point of order, and rule the amendment out.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the Chair to rule that my amendment was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled if it were not like amendments already offered it would be received; but that if it were precisely the same as amendments already voted down it would not be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know of anything a man on the floor can do but to submit.

The CHAIRMAN. Submit then, and the Clerk will read the next amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should not think of appealing from the decision of the Chair.

The next amendment (by Mr. HEPBURN) was read, as follows:

After the word "river," in line 926, insert:

"Provided, That no part of the sums herein appropriated shall be expended in the erection or repair of levees situated on lands not owned by the United States."

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order that that amendment has been already voted upon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That whole question has been voted upon by the committee and disposed of.

Mr. WILLIS. And the substitute of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] was adopted by the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not been able to hear the point of order the gentleman makes.

Mr. WILLIS. The point of order is that this whole subject has been already disposed of.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think if the gentleman will compare the language of this amendment with what has been voted upon heretofore he will find that they are not identical in any respect.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the gentleman is mistaken; my recollection is certainly that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recollect any case where a question pertaining to the levees on lands belonging to private individuals has been considered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. All lands on which the levees are constructed belong to private individuals.

Mr. WILLIS. It is well understood that they are lands belonging to individuals on the banks of that river, and that question having been already raised and voted upon covers this point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is impossible to find a square inch of land down there that does not belong to some individual. This whole question has been disposed of already.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read a paragraph from the Digest in regard to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order; for were he permitted to draw questions of consistency within the vortex of order, he might usurp a negative on important modifications, and suppress instead of subserving the legislative will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, therefore, that this amendment is in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, there is, in my judgment, a strong reason why Congress should not authorize the construction of levees upon the property of private individuals that has not yet been discussed in connection with this bill. The Mississippi River Commission, year after year, has asked for legislation at the hands of Congress by which they could condemn property upon which erections of this character may be necessary in their judgment or where it shall be found necessary to get material for the improvement. They say that extravagant prices are asked for such things.

Mr. DUNN. Was not that incorporated in the last river and harbor bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. I take it not, because the same demand for legislation is urged in the last report of the commission. They call attention to their frequent requests on this subject. They call attention to the exorbitant sums demanded of them for brush, poles, and piling, which they find necessary to use in connection with their work. They say that they are at the mercy of cormorants all along the river; even the very men I take it upon whose lands the levees are to be built and for whose benefit they are undertaken they say require exorbitant pay for such items. When it comes to the appropriation of a part of their lands or property they make these excessive demands, and, as the commission say, we are completely at their mercy.

It seems to me that until gentlemen on that side of the House are willing to forget some of their notions about strict construction, and are willing to give the Congress of the United States the power to exercise the right of eminent domain in matters of this kind, they come here with very poor grace asking that these extraordinary appropriations for the benefit of private individuals should be made out of the Treasury.

The question being taken on the adoption of Mr. HEPBURN's amendment, there were on a division—ayes 36, noes 86.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 117.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (submitted by Mr. BOUTELLE), as follows:

Strike out the entire paragraph commencing with line 922 and ending with line 938.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman in charge of this bill had not manifested so eager a desire to impede the expression of individual criticisms in regard to it I think some time might have been saved with respect to the very few remarks I desire to offer.

My principal object in rising is to ask a question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], a member of the committee, who spoke on this bill when it was first reported to the House. I desire to ask that gentleman whether this improvement of the Mississippi River, for which this $2,800,000 is proposed, is a continuation of that system of work advised by the Mississippi River Commission to which he referred the other day as likely to cost $150,000,000, and which he denounces as a conspicuous failure, and to which he referred in the following language:

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Allow me first to quote the language on which I desire to base my inquiry. The gentleman from Arkansas said—

They—

have now a plan of operations sketched out to spend, as stated, $150,000,000. The calculation is a very plain one, and there is not in any of their work a guarantee that it will last twelve months.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I was emphatic in condemning the departures of the commission from the plan originally adopted for the improvement of that river. And therefore we propose to introduce into this bill instructions that the commission shall adhere to the plan of improvement that were set forth in the first report of the commission.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I beg to state to the gentleman from Arkansas he now tells us something he proposes to introduce—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not propose to permit this commission to go on and spend the money in the line of their departures from the original plan.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am endeavoring to discuss this bill as it is laid on our desks and presented to the House. And I find the gentleman from Arkansas made this statement—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If you will read the bill it will answer you fully. Its present provisions are more stringent than we propose now, and we only relax this much under protest.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman made this statement:

They can not point us to any experiments in this departure from the original plan and from reason showing that it will stand twelve months after a single rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. And that is all perfectly true.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

The question being taken on Mr. BOUTELLE's amendment, it was not agreed to.

Strike out lines 926 to 938 and insert as follows:

"Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, $155,000; of which sum $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the construction of a light-draught side-wheel steamer with dredge attached, and of sufficient power to move from place to place; also, ten wing-dam barges, each one hundred feet in length, enough to make a dam 1,000 feet in length; also, a small light-draught boat to be used in sounding and placing the barges in position on shoal water, and placing the whole under the control of a thoroughly practical river pilot. The said sums appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order that that identical amendment was voted on this morning.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am glad my colleague has made the point of order. I desire to be heard on it.

Mr. WILLIS. My only desire is in good faith to go on with this bill, and I must make the point of order on this amendment already voted on this morning.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not see where the good faith comes in, when an hour was taken this morning contrary to the agreement of last night.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the left [Mr. WHITE] as to whether this amendment was offered before.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to state I had a motion pending last night—

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thought the gentleman would withdraw the point of order when I stated the facts as they occurred.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if this amendment should be adopted we will, in all probability, accomplish for the navigation of the Mississippi River with the small sum of $155,000 what is proposed, even if we still had Mr. Eads in the bill. Here is a communication from a practical river-man, which I shall insert under the general leave, a letter from Mr. T. L. Lee, formerly of Paducah, Ky., now of Memphis, Tenn., and a practical river-man, stating that with this small amount of machinery and with the small sum of $150,000 he can prevent the widening of the river, and can keep a navigable channel through the whole year round. And we can save the millions of money which we have been sinking under your commission plan.

Why, sir, think of it. The repairs last year cost two millions of dollars; the repairs the year before cost two millions of dollars. What has your commission done for the Mississippi River? And the end is not yet. We propose, if we follow this committee, if we follow your commission, if we follow Mr. Eads in any of these propositions—we propose to take millions of money; we—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This is the cheapest way to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The letter of Mr. T. L. Lee, referred to by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, is as follows:

DEAR SIR: As the matter of improvement of the different rivers, and especially the Ohio and Mississippi, will be under consideration under different plans, I ask your aid in getting before the proper committee of Congress a plan of my own conception. It bears no indorsement from any river improvement commission or convention. I tried to reach Congress through the aid of the river improvement convention which met at Saint Louis in 1880, but I suppose the plan was too cheap, and found a burial (like most economical ones have) at the hands of the committee to whom it was referred. I now ask that the plan be considered on its own merits, without the aid of either council, convention, or commission, believing that your honorable body are fully competent to determine whether there is any merit in it or not. You will have enough convention and commission business to dispose of anyhow. As you are aware, the difficulty of navigation on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers during low water is due to a great extent to the formation of sand bars; and to the removal of such obstructions is what I desire to call your attention. The plan heretofore adopted has been to construct permanent and costly dams or dikes. These I consider failures to a great extent, as the cutting or wash occasioned by such structures is too great, and removes the difficulty from the point intended only to re-establish it again below and near the point of removal.

Dams and dikes are no doubt excellent improvements where shoals occur on firm bottoms, such as gravel, rock, &c. (such as the improvement now being made in the lower Ohio, at what is known as the Grand Chain, the object being to prevent the main channel flowing among rocks where steamers can not go; but where sand formations are the only trouble, temporary means can be adopted that will accomplish the work, and at a very small cost compared with the present system, and leave no dangerous obstruction when the river is high, such as dams and dikes frequently prove.

The plan offered for your consideration is this, namely:

Instead of building permanent dams use portable ones, constructed by means of barges, with gates attached, on the plan as shown by accompanying drawings, by which during low water a dam several hundred feet in length can be fixed at any given point in a few hours in any shape or angle that may be desired, and when a sufficient depth of channel has been obtained at one point, the dams can be taken up and removed to the next point requiring work; being once removed, the cause may never occur again (such has been demonstrated in many instances by the peculiar breaks and fickleness of sand obstructions).

In connection with the portable wing-dam I would recommend the use of a dredging-machine on the plan herewith submitted and shown by drawings, or something similar. If the use of the cylinder dredge should prove undesirable for the work, the use of water jets from large pumps (such as are used for washing the banks by the Mississippi River Commission) can be substituted and applied in place of same. I am confident both will prove a success. After establishing a temporary dam at the proper angle on a bar, say from one to two thousand feet in length, and putting the dredge at work at foot of dam (that being the channel point), but a few hours' work would be required to get a good depth of channel, and then the whole apparatus could be removed to another field of operation. I have no doubt that many dams have been built which need never have been if this plan had been in use. A sand bar once removed may never occur again in the same place and shape, a fact well known to every practical riverman. Nature sometimes does the work herself, and many places that were the worst years ago are now no trouble, although no artificial means have been used.

Being somewhat conversant with the cost of building boats and machinery, I give it as my opinion that an outlay of $150,000 by the Government will be sufficient to make a thorough and practical test of the plan. Should it fail of which I have no fears, all the appliances used could be used under the present system of work, except the dredge and gates on barges, which might be removed if not serviceable. The whole cost to the Government (as a loss) would not exceed 25 per cent. of the outlay.

As an experiment, I would suggest the construction of a light-draught side-wheel steamer, with dredge attached, and of sufficient power to move from place to place, ten wing-dam barges, each one hundred feet in length, enough to make a dam one thousand feet in length, and a small light-draught boat to be used in sounding and placing the barges in position on shoal water, and place the whole under the control of a thoroughly practical river-man.

It is well known to you, and to every one else who has paid any attention to such matters, that in many instances the obstructions to navigation caused by sand are not generally of great length; sometimes less than one hundred feet, known as reefs. Start the sand to washing in such places and it goes very rapidly. You will observe that by my plan you have the natural current, the force of the wheels of the steamer and dredge, all working in the proper direction. I think it would be a good idea to try both kinds of dredging, cylinder and water jets.

I have seen the boats constructed by the Mississippi River Commission to wash the banks, and think a similar plan, with the use of my lever frame (used on the cylinder dredge) to keep the nozzles fixed on the bottom as the boat moved over the sand, would induce very rapid washing and accomplish much toward obtaining a uniform depth of water.

I believe on investigation it will be found but little has been accomplished to improve navigation between Louisville, Cairo, Saint Louis, and New Orleans during the last twenty-five years, except by removal of snags and establishing lights, both of which are a great benefit to commerce. I have my doubts of the success of any of the present great schemes for improvement of the Mississippi River, either by jetties or otherwise. If we attempt too much we may fail to do what is necessary, and by grasping at giant schemes lose what good might result from moderate and practical ones. Let us keep up our snagboat and light-house system in the most perfect manner—build dams or dikes where we have firm bottoms, and use portable means where sand is the trouble, and we will find the rivers ample to carry all we may produce, and not spend millions of dollars in trying to work up impossibilities.

I have submitted my plan to some very practical river-men, and have never had one to condemn it, and I might have procured a long list of petitioners indorsing it, but I claim the plan is so plain and the expense so little to try it (in comparison with other schemes), that petitions, conventions, and commissions are not needed." I therefore submit it on its face value, trusting you and your associates in Congress may deem it worthy of a trial.

Yours, respectfully,

T. L. LEE.

PADUCAH, KY., November 21, 1881.

The following is a communication from the War Department, with inclosure, in answer to a letter addressed to the Department by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 13, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 14th ultimo, inviting the attention of the Department to a communication inclosed by you, containing the views of Mr. T. L. Lee, of Paducah, Ky., in regard to the improvement of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.

In reply to your request, that if the Department finds in the suggestions of Mr. Lee anything worth recommending you may be informed, I beg to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the 12th instant, from the Chief of Engineers, and the accompanying copy of a report from Maj. W. E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, in charge of the improvement of the Ohio River, from which it will be seen that in the use of movable dikes or wing-dams Mr. Lee has been anticipated both in this country and abroad.

Very respectfully,

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Acting Chief Clerk,
(For the Secretary of War, in his absence).

Hon. J. D. WHITE,
Of Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Cincinnati, Ohio, April 5, 1882.

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith the letter of Hon. J. D. WHITE, member of Congress, to the honorable Secretary of War, regarding the plan of Mr. T. L. Lee for improving the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, referred to me by inclosure dated March 20, 1882, and to make the following report:

The use of movable apparatus for the removal of shoals is very ancient. There are doubtless many cases of such use of which I have no record, but the following are to be found in some of my books and reports. The earliest mention of it I have discovered is in a work entitled Des Travaux du Fleuve du Rhin, by A. J. Ch. Defontaine (Paris, 1833). On page 37 a certain apparatus of this character is described and the results obtained by using it are given, but there are no drawings of the device itself. These, however, may be found on plate 63 of Cours de Constructions de Sganzin and Reibell (Paris, 1839-1841).

On plate 4 of the Cours de Construction of M. Minard (Paris, 1841) there is shown, besides the above-mentioned apparatus, another, somewhat similar, that was used on the Garonne.

In the Navigation Intérieure de De Lagrené (Paris, 1871), volume 2, page 174, mention is made of a number of similar devices as having been used on the canal of La Somme, on the Burgundy Canal, on the maritime canal of Abbeville, and in the sewers of Paris.

It should be stated, however, that all of the above are small affairs that are not applicable to rivers of any size, and their use differs from that of movable dikes in that they wholly obstruct the channel, and the water is forced to pass with increased velocity under them, while movable dikes only cause a partial obstruction of the stream, and the volume of the river passes alongside. The underlying principle, however, is essentially the same.

In 1874 Mr. Julius Rapp, assistant city engineer of Saint Louis, requested my opinion of a movable dike or "patented portable wing-dam," invented by Messrs. Emerson and Doyle of that city, which had done good service in deepening a bar at the upper end of the city wharf. The patentees wished to have their apparatus tried in Government work on the Ohio. In my reply I objected to the apparatus on the ground of the expense attending its use on a large scale, and the great number of such dikes that would be required if applied to all of the bars of the lower Ohio.

The only case that has come to my knowledge of the actual and regular use of movable dikes is in Russia, on the Volga. I inclose herewith an account of these dikes, being an extract from a letter to me from Mr. P. Michailoff, Russian Government engineer, whose acquaintance I made in this city in 1876, he having visited our Centennial Exposition. I have taken the liberty of making a few verbal changes in the wording of this letter in order to make it read more smoothly, but no change has been made in its meaning. Two tracings accompany Mr. Michailoff's letter, of which copies are inclosed. The titles and dimensions on the originals are in Russian, but the former were kindly translated for me by Lieut. F. V. Greene, Corps of Engineers, and the latter were readily transformed, as the base of the Russian system of measures is the English foot.

It will be observed that according to Michailoff the use of movable dikes has sprung from the failure of fixed ones, and has apparently been a last resort. It is not claimed that they are cheaper, and in view of the fact that all the parts are made of perishable material, it seems clear that they must be considerably more expensive.

In examining tracing No. 1, it will be observed that the diking is held in place by an inclined spar in rear and by chains in front. I know nothing of the amount of drift that annually comes down the Volga, but as the whole of European Russia is a vast plain, usually destitute of trees, I should infer that no annoyance was experienced on that account; in which opinion I am confirmed by the number of floating lights that are shown on figure 1 of tracing No. 2. There are such lights on the Ohio, but it is with great difficulty that they are maintained. The Russian system seems to be as simple and as little likely to be deranged as any that could be devised, but I am afraid that it would be impracticable to apply it on the Ohio on account of the snags and drift that would inevitably catch on the chains and on the back spar.

Another point in favor of Russian rivers is the unusual steadiness of the flow of water. Janicki says (Non-Tidal Rivers, page 28):

"A second characteristic feature distinguishes Russian rivers from the other rivers of Europe: they overflow their banks more rarely and at periodically fixed times. Most of them have only a single spring flood; during summer, autumn, and winter rises are usually rare and always small."

"After the spring floods in Russia the rivers fall to their low-water stage in May or June, and they ordinarily remain there with some slight oscillations until the breaking up of the ice in the following spring."

It is evident that a river that changes its level often during the low-water period is not well adapted to the use of movable apparatus of any kind, as the necessary changes in adjustment and the occasional removal of the whole apparatus would be annoying and expensive: it is also clear that the Volga is better adapted to the use of such affairs than the Ohio.

The extract from Michailoff's letter is apparently in favor of the use of these dikes. The only other Russian opinion on them that I have is that of Janicki, which may be found in Non-Tidal Rivers, pages 11 and 12. It will be observed that he refers to the same movable dikes of Yannkowski that are shown in tracing No. 1.

To make this review complete I have yet to mention two or three secondary processes, whose action is only auxiliary and temporary, such as dredging, movable apparatus for contracting channels, the reticulated dikes of Engineer Yannkowski, &c.

"In regard to temporary contrivances of various names and kinds, trellis-work, basket-work, temporary movable gates, &c., designed to momentarily contract the channels of rivers, when they are properly and reasonably applied to removing bars, they can in certain places give incontestable results; but these results are generally so small, so insignificant, and dependent on so many surrounding circumstances that, in my opinion, no serious importance ought to be given to any of these methods. They can only be employed when the water has nearly reached its lowest stage, and when the bars are therefore exposed, and have already become troublesome to navigation. It only requires a slight rise, a storm, some carelessness in placing the apparatus, a shock, or perhaps a little too hard a knock from a boat or a raft, to disarrange them, and thus destroy the additional depth thus obtained over the bar by the aforesaid contrivances."

"Rivers, besides, have more than one bar in their course, and navigation will always find in one place or another more than one troublesome point, and consequently a gain of a few inches in depth at a small number of bars, and at comparatively great cost, does not in reality constitute a complete remedy for the evil. Such machines, however, have a moral effect, if I may be allowed the term. Boat-owners who have to suffer from low water on the bars complain less if they see that something is being done to relieve them. I know not how better to compare these means of temporary contraction than to the anodynes which a physician prescribes in order to quiet his patient until he can make a diagnosis of the disease and begin a really efficacious treatment."

It is evident, therefore, that even in Russia opinions are divided as to the advantages of movable dikes.

Figure 1 of tracing No. 2 shows that at the bar on the Volga, which is there shown, the dike had to be 4,600 feet, or seven-eighths of a mile, long; while Michailoff's letter shows that on the portion of the river where this method of improvement is adopted there are in use eighteen miles of diking five steamboats, three dredges—which is a very expensive outfit.

My conclusion from the above is that it would be advisable for the Government to procure, through its diplomatic agents, the fullest possible information as to the utility and cost of movable dikes as applied to the Volga, and that it is unadvisable for the United States to make expensive experiments in a field that has already been worked by other nations when the results of their expenditures may be learned for the asking. After we know the results of experience in Russia we can decide for ourselves on the expediency of adopting the same system in this country.

It is evident from this investigation that in the use of movable dikes or wing-dams Mr. Lee has been anticipated both in this country and abroad; his special device may be new, but as no drawings accompanied the papers I have no means of forming an opinion on this point.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM E. MERRILL,
Major of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers.

MINISTRY OF PUBLIC WORKS, St. Petersburg, June 1, 1880.

DEAR SIR: A year ago I received your letter, stating your wish to have some information concerning the dikes and dams on the Volga; but since that time I have been quite ill and therefore unable to give you the desired information.

For twenty years there have been no fixed dikes constructed on the Volga. The reason for this was the failure of the fixed dikes constructed in the upper Volga from Tver to Rybinsk. Instead of fixed dikes the channel of the Volga has been regulated by floating movable dikes.

The most considerable obstructions to navigation are encountered between Rybinsk and the mouth of the river Kama. The works were designed to give, in the lowest stage of the river, a channel depth of 3 feet 9 inches from Rybinsk to the mouth of the Oka, and of 5 feet 3 inches from the mouth of the Oka to the mouth of the Kama.

This was attained by the use of floating rafts with movable dikes, the construction of which is shown on the inclosed tracing No. 1. The dikes are disposed in lines parallel to the channel, as is shown in figure 1 of tracing No. 2, and their effect is indicated in figure 2 of the same tracing.

Many shoals have entirely disappeared from the effect of these movable dikes. The annual expense of maintaining these dikes, including necessary repairs and removals, is about 15 per cent. of their first cost.

The engineers in charge of these works have at their disposal eighteen miles of the dikes, together with five steamboats and three dredges, and with these they are able to maintain the indicated depth of channel in the Volga from Rybinsk to the mouth of the Kama.

I remain, yours, very truly,

P. MICHAÏLOFF,
Government Engineer.

Col. WILLIAM E. MERRILL,
United States Engineer, Cincinnati Ohio.

[The following, showing the opinion of General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers until 1879, is also printed by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, in connection with his remarks under the general leave to print:

An outlet is intended for a waste-weir in floods only, and is not designed to discharge any water when the river has returned within its banks. Its opponents have claimed that a high-water outlet so permanently built as to remain always unchanged, and which merely discharged sufficient water during flood as to keep the river within its banks, would raise the bed of the river below, and instead of lowering the floods below would raise them. And this they said it would do, because a river always carries an amount of sediment exactly proportioned to the velocity of its current, and if the velocity of that current was reduced sediment would be dropped and a shoal at once be formed.

But, as I have already explained, all the facts ascertained on the Mississippi River disprove this dogma. Indeed, if it was true, and if it was true that the river bed just below the Bonnet Carré crevasse shoaled up thirty feet in 1850 because of that crevasse, then the river bed at New Orleans ought to have filled up completely to the top of its banks long ago, since it is determined beyond question by the investigations of General Abbot and myself that the river there in its low stages and least currents often has more sediment in its water than at very much higher stages and swifter currents.

Mr. WASHBURN. But I understood you to say that the Bonnet Carré crevasse did not shoal the main river below the crevasse.

General HUMPHREYS. That is what I said.

Mr. WASHBURN. And I understand you now in answer to Mr. Townsend to give an opposite opinion as to the effect of an outlet.

General HUMPHREYS. No, sir; you are mistaken. It is the mouth of the river that I am talking about now, two hundred miles from the Bonnet Carré crevasse, and what will take place there, at the mouth, when the outlet becomes the river.

Mr. WASHBURN. I thought the point you were discussing was the effect that a crevasse would have upon the main channel below.

General HUMPHREYS. That was the point, but the question now is the final result of a great outlet.

Mr. WASHBURN. But I understood you to say that the Bonnet Carré crevasse did not cause any change in the channel below.

General HUMPHREYS. Yes; it did not cause any change at that point or elsewhere in the channel.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 92.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point that a quorum has not voted. A provision that carries so many millions of dollars to destruction should be considered by a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WILLIS. It was agreed with the Committee on Appropriations we should occupy a certain time. That time has now expired; and in pursuance of the agreement I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose.

The SPEAKER (Hon. J. G. CARLISLE) here assumed the chair after an absence of two weeks on account of sickness. His appearance in the chair was the signal for loud and prolonged bursts of applause from members throughout the whole House.

Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill (H. R. 8015) for the relief of Edward G. Pendleton be changed, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a general appropriation bill. Pending that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] rises to a privileged question, which he will state.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that at 6 o'clock p. m. to-day the House take a recess until 10 a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] if he will consent that before 11 o'clock to-morrow the committee shall rise in order that the House may adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that there is to be an adjournment before 11 o'clock to-morrow I have no objection to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has so stated.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which that motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7585) for the relief of William M. Gardner;

A bill (H. R. 7584) for the relief of A. P. Montgomery; and

A bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a general appropriation bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put I desire to make a suggestion in relation to the discussion that is to take place on this bill. I wish to suggest that when the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union we go on with the reading of the bill—not the first part of it, the reading of which may be dispensed with—that we go on with the reading of the bill until we come to that part relating to the increase of the Navy, and have the general debate at that time. I think that plan will facilitate the dispatch of business this evening.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason that I am aware of why we should depart from the usual course with reference to this bill. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to abridge debate beyond the necessities of the session.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], let me remark that I am not saying anything about abridging debate or extending it because, so far as I know (speaking for myself and some others on this side of the House) we do not desire to prolong debate. I am speaking of an understanding as to the part of the bill upon which the general debate shall take place, and I have suggested that we go on and read the bill up to that point, and we will try to get through the general debate as rapidly as possible.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I think general debate had better begin at once.

The SPEAKER. There seems to be objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. I am sorry for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been reserved. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS].

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. WELLSBORN in the chair), and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee at this stage of the discussion by any extended remarks, but I will ask for the reading of the report; first stating to the House that the report is full in detail and gives a better explanation of the bill and its provisions than I could give if I should talk for an hour. I now ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates upon which the bill is based will be found on pages 103 to 118 of the Book of Estimates, and aggregate $30,555,999.50, not including $26,111, which is payable from the naval pension fund, of which sum there is specifically recommended in the accompanying bill $12,515,837.95, together with $30,000 for the naval asylum, which is payable from the naval pension fund, being $1,464,643.64 less than the appropriations for like purposes for the current fiscal year. ‡ Payable from naval pension fund.

New legislation of a general character is contained in the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to select and appoint a board to consist of three civilians, who shall be skilled in naval architecture and engineering, and three naval officers, one of whom shall be of the line of the Navy above the rank of captain, one a naval constructor, and the third a naval engineer, with the Secretary of the Navy as the seventh member and president of said board.

"Said board shall meet in Washington within thirty days subsequent to their appointment, and, after organization, prepare and cause to be printed and sent to all ex-Secretaries of the Navy, all officers, and retired officers of the line and staff of the Navy, to prominent ship-builders, marine and naval architects, engineers, and others interested in such matters, a circular asking for such suggestions, advice, and information, as they may see fit to offer, within such time as the board may fix, in relation to the types of war vessels necessary for an adequate naval establishment for the United States.

"The board shall, on receipt of replies to such circulars, consider the subject and determine the general classes and character of the vessels to be constructed, and, on approval by the President, shall cause extensive notice to be given calling on marine architects, engineers, inventors, and others skilled in the art of designing and building ships of war for competitive designs for such types of vessels as in the opinion of the board should be first constructed; the designs to consist of exact display and working plans, drawings, specifications, and estimates, accompanied by suitable builder's models, to be presented within a certain day.

"The board shall fairly and equitably consider and determine the relative merits of the various designs and exhibits so presented for competition, and shall make awards for the same for each of the classes of vessels, not exceeding four, that may be deemed worthy of adoption for the service. For the best of each class accepted by the board the award shall be $10,000, and for the second best $5,000.

"The board shall complete its work and report to the President on or before the last day of December, 1885, all plans it may deem worthy of notice, and full information of all its acts and awards, for transmission to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem advisable; and said board shall also consider whether the five unfinished monitors are suffering from their present incomplete condition, and whether they should be completed and armed, and shall embrace their conclusions and recommendations thereon in their report on said classes of vessels to the President, for transmission to Congress.

"One vessel of each class recommended by the board to be first built, if the recommendation be approved by the President, shall be built of American material and in the United States, by contract by the Secretary of the Navy with the lowest responsible bidder, to be awarded after due advertisement inviting proposals therefor; and such contractor shall execute bond in such penalty and with such security as the Secretary of the Navy shall fix and approve for the faithful execution of the contract. The material used in the construction of said vessels shall be subjected to such tests as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and said vessels shall be built under his supervision.

"The board shall have authority to employ such experts, draughtsmen, and clerical assistance as it may deem necessary. The pay of the civilian members of the board shall be $10 per day and actual traveling expenses; and the pay of its employees shall be such as is fixed by law in the Navy Department for like services. The necessary money to pay the expenses of the board and its awards, and for the building of the vessels as herein provided for, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid, under the directions of the President of the United States, by a naval pay-officer to be detailed therefor by the Secretary of the Navy.

"The provisions of this section shall take effect immediately after the passage of this act.

"SEC. 3. That no officer whose name is borne on the retired-list of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall hold position in the civil service or other employment of the Government, and draw the salary or compensation thereof together with his pay as a retired officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided, That any such retired officer accepting a position in the civil service or other employment of the Government may, at the time of acceptance, elect to take the salary of such position or in lieu to retain his pay as a retired officer: Provided further, That the restrictions of this section shall not apply to any officer below the rank of major in the Army or Marine Corps, or commander in the Navy who has been retired by reason of wounds received in service, or to any retired officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps designated by law to perform civilian duty."

Mr. LONG (interrupting the reading). I presume it is not necessary for the Clerk to read that portion of the report which merely recites provisions contained in the bill, as they will be read when we come to consider them.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will not ask for the further reading of the report, as I presume every gentleman has a copy of it before him.

Mr. KEIFER. Having had some consultation with gentlemen on the other side, I desire to renew my proposition that by unanimous consent we now proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, dispensing with general debate upon the bill in general, but that when we come to the part of the bill relating to the increase of the Navy we then have discussion on that proposition in the nature of general debate for two hours on each side.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I presume the gentleman refers to section 2.

Mr. KEIFER. I employed that general expression to indicate section 2 of the bill.

Mr. HUTCHINS. For my part I have no objection to that arrangement, this side of the House taking such portion of the two hours as may be deemed proper, and two hours being allowed to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is that this bill be now read by paragraphs under the five-minute rule until section 2 is reached, and upon that section general debate be had for two hours on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. BAGLEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Several messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion and test of two breech-loading rifle cannon of the larger calibers now in course of construction for the Navy, with carriages and ammunition for both, $80,000: Provided, That the test shall be conducted as follows: With battering charges for two hours, and under the most rapid continuous rate of firing, as near as may be like the conditions of a hotly-contested battle; then with the service charge not less than five hours. Permission, with ample notice to be present, shall be given to all persons who indicate a desire to examine the preliminary preparation and witness the firing. Expenditures of public money on all other naval cannon of and above said caliber shall cease until this public test has terminated. And all the facts and incidents of the test shall be reported to Congress by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance as soon thereafter as possible.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit the following amendment:

After the paragraph just read insert the following: For completing a 6-inch wire-wound gun, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For testing American armor made of American material, $25,000.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, I propose this amendment with the expectation that it will be accepted as proper by this House. I do not know of any line of discovery or any practical results depending upon the ingenuity of man in which the American people are not equal to those of any part of the world. We propose to build a navy; and I sincerely trust that the incoming administration will be committed to the propriety of such protection to this great country. But I propose we shall build that navy here, and build it of material manufactured in the United States.

We have been buying our armor-plate abroad at immense cost. We make to-day a better steel than is manufactured in any part of the world. If you will call at the Ordnance Department the officers will tell you this is the fact. And we can make it cheaper than it is made abroad.

If we are to build a navy of iron-clad ships, and make them all at home, we make our navy popular. And if war, with its calamities, should ever come upon this country, we shall demonstrate to the world that we are equally prepared for defensive or offensive warfare.

Mr. Chairman, the American people have never failed to assert their ingenuity and energy and power or their valor upon land and sea. In 1812-'13 they improvised a navy with which they fought upon the high seas. Our history is illustrated for all time by the heroic conduct of the officers and sailors of that Navy; and when the Army surrendered in Canada and the Capitol of this country was burned, the Navy fought this nation into consequence.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we commenced the late war with muskets loaded at the muzzle by ramrods—many of them flint-locks. We introduced as the first step in progress the Springfield rifle and the Snyder rifle; and at last we gave to the world the Winchester rifle. The guns we thus introduced were adopted by the other nations of the world. Following our example, Germany, in 1866, in her great war with Austria, succeeded by the superiority of her arms; and in the late war between Russia and Turkey, where the Russians failed to take the Turkish forts, the Turks resisted the assaults with American guns.

Mr. Chairman, in three hours down here in Hampton Roads we revolutionized naval warfare for all the world. The Merrimac and the Monitor taught all the nations that they could only engage in warfare upon the sea with iron-clad ships. But we stopped there. Foreign nations improved on the examples we set them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS obtained the floor, and said: I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. Foreign nations improved on what was developed from the brain of the American people, until at last they have navies, while we have no Navy that can contend with them on the high seas or in domestic defense. There is no man in this enlightened presence who, if he has read the condition of things abroad, the unrest in Europe, the coalitions there forming, does not fear (if he is not convinced) that there is a war impending which may shake the commerce, trade, and civilization of all the world.

If such a calamity should fall on humanity this great nation should be prepared to take her part, if in the providence of God she should be thrown into any such contest, and we should be prepared for it.

Mr. Chairman, when in the history of this wonderful people has there ever been a discovery or improvement in machinery, in art or science, in the world where if you invite capital and enterprise and ingenuity the American mind is not equal to it. I, sir, am in favor of building a navy that will be formidable in war, respected in time of peace, and equal in its character and force to the dignity and power of this great people. I offer that amendment that we shall satisfy the world if we do build a navy we will do it here with American capital American ingenuity, and American material. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBOTT. Did the gentleman have in view the defective armor invented by Mr. Clark?

Mr. CURTIN. No matter what kind; my amendment includes that as well as all others.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out the last word. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to prolong the debate on this subject. I wish to say, if this bill as a whole should be adopted and become law, it is highly important the amendment of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania should prevail. Now, later on I hope to be able to give the reasons why I am not in favor of certain portions of the bill which provide for the construction of certain vessels for the United States Navy out of American material and in the United States, yet I wish now to say I am in favor of the construction of a navy for the United States, one which will be ample and a needful one, that will meet the requirements of the country, and I am in favor of that Navy being constructed of American material and in the United States.

Mr. CURTIN's amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announcing the adoption of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session; and the Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of the New York, $400,000.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that paragraph, and I rest it upon two grounds: First, that it is new legislation; and in the second place, that it does not retrench expenditure, but rather involves expenditure. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the construction of this vessel never was authorized by law, that it has been in New York from 1865 to the present time. How that may be I do not know, except that such is my information.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman wishes to discuss the measure I have no objection, provided we can be allowed to be heard in reply.

Mr. CANNON. I will not discuss the paragraph, but confine myself to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. If this is subject to the point of order it goes out, and we can not be heard in reply to the gentleman if he makes any remarks on the merits of the case.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. RANDALL. I only ask if the gentleman discusses the merits on his point of order that there may be an opportunity to answer him.

Mr. CANNON. I am not discussing the merits at all.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought you were.

Mr. CANNON. I was stating my point of order and shall confine myself strictly to it.

Now, I find by referring to Executive Document No. 48, first session Forty-eighth Congress, that the original cost of the New York was $581,000. When I turned to the law making appropriations for six months of the current year I find a provision in the following language. I have not the law before me, but I read from the current bill, which is a copy of the law:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material.

That has been the law precisely for three years past and is again enacted for the current year. It is existing law, namely, that no money shall be expended for repairs of any wooden ship where the estimated cost of the repairs exceed 20 per cent. of the present value of the ship. It is 30 in the bill but 20 in the law. They propose to enlarge the limit and change the law in that respect. The original cost was half a million dollars, and it is proposed to spend $400,000 more, they say, for completion. That means for reconstruction, of course. I think it is new legislation, changes the law, and is subject to the third clause of Rule XXI.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand correctly the point of order the gentleman raises against the paragraph in relation to the completion of the New York is that the bill appropriates $400,000 not in accordance with law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has already under appropriations been expended on that vessel $200,000, and it is therefore a public work in progress of construction. The clause of Rule XXI on which the gentleman relies is as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

There has been a law by which $200,000 has been expended on this very vessel, and this paragraph proposes to appropriate $400,000, in compliance with the suggestion of the Chief of the Bureau, to complete the vessel.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois claims this is an old ship upon which $500,000 has already been expended.

Mr. RANDALL. Not $500,000, but $200,000.

Mr. CANNON. It is $500,000 in the document I have here.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not an old ship at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois claims this to be an old ship, and that there is now existing a law preventing repairs on any wooden vessel when the estimated cost of the repairs exceed 20 per cent. of its value.

Mr. RANDALL. That means repairs on a vessel that has been in commission. This applies to an incomplete vessel, a vessel that has never been in commission, and is still on the stocks in an unfinished state.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman with reference to this point of order whether this vessel has been completed or not?

Mr. RANDALL. I have just stated that it has not been completed. There has been expended upon it some $200,000, but it is yet on the stocks, and this appropriation provided in the bill is to complete it in conformity with the recommendation of the Bureau of Construction.

Mr. LONG. This appropriation is simply for the completion of the ship which has never been completed, and not for its repair.

Mr. THOMAS. The point, to put it briefly, is simply this: This ship has never been authorized by law; its construction has never been authorized. Therefore the beginning of the ship by the Navy Department without authority of law will not save it against the point of order, which prohibits the expenditure of money on objects not expressly authorized by law.

Now this provision is obnoxious to the third clause of the twenty-first rule in this, that it is an attempt made here for the completion of a vessel begun without authority and which never has been authorized by law. That is the point.

Mr. RANDALL. In response to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that we have a right to conclude that this vessel was commenced in accordance with law; and the onus is on the gentleman himself to show that it was not so authorized.

Mr. THOMAS. I defy the gentleman to show where it was ever authorized by any law.

Mr. RANDALL. It was commenced under an appropriation made in 1865; and in addition there is as much authority of law for its commencement as there is for either or any of the monitors, as far as I am informed.

Mr. CANNON. I now send to the desk for the examination of the Chair the executive document of which I spoke a short time ago and from which I quoted.

I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I do not think this appropriation can be sustained under the clause of Rule XXI which has been referred to by him. I will read it:

No appropriations shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, sir, this is not a public work in progress; on the contrary, the appropriation under which the expenditure has been made was made and expended twenty years ago, and there the ship, I am informed, has lain from that day until the present. I grant you if the appropriation had been made last year and the work had been in progress from year to year it would have been a continuing work, and the point of order might be saved under that clause of the rule. So much for that; I mean unless it were affected by the provision of law in reference to the 20 per cent. expenditure to which I have before called the attention of the Chair, and of which the Chair will take notice in ruling upon the point of order.

Now, in reply to the gentleman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] has stated that the construction of this ship never was authorized by law. I do not know how that is. If it was authorized by law, then I call on gentlemen to furnish that authority.

Mr. COX, of New York. It was done six years ago.

Mr. TALBOTT. The presumption is that it has been authorized by law; but the burden of proof rests on you.

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield now; but if the gentleman can furnish the authority of law under which this construction was begun I will yield for an answer.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I tell the gentleman that six years ago it was authorized.

Mr. CANNON. Give me the authority.

Mr. COX, of New York. I could look it up—

Mr. THOMAS (interrupting). Why it was begun in 1865, twenty years ago.

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes; but there was an appropriation made for it six years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Six years ago; well, that is exceeding lean. Now, I say it is well fixed, it has been driven home here by points of order by the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself time and again until it has become a part and parcel of the existing law of this country, that no ship can be constructed lawfully until there is authority of law for it.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will you yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Not now.

Now, if I moved an amendment here to build a new ship, costing $4,000,000, and appropriating the money, the gentleman could rise in his place, as I have seen him do time and again, and make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the construction, and that it would not be in order, because it was new legislation on the bill increasing expenditures. If it be true that there is no law for the construction of this ship, and money was appropriated for the resumption of the work upon it in the absence of a general law, when that money first appropriated was expended that was the end of it; and until the general law is passed further appropriations would not be in order.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to give one precedent to the gentleman from Illinois. The Puritan was authorized to be built by a Secretary of the Navy at the expiration of his term, and the contract entered into therefor; and there never was a word of law or authority given by any Congress or by anybody except that contract and the ratification of the contract from time to time by the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. And it has been denounced from one end of the country to the other as unlawful.

Mr. TALBOTT. It never was denounced on that side of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. I denounced it.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that we are discussing a question of law and not politics.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the paragraph is in order under the the exception stated in the rule:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Mr. LONG. I do not care for this matter with reference to the completion of the New York. But if the view taken by the gentleman from Illinois is correct, then that portion of the bill which relates to an increase of the Navy is also subject to the point of order.

I therefore desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fundamental law on this subject. There is existing law for the construction of new vessels. Section 417 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows, and I call the attention of the Chair to that section:

The Secretary of the Navy shall execute such orders as he shall receive from the President relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war as well as all other matters connected with the naval establishment.

There exists to-day a law by which under that sanction the President can order the Secretary of the Navy to construct, arm, equip, and employ vessels; and an appropriation to meet the expense of such construction is an appropriation to carry out an object contemplated by existing law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], before he takes his seat, if the Secretary of the Navy, unless it is under express law, with the money already appropriated to carry on the work, notwithstanding he should have any number of those orders from the Executive, if he should make a contract involving the Government in a dollar's expense, would not be liable to impeachment?

Mr. LONG. I refer the gentleman to the statute, which says the Secretary shall execute these orders.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh! the gentleman has read one statute, which has been supplemented by the statute to which I call his attention, and under which the moment the Secretary makes such contracts and involves the Government in a dollar of expense he is liable to impeachment. I appeal to my friends on the other side of the House to verify my statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from New York indicate the date of the law to which he refers?

Mr. HISCOCK. I refer to those general laws which forbid any Department to make a contract to involve the Government in any way beyond the appropriations already made. I apprehend my declaration upon this point will not be questioned by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to say one word upon the point of order. It seems to me it is not important in the discussion and decision of this point of order whether or no there exists to-day authority of law for the construction of this vessel; because under paragraph 3, Rule XXI, this exact instance is provided for. The rule says:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

If it stopped there the suggestion of my friend from Illinois would be correct; but it proceeds—although there may not be authority of law—yet—unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

A paragraph or amendment with that object in view is in order. If this is a public work in progress, assuming that there was authority for it to have been entered upon and it is not completed, then a provision may be reported in an appropriation bill for the completion of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman from Maine tell us when this vessel has been in progress—how many years ago?

Mr. DINGLEY. It makes no difference. If it is an incomplete work it is in progress until its completion.

Mr. CANNON. The rule does not say "which has been in progress," but it says "in progress"—in presenti.

Mr. DINGLEY. The work has been going on. Though there may have been no work during the last week or during the last year, yet if it is incomplete the work is in progress.

Mr. KEIFER. Although suspended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. Clause 3, Rule XXI, provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Unquestionably the general rule is that no appropriation is in order on a general appropriation bill unless the appropriation be authorized by previously existing law. That is the general rule. But to that general rule there is an express exception:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

That is to say, if the work be a public work and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislative authority for the work.

Now, the Chair must believe that the construction of this ship is a public work. The Chair also believes that it is in progress. The mere fact that this vessel begun in 1865 is confessedly still incomplete, the Chair thinks, so far as this rule is concerned, does not show that that work is not now in progress. The fact that the actual construction is temporarily interrupted for want of appropriation or some other reason does not interfere with the idea that the work is in progress. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out the whole provision relating to the appropriation for the completion of the New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], I apprehend, will be in order first; so I withhold mine for the present.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desired to offer his amendment to perfect the text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the nature of the amendment it will be first in order, and the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following proviso:

"Provided, That such completion shall be upon plans and specifications to be prepared by the Navy Department, and by contract by the Secretary of the Navy let to the lowest responsible bidder."

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no opposition to this amendment. I am sure there is no intention on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to open up work in these navy-yards. We have so long recognized the propriety of doing our work of this kind by contract that I suppose there will be no opposition made to a proviso of this kind.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is not this vessel already in course of construction in a navy-yard?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes; it is over there in the stocks, I suppose; but I will make this further reply to the gentleman's question: Nothing has been done upon this ship, not a dollar has been expended upon her for a period of nineteen years. I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman, that the Book of Estimates does not show that her completion is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. Year after year the estimates have come in here and have been submitted to this House without containing any such recommendation. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has passed upon that submission time and time again.

No committee has ever reported in favor of this work. Now I ask that the Committee on Appropriations shall accept this amendment which I have offered, and if we are to complete this old ship at all, do not let it be done so as to have the appearance of being designed to furnish work for somebody or give employment to a new force in the Brooklyn navy-yard. I am sure that nothing of that kind is intended by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS], and therefore I trust that he will accept this amendment providing that this work shall be done in the usual way.

Mr. BEACH. Let us do it in the old way.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I call for the reading of the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That such completion shall be upon plans and specifications to be prepared by the Navy Department, and by contract by the Secretary of the Navy let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman [Mr. HISCOCK] must be aware of the fact that this ship is about half completed, and has been so far built by the Government. The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, who certainly could not have had in contemplation that we on this side, or any one, had any intention of employing any particular set of men to do the work, has recommended that it shall be done, and I ask for the reading of an extract from his report upon that subject, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bureau strongly recommends the completion of the frigate New York at the Brooklyn navy-yard. This vessel has been on the stocks in one of the ship-houses since 1865, and from the fact that she was in frame before work was suspended on her and was neither sealed nor planked, the air has freely circulated through her timbers, and to-day they are as hard as bone and probably in better condition than any frame timbers ever put in a ship. If completed with materials that have been preserved by the Thilmann process for preserving ship-timbers she would make a useful and most efficient ship of her class for twenty years. Although designed in 1865, she is an exceedingly fine model, and if finished will give us a first-class flagship. She can carry a battery as heavy and equally as well arranged for head and stern fire as the new cruiser Chicago has. Her length on the main load-line is 315 feet; extreme breadth of beam 47 feet; depth from lower edge of rabbet of keel to lower port-sill on gun-deck 25 feet 11 inches. She is designed to have a ship's rig, having 24,000 square feet of sail surface in her ten principal sails. Her displacement, at a draught of 18 feet 9 inches forward and 21 feet 5 inches aft, would be equal to 4,527 tons. Her lowest port-sill on the gun-deck would be 8 feet above water. The plans for finishing this vessel are in such a condition that they could be completed in a very short time, and the work on her, if authorized, could be pushed to completion and the vessel put afloat within six months from the time it is resumed.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The committee will perceive that here is a recommendation by the Bureau of Construction and Repair that this ves-nel be completed. The completion of the vessel is also recommended by the Secretary of the Navy in his estimates. The plans have all been made; the ship is partly constructed under such plans; and this officer tells us in this report that the material has been thoroughly preserved, and that at an expense of $400,000 a ship of war can be completed equal in efficiency to either the Boston or the Chicago, which are now in course of construction. I believe that in pursuance of the provision of the clause of the bill which has just been read by the Clerk thirty-eight vessels have been stricken from the list of the Navy within the last year, and within two years but very few will remain in commission. Now, for $400,000 we can finish a partly completed vessel which will be as efficient for all purposes of the future as any of the other ships which are under construction and for which the gentleman is so willing to vote an appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I may be pardoned a word in reply. Certainly some gentlemen upon the other side of the House have cooperated with us in closing these navy-yards, or in limiting them to repair work, and for that reason I thought they approved of our policy.

Mr. HUTCHINS. This Brooklyn navy-yard is not one of that class, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, well, the policy in reference to even the Brooklyn navy-yard has been that no new work should be done there.

This is substantially new work; and I say to my friends on the other side that they do not want to drop into that custom or policy which, when the Democratic party went out of power, had brought upon it disgrace and stigma. You remember well all these scandals with reference to the Brooklyn navy-yard and the other navy-yards. The contract system is the better system. Let us have it. Do not now, upon the coming in of a new Democratic administration, inaugurate this policy which we all attempted to stamp out of existence, of filling the navy-yards with voters, with "strikers," with men to carry caucuses and conventions or to take possession of the polls.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman is talking to me in an unknown tongue. I do not know what he means.

Mr. COX, of New York. The language of the gentleman is not unknown to me. I have known it for many years. Since the Republican party has been in power such language as "strikers," &c., has become quite familiar. Never has that navy-yard opposite New York been used except for Republican "strikers." For twenty-odd years the gentleman's party has had the benefit of that kind of "striking."

I do not rise to answer what he has said, but to say that this vessel, the New York, is under way and should be finished. The work should not be finished by contract, but should be done in the navy-yard by honest labor day by day, under honest Democratic auspices, and not under the scoundrelism that has prevailed during the last twenty-five years. I think that is enough to say—a good climax. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I had hoped that no feeling of partisanship would be aroused in regard to this matter. I wish to say it is not practicable to execute this work in the manner proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. This vessel is now in a navy-yard; and to put out by contract the work of finishing her would bring into the yard private persons to do this work, and it would also interfere with the use of the material necessary to complete the vessel and which the Government has on hand. I have never known an instance where any vessel in the Navy has been partly built in a navy-yard under the direction of the respective bureaus and partly built under contract.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a policy was agreed upon on this subject and written in the law by the last Congress, by the aid of a portion of the gentlemen on the other side and by the almost unanimous action of this side, a policy which originated with the Committee on Naval Affairs under the lead of a most competent gentleman then a Representative from Massachusetts, Mr. Harris. A step, and a long step, was taken toward doing away with these old expensive wooden ships. The reconstruction and repair of these ships was limited to 30 per cent. of their value, and later to 20 per cent., which is now the law, assented to and continued at this session for the remainder of this fiscal year by this House co-operating with the Senate.

Now the Government has about thirty wooden ships afloat. There is not one of these upon which you can make repairs to the extent of $100,000, notwithstanding they are afloat, because it runs counter to the policy we have entered upon. Yet we find the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] coming in and seeking upon this bill to complete a ship which has stood in the yard for nearly twenty years, and to expend upon it $400,000.

Why, gentlemen, if your policy is to be wooden ships, not steel ships, you had better repeal this 20 per cent. law and repair many of these thirty wooden ships—half a dozen of which will go out of commission in the next year—as you can do for less money than you will spend in the manner here proposed; and you will have almost equally good ships as the New York when completed.

The gentleman from New York quotes the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair that this ship, the New York, be completed. He did not find any recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy or the President of the United States. He did not find any estimate or recommendation to Congress. The matter is without recommendation.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that I have in my hand the estimates of the Secretary of the Navy, and among them is an estimate of $400,000 for this work.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; a formal transmission of the bureau report; a mere submission without recommendation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is like all the other transmissions.

Mr. CANNON. A formal transmission of the bureau report, which all gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations understand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEIFER obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that these estimates have had the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, we find gentlemen have suddenly fallen in love with the recommendation of the chief of this bureau. Why, gentlemen, there are other ships of another type which have stood unfinished for almost ten years. You have had to investigate them—five different boards of trained experts of the Navy. Four of those boards have been almost unanimous in recommending their completion. If you will turn over to the next page you will find this very same naval officer you are now following in this matter made the following recommendation:

I can not too strongly urge the completion of these vessels [the monitors] in all respects at an early day, as they will afford us as good vessels of their class as are owned by any nation, and I am of opinion the best type of coast and harbor defense vessels in existence to-day.

Although supplemented by four boards, yet you are silent touching that recommendation.

I wish to state to this committee that the New York is an old type of vessel. It stood for nineteen years without any work being done on it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. If I can get a little more time, yes.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Did not the gentleman advocate and vote them an appropriation for the completion of the Mohican on the Pacific coast which has been completed during the current year under an appropriation made last year?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect whether I did or not. If I did it was not a specific vote for that ship, but a vote for that ship with other propositions standing with it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Then I will ask the gentleman whether he did not advocate and vote for an appropriation for the completion of the Mohican on the Pacific coast, which vessel has been completed during the current year by that appropriation made last year?

Mr. CANNON. I say to the gentleman from New York that this appropriation is not to stand or fall by my consistency or want of it, but it is to stand or fall upon its own merits.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is an old type of ship, and when finished it will be an old-fashioned cruiser of some 4,000 tons. It does not have a compound engine. It will be altogether an old-fashioned type of vessel, costing $400,000 in addition to what has already been expended upon it. It will be another old tub when completed, and this is the commencement of the naval policy of the Democratic party. This is what is offered to us just as that party is coming into power, the beginning of a policy looking toward the waste of money and the production of vessels not useful. In other words, it is an advancement backward—a retrograde movement; and I hope this Committee of the Whole will not support it and authorize the completion of this old-fashioned vessel.

Mr. TALBOTT. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the Forty-seventh Congress Mr. Harris, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a list of vessels of the then Navy of the United States, and among others is the New York, of twenty-five guns and 4,000 tons, on the stocks at New York and recommended as worthy of being finished. That was the report made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress, the same committee which reported to this House the law requiring the sale of vessels when the cost of repairs would exceed 20 per cent. of their value. It is the same committee which reported the bill for steel cruisers. This report was made after careful investigation by a committee organized when the Republicans had control of the House. That committee reported that vessel was on the stocks in New York and was worthy of being completed.

Mr. CANNON. It has been worthy of being completed for nineteen years then, and will my friend inform me why his party did not appropriate for that purpose from 1874 to 1890, when it was in power here?

Mr. TALBOTT. I will ask you why your party did not complete it from 1865 to 1884?

Mr. CANNON. Because they did not think it was worthy of completion. In conclusion I will say to gentlemen on the other side of the House you can not relieve yourselves by alleged shortcomings of the Republicans in the past; you now are in power, and you must stand or fall in this and all other matters upon the merits; you can not command the confidence of the country by taking up and completing work that was abandoned by the Republican party twenty years ago because it was not worthy of completion.

Mr. TALBOTT. In the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress, a Republican committee, in a House controlled by a Republican majority, it was considered to be worthy of completion.

Mr. THOMAS. But the House did not indorse that report.

Mr. TALBOTT. Whether it did or not it made that report.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take any part in the discussion of this bill, but the proposition that this great country shall at this stage of naval development undertake to build or finish the building of a wooden ship seems to me as preposterous as it is ridiculous. There is not the smallest nation in the world, not even one of the South American republics, which to-day would spend a dollar on a wooden ship; that would not if it could expend millions in procuring first-class steel cruisers. All Europe to-day is busy reconstructing navies on modern principles, and yet here into this House comes coolly a proposition to build a wooden ship, when we have thirty of them for which we have no use and as to which it would be a blessing if they were sunk by coal-barges to the bottom of the sea.

It is proposed to put old machinery in this useless hull when done. Does the gentleman know that old machinery consumes from three to four pounds of coal per horse-power, while modern machinery has reduced the consumption to one pound and a half of coal? Why, the extra cost of running that ship for coal alone would be four or five times the amount of the interest on the cost of a good steel cruiser.

The whole thing is absurd. It seems to me to be an insult to the intelligence of this people, as it must be to the intelligence of naval authorities, wherever the proposition is presented. I do not know what is behind this proposition, but I know that we might better throw this money into the ocean than to float such a vessel in this age upon its broad bosom.

Mr. KEIFER. I am much obliged to the distinguished gentleman from New York for coming over to this side of the House and making such a good speech in support of my motion to strike out this clause. I wish to say at one time it was my impression it would be wise to complete this vessel; that I was then entirely misinformed or had statements made to me which were inaccurate in respect to the uses to which this vessel could be put.

The vessel if completed, if rigged, with all of her machinery in place, with her guns and munitions on board, and manned with her full quota of troops, would not be worth one copper to the United States in time of war.

Mr. HISCOCK. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio by adding, nor in time of peace either. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. The suggestion is very pertinent. It could not go upon the high seas, it would be of no service as a war vessel, and I did not know but that possibly the idea was that we might point to it as it went into New York Harbor or Brooklyn under full sail as a type of days gone by.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York (interrupting). As an example to be avoided. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER (continuing). As a relic of a past age; and, as my friend from New York has well suggested, possibly an example for us to avoid in the future. In this way, as an example, we might possibly get something out of it; but in time of war it would be useless to us; we would not require it for any conceivable purpose, and the money expended upon it would be thrown away.

It could not be sent upon the high seas for the purpose of meeting armed vessels of war of a foreign nation, because there is not a vessel of war of any foreign nation on earth that could not sweep it from the seas; nor could it be of use for the purpose of harbor defense, because it would be helpless, useless.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana (from his seat). Worthless.

Mr. KEIFER. Of no possible service to the Government, and I think a national disgrace.

Now, let me say, in justice to past Congresses of the United States and the distinguished men who have presided over the Navy Department for the last nineteen years at least, that they have not proposed the completion of this vessel. It is true, as the report which was read at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill [Mr. HUTCHINS] shows, that not being boarded up the air has swept through its timbers for the past twenty years, drying and seasoning them until now with the help of some new iron material and some preservatives for the old material they would do for a ship.

Mr. BOUTELLE (from his seat). The suggestion is that the present timbers are thoroughly seasoned, and therefore in better condition.

Mr. KEIFER. There is a question about that; and as I understand it, it will be necessary to put some modern material in to help to preserve them so that they may be used for the purposes of ship-building. At all events, if new material should be put in with this old material it would not be in harmony with it for ship construction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am told that this vessel when fully equipped, with all of her machinery and stores on board, is calculated to make in these modern times a speed not exceeding ten knots an hour upon the sea. It could be run down by everything in the shape of a vessel. It could run away from nothing and could catch nothing upon the sea, and it would be in that sense therefore without any possible value.

I was surprised a little to see our friends upon the other side of the House so urgent for this appropriation, and I took pains to look at the six-months' naval appropriation bill, I mean the bill for the first six months of the current fiscal year, and found nothing in that on the subject of the finishing of these wooden vessels.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me interrupt the gentleman to state that in response to the recommendation of the Department two vessels were recommended for completion, and money was appropriated for the purpose sufficient to build the Mohican.

Mr. KEIFER. But there has not been a copper appropriated to finish the New York.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say there had been, but there was to finish the Mohican.

Mr. KEIFER. Fifty thousand dollars was put in the appropriation bill I believe for the purpose the gentleman specifies.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a practical question, which this committee should look at in that point of view. Here we have at the navy-yard at Brooklyn a frame and other timbers of live-oak for a vessel whose construction was inaugurated nineteen years ago. It has stood there to this day under a roof, carefully protected from the weather, and to-day every timber in that vessel is thoroughly seasoned, and is worth more for purposes of ship construction to-day, double as much, as it was nineteen years ago. Now, in my opinion, when we have a vessel half constructed of this character, notwithstanding it is of wood, in view of the fact that in all the navies of the world there are wooden vessels that may be used and are used for purposes of transportation, for school-ships and training-ships, and for a hundred uses neither offensive nor defensive, but which pertain to the navy, it would be the height of unwisdom to throw this vessel away and not appropriate something to complete it for the many uses to which it may be put.

Bear in mind that it is not an old vessel in the sense that decay has come upon it; not in the sense that it is a bad model, for it is as good a model of vessel as can be constructed to-day, and for the purpose for which such a vessel may be used. It seems to me that it would be wise to complete it in every sense, not so much for defense or offense, but for the thousand uses to which we can put the vessel. I contend that it should be looked at as a practical question, a question whether or not, if we have a frame of live-oak thoroughly seasoned and partly completed, it should not be finished for such uses as it may be applied to.

Mr. HERR. May I ask the gentleman how long it will continue to grow better?

Mr. DINGLEY. As long as it is under cover and protected from the weather.

Mr. HERR. Then let us wait until it gets to the highest pitch of excellence.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has become thoroughly seasoned. And every man acquainted with the subject understands that live-oak thoroughly seasoned under cover is of infinitely more value than any other timber not so seasoned.

Mr. HERR. You say the vessel is half built?

Mr. DINGLEY. I say partly built.

Mr. HERR. That is better.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know precisely to what extent it has been.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it possible at this day and age of the world we are going back twenty years to seek models for constructing naval vessels of war? Have the twenty years that have elapsed since 1865 brought no lessons of wisdom to this Congress and this country? Are we to take up the ribs of this old partly-constructed vessel, through which the winds of twenty years have howled, with all its imperfections of model and of arrangement, and to go on now and build it for a modern vessel of war? The machinery was completed seventeen years ago. All the improvements of those seventeen years are taken no note of and can not be used in the completion of this boat, which can be used successfully neither in peace nor in war.

The smallest schooner that floats either upon fresh or salt water can ram this vessel and destroy it in one minute. The smallest gun carried by any vessel of war in any navy of the world could sink her in an hour. And are we going on now to rebuild this vessel, and are the Monitor, the Puritan, the Terror, the Amphitrite, the Monadnock, and the Miantonomoh, vessels of modern construction, provided with all the appointments of naval warfare, vessels built of iron and ready to be used as soon as completed—are they to be left out? Are they not to be finished while this old wooden vessel, the frame of which forsooth is built of live-oak, is to be completed? Are we to have another case of the Lancaster rebuilt at an expense of $1,600,000 and then get a vessel that can go only nine knots an hour, and that can be caught by any first-class three-masted schooner engaged in the coasting trade of this country?

I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that with all the fault found with Republican administration and the last Republican Congress, that Congress was the first to come up and meet the emergency of the time and construct the three new cruisers of steel according to modern plans, and the dispatch boat, which will be a credit, and the greatest credit, that our Navy is entitled to.

The Republican party is entitled to that credit. They authorized the construction of these vessels. We left behind us the prejudices and the methods of other years and came up to a higher plane, to new designs, new machinery, new armament, new armor, and proposed to erect a navy that would be commensurate with the needs of this country and be an honor to the nation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of New York. No gentleman in this House has had more experience connected with our naval affairs, in a modest, quiet way on committees, than my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]; but he must not forget that some wooden ships are indispensable. Wooden ships are sometimes useful. Wooden ships are sometimes beneficial. It was a wooden ship that ran down the Tallapoosa. [Laughter].

Mr. THOMAS. Very good; and the Tallapoosa was a new vessel, just two years old, too.

Mr. COX, of New York. Made by the Republican party—one of their jobs.

Mr. THOMAS. And an almighty bad job at that. [Laughter].

Mr. COX, of New York. But what I want to say is pertinent to this proposition. I do not care whether it is made by a Republican or Democratic administration, but there are some wooden vessels yet to be used in our Navy, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] well said. Some are to be school-ships; some are to have other functions on the sea; some are to have romances, beyond all experience, in the future. I am not one of those who believe in making wooden ships hereafter.

I believe in the steel ships and guns, and the steam and the electricities and all the forces to be harnessed hereafter, connected with our Navy, with the chemistry and explosives and what not that speak of progress.

A MEMBER. You ought to be on the other side.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am not on the other side because I am a progressive man. I believe; however, when we have here a vessel built on a perfect model, but a model which is a mere shell or hull to be filled up hereafter with enginery, such as we will have, of an improved pattern—

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from New York knows that the engines for this vessel have been built already for seventeen years?

Mr. HISCOCK. In other words, there is no "steel" in this.

Mr. COX, of New York. If there was any "steel" in this my friend from New York would be more anxious about it; he is always very square. T. D. Wilson, chief of the bureau, makes the report which was read by my colleague from New York. What does he say?

This vessel has been on the stocks in one of the ship-houses since 1865; and from the fact that she was in frame before work was suspended on her and was neither celled nor planked, the air has freely circulated through her timbers, and to-day they are as hard as bone, and probably in better condition than any framed timbers ever put in a ship.

That is the hull; that is the shell; put in your timbers. But gentlemen say: "The Democrats are coming into power, and we do not want them to have work on this ship in the Brooklyn navy-yard." That is the wrinkle of my friend from New York over there [Mr. HISCOCK]. [Laughter.] I know him; he is a cunning old politician; he looks at me and smiles, but he knows he means simply this: that no Democrat shall have an opportunity to work in that Brooklyn navy-yard in the construction of any ships hereafter, because, forsooth, this ship has been so long on the stocks worm-eaten by Republican rascality. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand my distinguished friend from New York to say that this ship's timbers are worm-eaten? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. No; I said the system there has been a general system of worm-eating all through. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, since our friends on the other side by the voice of the people and the will of Providence have found themselves in the minority they have begun to facetiously criticize this side of the House for proposing to complete the New York. I want to ask them why it is that this vessel was not completed long since, and I tell them that there will be grave suspicion in people's minds that the reason she was not completed before is that she was not a vessel contracted for in the yard of John Roach or some other favorite contractor. The gentlemen on the other side have repeatedly advocated the expenditure of three millions and a half of dollars to complete the monitors, yet I say that this ship, the New York, with her well-seasoned timbers, if armed with good guns, will be superior to any of the monitors in the yard of John Roach or elsewhere, completed or otherwise. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCADOO. I want to read for the information of gentlemen on the other side—not the opinion of a partisan journal, but the opinion of a scientific publication, the Army and Navy Journal—about these monitors upon which our friends propose to spend three millions and a half.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman call the Army and Navy Journal a scientific journal?

Mr. MCADOO. It is a professional journal, written by experts and read by scientific men.

Mr. HISCOCK. My friend from New Jersey should bear in mind that this bill contemplates the completion of those monitors by a Democratic administration, and he certainly does not want to make a record against that policy.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask to have this extract read.

The Clerk read as follows:

As we recently had occasion to show, the thickest side of armor of these vessels will be but seven inches, and it will be applied only to the center of the vessel. The five inches of armor at the ends will be mere pasteboards to the heavy shot fired from a first-class foreign ironclad, and a single well-directed shot fired from the 80-ton iron gun would partially destroy and render the turret of the Miantonomoh wholly useless; while a shot planted on the side armor would sink her. As it is admitted here that the monitors can not resist the heavy broadside ironclads they must meet, why waste further money in the completion of vessels which will serve neither for cruisers nor harbor defense? It matters not what the English ironclads cost; they are in existence, and a couple of them could sweep away the whole of the proposed monitor fleet.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I return to the charge which I made when I began my remarks, and I say again that if this vessel, begun twenty years ago, had been under the care of the favorite contractors who have battened and fattened on the national Treasury, under Republican administrations, a million of dollars, if asked for, would have been gladly voted by the party then in power in this House to complete her. I repeat, too, what I said a while ago, that this vessel when completed will be superior to any of the monitors, and if she were armed with good guns I would much rather (although I am not a professional man in the military sense) take my chances on board of the well-seasoned, easily maneuvered, quick-sailing New York, than on board the Miantonomoh or any other monitor in the service.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will my colleague on the Naval Committee yield for a question?

Mr. MCADOO. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand you to hold that there is anything in connection with the model of a monitor which prevents her from carrying as much defensive armor as a broadside ironclad?

Mr. MCADOO. I do not know. I only state how our monitors are clad.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I want a specific answer to my question: Do I understand you to hold that there is anything about the monitor class of vessels which prevents them carrying as heavy armor as the broadside ironclads?

Mr. MCADOO. No. All I say is that they are steel-clad, as everybody knows—steel-clad in more ways than one.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not true, on the contrary, that, on account of the low free-board, a vessel of the same displacement, built on the monitor plan, can carry infinitely more armor than a broadside ironclad?

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, all I have to say in reply to my nautical, scientific, and elaborate friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is, that these monitors have seven inches of armor in the center and five inches at the ends; and I say that if this journal from which I have read an extract be correct, that armor would be unable to stand one single, well-directed shot from an 80-ton gun.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to press my friend, but I affirm here a very confident belief that a vessel of a certain displacement whose hull is only three feet above the water, and which needs to be armored only for a surface of two or three feet above water, can certainly carry much more defensive armor than a wall-sided vessel with a high free-board.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I am not up before the civil-service examiners for a position as a naval engineer [laughter], but I say that these monitors are not worth as much as this New York will be when completed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I was addressing my remarks to the Scientific Journal from which the gentleman [Mr. MCADOO] has quoted.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the latest list which has been published (and it comes down to within one month of the present time) of the ironclads, which are regarded as obsolete by the great powers. They are eighty-five in number—nearly all of them constructed since 1865. Twenty-one of them belong to Great Britain, twenty to France, nine to Italy, and twenty-seven to Russia. Of the twenty-one belonging to Great Britain fourteen are plated with iron, and are of greater tonnage and more horse-power than the ship which this bill proposes to finish. Let me quote one or two instances. Here is the Northumberland, belonging to Great Britain, built of iron, displacement 10,780 tons, mean draught twenty-eight feet, with twenty-seven heavy guns and eighteen light guns, carrying seven hundred and forty-four men, and having a horse-power of 6,560 and a speed of 14.1 knots. Then follow thirteen others, including the Agincourt, the Minotaur, the Achilles, the Warrior, the Black Prince—all of them larger and better ships and with a higher rate of speed than this one of ours, and ironclads at that. These are vessels which Great Britain has determined to discard. Then here are twenty ships belonging to France, the list beginning with the Héroïne of 5,837 tons. Then follow the Revanche and Savoie of 5,819 tons each, and the Surveillante of 5,758 tons. So I might run through the list, every one of these being a better and faster ship than the one we propose to waste our money upon if we enact this bill.

Italy, which we look upon as a second-rate power, is going to discard nine ships—first the broadside ship Roma, built of wood, displacement 5,700 tons, mean draught 24½ feet, armor 4½ and 4¼ inches, with twenty-two heavy guns and twelve light guns, speed thirteen knots, coal capacity five hundred and fifty-eight tons, steam cruising power at ten knots 3,000 miles. This ship upon which we propose to spend our money could not carry coal enough to steam 1,500 miles. Yet here is Italy about to discard this vessel the Roma; and I have no doubt she would gladly sell it to us for one-half what we propose to spend upon the completion of this ship.

Russia is about to discard twenty-seven ships, beginning with two wooden ships, the Sevastopoli, 6,275 tons, and the Petropanlovsk, 6,040 tons.

I will not take up time in enlarging upon this subject further, but the proposition here is that at this day this country, which has been complaining that it had no navy, which has declared in the platforms of both parties that it intends to have a navy, shall, upon a proposition from a Democratic committee, spend money in completing an old ship which can float, I have no doubt, but which, if struck with one of the guns of one of these discarded ships, would go straight to the bottom. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBOTT. Are not all these vessels which are being discarded armored vessels?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Not all of them, but nearly every one of them.

Mr. TALBOTT. This is not to be an armored vessel.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly not; and that is an additional reason why it should not be built. There is not a nation in the world to-day that would think of building an unarmored ship except as a fast cruiser, or "commerce-destroyer," as it is called; yet it is proposed to build an unarmored ship that could not get away from any one of these armored ships which other nations are discarding as too slow. If we build unarmored ships they should be the fastest ships afloat, or they are failures.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has said. He knows perfectly well that it is not our intention to proceed with the policy of building wooden ships. Every word that he has uttered, however, would apply to the proposition to expend 30 per cent. of the value of wooden vessels in repairing them. Will the gentleman tell me whether we have to-day a single vessel afloat that is seaworthy?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I think not; and we do not want any more of such vessels.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Then should we not take measures to have one good vessel; and when we have a report from the proper Department saying that for a comparatively small sum of money we may have a vessel good for some purposes, why not complete it?

Mr. Chairman, we must take things as they are. The gentleman knows perfectly well that England to-day, notwithstanding all her discarded vessels, has an effective tonnage of 345,000 tons; France has 209,000 tons, and Russia comes next with 119,000 tons. The United States has but 22,000 tons; and are we to sit still and refuse to appropriate a small sum to complete one good vessel?

We do not desire to cut off supplies for repairs of wooden vessels because they are comparatively worthless. His argument is hardly fair. I would not expend any money to construct a new wooden vessel, but until we have steel cruisers, until we have armored battle-ships, until we have something in the shape of a navy which will stand by the side of other navies of the world, I am willing to appropriate a small sum to complete this ship.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Allow me to read to you at that point: "The admiralty count upon the wooden hulls of twenty-three French ironclads as a source of future weakness."

Mr. HUTCHINS. Undoubtedly, and we would discard them under similar circumstances.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Why then build up weakness? Let us build up strength.

Mr. HUTCHINS. This is, I am aware, a temporary expedient until we can have time to build war ships which we hope will be the pride of the nation.

I will yield now for one minute to my colleague [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to answer my colleague in one word, and that is this: When he reads from these old statistics with which we are all familiar—

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This is new; I got it by mail.

Mr. COX, of New York. I got it fresh the other day by mail. It is old now. He simply fails to recognize the fact that the projectiles of the world, the power of explosion, the chemistry of which he is a recognized element, can drive through any ironclad possible, and therefore people are discarding ironclads because the projectiles, the force of powder or something else, is greater than ironclads. In other words, there is more force in powder and ball and projectile than in the defensive operations of our Government. Therefore they are disposing of their old ironclads. Offensive war is bigger than defensive, and everybody knows it. No one knows it so well as my friend who is engaged in steel and iron manufacture.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does not my colleague know every ship abroad has heavy iron clad on it now?

Mr. COX, of New York. Because we have artillery, because we have cavalry, shall we discard infantry? Because we have ironclads or torpedoes, shall we give up wooden ships altogether?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Yes.

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations is not a Democratic committee, as has been pushed into this debate by the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. We realize that a new navy, a more powerful navy, is required, and we also realize that these vessels which are now unfinished and can be made useful should be completed. We commenced that last year by making an appropriation to finish the Mohican. We realize it and recognize it to-day in recommending that the New York shall be completed.

But while as a fighting navy and cruising navy we realize that steel cruisers and heavy-armed vessels are essential to the fighting necessities of war, at the same time we know that this vessel can be made of great service in the Navy, as has been recommended for two years at least by the Secretary of the Navy. Why, you might as well say you would make an army entirely of infantry, and forget cavalry and artillery altogether.

The whole tenor of this bill goes to recognize, if it had been proper so to state it, the requirements of political platforms. We also know this vessel, as stated by the experts of the Government, can be made useful and can be finished with due economy to the Government.

Mr. HERR. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of the Navy recommended this?

Mr. RANDALL. I say so unqualifiedly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman read where the Secretary recommends it?

Mr. RANDALL. I have the recommendation here.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have one read.

Mr. RANDALL. It is expressed in his report last year and in this, where he estimates for the New York $400,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have that part read.

Mr. RANDALL. I will have it read with pleasure.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I would like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania when the present Secretary of the Navy became an authority for this side of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. I would as soon trust him in authority as you.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is a personal remark which the gentleman's own answer will explain.

Mr. KEIFER. I am willing to yield to allow that to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read what the gentleman from Pennsylvania forwards to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Document, No. 1, part 3, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, page 31.
Increase of Navy: Completing hulls of the New York and Mohican, $400,000.
Annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for the year 1884, page 40.
For completion of the New York, $500,000.

Mr. RANDALL. These are the reports of the Secretary of the Navy for the two years to which I have referred.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that this is precisely what we find in the Book of Estimates, a submission simply under the law and nothing else.

Mr. RANDALL. I take it for granted that the Secretary of the Navy would not put anything in his report that did not meet his approval.

Mr. HISCOCK. We need not have any confusion or misunderstanding about this matter, because the gentleman knows that many items are submitted under the law that are not recommended.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York knows that they are recommended. The Secretary submits matters when there is a doubt whether there is law authorizing the expenditure of the money; and I have caused to be read now from his annual reports the amounts that he has estimated for the completion of these vessels.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

I will say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that 9 to 6, composing the Committee on Appropriations, may not make that committee entirely Democratic, although they are all very distinguished gentlemen, but it gives a very good majority.

Mr. REED, of Maine (from his seat). It creates quite a suspicion, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, quite a suspicion. Now, these estimates that have been read the gentleman from Pennsylvania claims to afford evidence of a recommendation on the part of the present Secretary of the Navy, or rather he claims that they are entitled to the force of a recommendation on his part, for the completion of the ship New York. That, I claim, is an entire misapprehension.

I happen to know that the present Secretary of the Navy regards the completion of this vessel as entirely unnecessary in every sense of the word; and that all that is spent on it is worse than thrown away, because it embarks us not in the direction of progress, but rather as indicating a retreating from the little advance position that this nation has taken in the matter of building a navy. It is unfair to the Secretary of the Navy to treat these estimates which he is required by law to make to Congress as committing him to a recommendation that such works shall be carried on; and I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations, not speaking of anything that takes place within its doors, and the House of Representatives, of which I may speak, have not been bound by anybody's recommendations on the subject of paying claims or completing other public works. Why then do they stand up for this?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the most specious, artistic, cunning—if I might use the word and not violate parliamentary usage—argument that is made in favor of completing the New York in the Brooklyn navy-yard comes from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and another gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. They say they would finish this vessel in order that it might be used in case of necessity for a school-ship. A great war vessel as we pretend, if it be finished at a cost of $400,000, which would be more than enough to build a good cruiser, to build a good vessel of war, is to be finished solely because they think it might happen that at some place on the coast of this country we might need a school-ship! We have thirty wooden vessels now, and almost every one of them would do for a school-ship and nothing else. They are fit for nothing else in time of war. Some of them may be used for going on surveying excursions, and there are plenty for that purpose.

My friend from New York [Mr. COX], formerly of Ohio, talked lightly about the Tallapoosa being sunk by a common schooner, and he might have added that it was sunk without any purpose on the part of the schooner to sink it at all. [Laughter.] It was sunk on the coast. This ship, the Tallapoosa, was just about as good as any of these vessels. It was not built only two years ago, but it was rebuilt, as we practically propose to rebuild the New York. That vessel has had twenty years of rest before being used at all, and now you propose to finish it; and it is very remarkable that all at once it becomes extremely necessary to spend $400,000 to finish the ship that everybody well versed in all these naval matters says will be thoroughly valueless as a war ship, and nobody claims that it would be of any value in time of peace unless we wanted to keep school. [Laughter.]

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate with great interest and I find myself entirely in agreement with the Committee on Appropriations, and think that this item should be approved and the vessel finished. My colleague [Mr. HEWITT] seemed to argue as if only such war ships should be built as were built upon the idea that the enemy's shot could be kept out of the vessel.

I wish to call it to the attention of the House that our own advisory board has not up to the present time advised the construction of one single new ship upon that theory. The four vessels now in course of construction and the vessels which the Secretary of the Navy this year recommended to be built are all cruisers, unarmored vessels of entirely light construction, and penetrable by the ordinary shot fired from the ordinary guns of foreign ships of war. Those vessels are designed upon the theory upon which all naval vessels have been built in the past and by which the naval distinction of the different countries of the world has been won.

Lord Nelson never commanded a ship built upon the theory of keeping the shot of the enemy out; neither did Decatur nor Bainbridge nor Perry ever command such a vessel. But come down to our own times. The most distinguished American naval officer of our generation, with ironclads in his fleet, did not go on board an ironclad when he entered the harbor of Mobile. He stood upon the deck or climbed into the rigging of a wooden vessel.

Now it is by no manner of means a determined thing as to whether it is the true policy to build heavy armored vessels or not. My colleague [Mr. COX] was entirely correct in his statement that there were evident signs that foreign powers were beginning to doubt the policy of building these heavily armored vessels; for in the contest between the target and the gun which has been going on in foreign countries for almost thirty years the gun has come out the victor; so that targets to resist modern guns can not be built and flotation obtained.

I believe that the future naval battles will be fought in vessels as penetrable to shot as any of the vessels commanded by the great naval captains in the beginning of this century, and that our country will find its safety not in the thickness of defensive armor, but, as it has hitherto done, in the fiery hearts of those who man its ships. [Applause.]

If the choice is to be between a penetrable steel vessel and a penetrable wooden vessel, then it is clear enough that the difference between them can not be a very great one, and that there are manifest uses to which wooden ships may still beneficially be put. I here state, and call the attention of my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] to my statement, that there is not now one European power which is not to-day building wooden vessels for its naval service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will my colleague give me the authority for that statement?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I will. I will send it to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 22, noes 62.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read to the conclusion of the paragraphs appropriating for the Naval Academy.

Mr. FINDLAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 415 insert the following:

"Allowance for reduction of wages under the eight-hour law such sum as may be required in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics heretofore or at present employed by or on behalf of the Government at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., between the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics under the eight-hour law, and the date of the passage and approval of this act, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor, as contemplated by the spirit of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, commonly known as the eight-hour law. And the money hereby appropriated and necessary to pay such claims shall be made immediately available and be disbursed by the Navy paymaster at said Naval Academy under the direction and supervision of the superintendent thereof.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I make the point of order on that amendment. I suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that he let it lie over until to-morrow and I will examine it.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that it shall be agreed we may go back to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over the amendment for the present?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the point of order is made on it I think it might be as well to have it decided at once.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not take the management of the bill out of my hands.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to postponing the decision on this point of order until to-morrow? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order is reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication I have received relative to this subject.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

STATE OF MARYLAND, COURT OF APPEALS.
Annapolis, February 10, 1885.

Hon. S. S. COX,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR SIR: I duly received your kind reply of December 18, 1884, to my letter of the 17th of the same month, in reference to the proposed relief measure for the Naval Academy employes residing in this city. Your generous offer to aid the measure, as placed in the hands of Mr. FINDLAY, was met by a due manifestation of appreciation by this worthy class of our people.

Inasmuch, however, as the present session is nearing its close, they are fearful that no relief can come to them through the bill recently introduced by Mr. FINDLAY in their behalf, unless it can be secured by way of an amendment to one of the three appropriation bills yet to be reported, namely: the general naval, sundry civil, or deficiency bills. In view thereof, I have prepared and forwarded to Mr. FINDLAY a draught of an amendment, embracing the substance of his bill (No. 7607), and which, if it can by any possibility of a chance be incorporated in either of said appropriation bills, would secure the attainment of the purposes desired.

I herewith inclose you a copy of said proposed amendment, which is almost a literal transcript—mutatis mutandis—of the provision contained in the act of 1872, and as now codified as section 3699 of the United States Revised Statutes. By reference to the latter, if time will permit, you will see that these very employes (among others) were paid for all the time employed at the academy in excess of eight hours from the date of the passage and approval of the eight-hour law up to and including the date of the President's proclamation, to wit, May 19, 1869, since which date they have received no compensation for the extra hours so employed, the eight-hour law here having been practically ignored by the Navy Department, and per consequence at the Naval Academy.

So familiar are you with all the minutiae pertaining to matters of national legislation, it would appear unseemly in me, if not quasi-egotistic, were I to attempt to proffer the least suggestion in regard to the best mode of securing favorable consideration and action in the premises; nevertheless, you, I am sure, will not take it amiss if in my zeal for these worthy people I should earnestly request that you will, should you find it convenient to spare sufficient time from the multiplicity of public and local matters which so heavily and necessarily tax your patience, in conjunction with Mr. FINDLAY or otherwise, bring to bear upon the Committee on Appropriations your kind and generous influence whereby the consent of its members may be obtained, in committee, to permit the incorporation of the inclosed proposed amendment in either one of the three appropriation bills hereinbefore mentioned. You will perceive that the proposed amendment is local in its character, and was drafted in that wise in view of a knowledge of the fact that our friend SAMUEL J. RANDALL seems strongly inclined to oppose large appropriations and exhibits rather a sensitive, if not niggardly, disposition toward disturbing the quiet of what has been commonly denominated the "Treasury's unnecessary surplus." Indeed, it would seem that this surplus is by no means unnecessary, for the mere exhibition of the just claims of these employes would be a sufficient answer to the contrary. By way of parenthesis let me remark that to the eyes of many, at least to those outside of the Halls of our national Legislature, it would seem to appear that were the Government to employ a part, at least, of its present surplus money in liquidating its just obligations toward its own citizen-creditors, the long-heard-of lamentations against the $100,000,000 surplus revenue would soon be stifled and appeased.

I can but hope, my dear sir, that the merits of this measure may receive the hearty approval on the part of every member of Congress who pretends to entertain a due and appreciative regard for honest labor, and that, too, in this instance when the Government itself has already reaped the benefit of the daily toil of these laboring people.

Hoping and believing that you will do what lies in your power to do in the premises, I can but assure you that there will ascend from hearts who know how to appreciate a kindly act done in their behalf as holy incense to a higher sphere, heartfelt invocations on the part of these good people and their families.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out the last word. It is not often that I take notice of any personal remarks in debate having reference to myself. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has chosen to visit me with that heavy club which sometimes he uses to demolish those who have the misfortune to differ with him. At the last session of Congress I happened to be on the same side with that gentleman with regard to monitors and the Secretary of the Navy differed with him. I ask the Clerk now to read the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made then as far as I have marked. And that is all I shall care to say on the subject of the opinion which the gentleman from Pennsylvania now entertains of the Secretary of the Navy and of my humble self.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CALKINS. Who is the author of that?
Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Isherwood, formerly Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy. I might rest the action which we recommend to adhere and not yield to the incorporation of these amounts in the appropriation bill upon the opinion of these two accepted authorities, one now in office and the other formerly at the head of the Engineer Corps of the United States Navy. But I am willing to go further and say if it were necessary that there are not thrown around these propositions those safeguards for the expenditure of the money which circumstances known to the country demand in reference to a Department which is now being investigated.

The next question is as to the monitors. That is a subject which was duly considered in the last Congress, and the Committee on Appropriations of that body did not recommend to the House of Representatives any further appropriation of money in that connection, nor did the House in the passage of the original bill incorporate a dollar for that purpose. The bill went to the Senate, and there the amount was incorporated, and in a sort of coercive way, if I may be allowed in a parliamentary sense to use such a term, the House was compelled to yield. I want to have read in that connection, that it may be still further impressed upon the minds of the House, the language uttered upon this floor by a gentleman here in debate, whose experience as a business man and as a manufacturer in all the forms of iron and steel which enter into the construction of such vessels is large, and whose capacity to judge of such subjects is unquestioned. I ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD what was said on the floor a few weeks ago upon this point. This is a part of the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

The Clerk read as follows:

"There are other questions behind this on which I am in full accord with the Appropriations Committee. I believe the monitors are a total failure. I believe every dollar spent on them is wasted, and I shall never vote, as I never have voted, a single dollar in behalf of the monitors."

"I also believe we ought not to build any new cruisers until we know whether those now under way are good for something or not. But we can not tell whether they are good or not until we put guns on them and float them and try what they can do in the open ocean."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think that I have said nothing to-day inconsistent with my expressions then, so far as Mr. Chandler was concerned. I have only made the group a little larger in some particulars. I never want to be personally offensive, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] provoked what I said by characterizing the Committee on Appropriations as a Democratic committee—

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was provocation enough. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL (continuing). And then subsequently saying, in substance, that that Democratic committee was following the lead of Mr. Chandler.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to say that I uttered nothing of the sort. The RECORD will show what was said. I merely now put in a contradiction, and say that I uttered nothing of the kind.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I so understood it, hearing as well as I can hear, and gentlemen around me also understood that there was an implication in the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] which was not respectful to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have the most immense respect for the Committee on Appropriations. I have been on that committee myself.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, whether that is mutual or not is another matter. But there is one thing certain, that as long as I am at the head of that committee, whenever it is assailed, either by innuendo or in a more courageous manner, I will strike back as hard as I know how.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I never attempt anything by innuendo on this floor. I believe that is not my reputation. The question that I asked was, since when did it happen that the Secretary of the Navy had become an authority upon this side of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, if that was not a reflection on the Committee on Appropriations, I do not know what it means.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. And if that be a reflection upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], it must be because the "shoe fits."

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take any offense at that.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I should suppose not. The offense has been taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I never take what does not belong to me, and therefore I am not going to be offended by such a remark as that; but I do say again that whenever the gentleman will speak as a man should speak, with clean-cut language, and not by inference or insinuation, I will try to answer him in a like manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill. The Clerk resumed and read to the end of section 1 of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to make the point of order against section 2 of this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. That point can not be made until the section is read. General debate comes in upon this section at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I shall ask that the point of order be reserved.

Mr. KEIFER. It is reserved.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish that the gentleman from Illinois shall be recognized at the proper time to make the point of order against the second section.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will agree that the right time to make the point is when the section is read.

Mr. RANDALL. After the general debate on the first section the second section can be read.

Mr. THOMAS. All I ask is that the point shall be reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order is pending. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WELLS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the hour of meeting to-morrow (Friday) be 12 o'clock instead of 11.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If we can have an understanding that we shall adjourn before 12, I have no objection to the change of hour.

Mr. WILLIS. That is the understanding, that the morning hour shall not be cut out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that the hour of meeting to-morrow be 12 o'clock instead of 11. [After a pause.] In the absence of objection it is so ordered.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow night is pension night, and I ask unanimous consent that the hours for the evening session be changed so that we may meet at 7 and adjourn at 9 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has been requested by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to state to the House that he does not believe that the work that that committee will have on hand for to-morrow evening's session can be accomplished in any limited time.

Mr. CANNON. Then I object.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw the papers in the case of the executrix of Daniel Carroll, deceased.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to extend his remarks on the subject of the bill presented by him to-day under the special rule.

THE CONGO CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 31st instant requesting copies of all the communications which have been received respecting the Congo conference, and especially copies of the text of the commissions or powers sent by this Government to each of the three American plenipotentiaries or agents, a report of the Secretary of State.

PROTECTION OF SUBMARINE CABLES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, of the 19th instant, recommending the enactment of a law for the protection of submarine cables, in pursuance of our treaty obligations under the international convention in relation to the subject, signed at Paris on the 14th day of March, 1884, and commend the matter to the favorable consideration of Congress.

FRENCH-AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed

To the House of Representatives:

With reference to my communication of the 27th ultimo, transmitting to the House of Representatives a preliminary report of the Secretary of State, dated the 26th of January, 1885, in response to the resolution of the House of the 9th of January, 1885, calling for copies of the accounts and vouchers of the disbursing officers of the French-American Claims Commission and containing other information in relation to the transactions of said commission, I now transmit herewith a further report on the subject by the Secretary of State, dated the 17th instant, which is accompanied by the desired copies of the accounts and vouchers in question.

YACAMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 16th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill "to accept and ratify an agreement with the confederated tribes and bands of Indians occupying the Yacama reservation in the Territory of Washington for the extinguishment of their title to so much of the said reservation as is required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same."

The matter is presented for the consideration and action of the Congress.

DEDICATION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the fact that, by the arrangements made by the committee having in charge the ceremonies of Saturday next, the desks will have to be removed from the Hall of the House to-morrow night.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I would ask by whose authority that is to be done?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that by the provisions of the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress the committee has entire charge of the arrangements for the ceremonies.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask unanimous consent that that part of the arrangements be set aside. I do not think it is desirable to have our desks removed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair scarcely thinks that the House by unanimous consent can vacate a concurrent resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Did that resolution authorize the seats to be removed from the Hall of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the House stands in recess until to-morrow at 10 a. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m. (Friday, February 20), Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HURD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

EXPLORATIONS IN NORTHERN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 5,500 copies of the report of Lieut. George M. Stoney, United States Navy, of his recent explorations in Northern Alaska, with the accompanying charts; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,000 for the use of the Navy Department.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if the House would by unanimous consent agree upon some limit as to the debate on the pending paragraph of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think that ought to be done.

Mr. WILLIS. I would be glad if some arrangement could be made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think, Mr. Speaker, the situation of things is such that the gentleman from Kentucky ought not to ask that. We have met here—fifteen or twenty members—this morning. Consent was granted last night, contrary to an understanding which existed while a majority of members were here, extending the present sitting of the House for an hour. I think under all these circumstances we ought not to have any such limitation of debate as is suggested. I believe we ought to go right on.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope we shall adopt any limitation that may be possible on this bill so as soon to get it out of the way in some manner. I think the gentlemen who have met here this morning came here to go on with the consideration of this bill—

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have not a doubt of it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. And I think we had better do what we can in that direction. I hope the objection will be withdrawn and that we shall go on until we reach some point where there is objection.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think that it is fair to members who are absent.

Mr. WILLIS. I have made this suggestion in good faith. The House is aware of the fact that the time for debate on this section was limited to one hour and a half, and afterward, upon the suggestion of some of the recognized opponents of the bill who stated that it would facilitate the passage of the measure, the time was enlarged to allow three minutes' debate on every bona fide amendment. The enlargement of the time was made in good faith on this side and for the purpose of facilitating the passage of the bill, with the implied understanding certainly, if not the express understanding, that all that was wanted was a vote upon these propositions with a brief time to explain them. We have consumed several hours under this extended time; and I submit that as a matter of good faith we ought now to fix some limit to debate on this paragraph, which has already been discussed two hours; that we ought to agree on some reasonable time within which the discussion shall be concluded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I say again to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that last night the present sitting of the House was extended beyond what was agreed upon when a full House was present. There was not a quorum present last night when the change was made. I was present, but did not object, because I had no objection whatever to this bill going on under full and free discussion; and I have none now. My impression is that the gentleman will accomplish most if he allows the debate to go right on.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose yesterday tellers had been ordered on a motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to strike out what is known as the Mississippi River paragraph. The gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHITE, had been asked to act as tellers. The gentleman from Kentucky being now absent, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BROWN, will please act as one of the tellers. The tellers will take their places.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 19.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MILLS. No point is made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No one is insisting on a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum being insisted upon, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. HEPBURN) was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 922 to 938 inclusive and insert the following:

"For the continuation of the improvement of the Mississippi River, $1,000,000, to be expended in the completion of the Plumb Point and Lake Providence reaches."

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a vote on that amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the strongest ground, the real ground, of opposition on the part of those who are opposed to this bill is the continuance of this Mississippi scheme—a scheme which is objectionable in every point of view. It is objectionable on the ground that it is an expenditure of a large sum of money, which expenditure, by the declarations of the committee itself, has been shown to be useless—a waste of the public money. It is objectionable upon another ground, that the ports and harbors of this country which really need improvement are to-day being robbed of proper appropriations for the sake of this ill-judged expenditure.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman name one?

Mr. REED, of Maine. And it will be noticed that not a single word has been said in defense of this scheme. Not a single argument which has been presented by the gentleman from Arkansas has been met by the so-called friends of this appropriation. They have remained under the very scathing denunciation which he has given to this scheme. Now, he himself has not rectified it by proposing that the committee should stand by the original plan.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. How can the gentleman state that when it is in plain contradiction of the facts which appear before us?

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the contradiction?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. We denounce the departure from the original plan.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman can not take all my time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say it is not remedied by the change which the gentleman from Arkansas desires to make.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is known that the commission are carrying out the very plan on which they started—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman can not assert that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. With only such additions as their experience has justified, and those additions seem to be, even according to the suggestion of gentlemen on the other side, in the very line of this appropriation. That is, they involve more expenditure, and that is what the whole thing seems to be.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. We can not expect any appreciation from the gentleman from Maine and the railroads, which want only the commerce that seeks to go down to the Gulf.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is part and parcel of the glamour which is intended to be thrown over this question. This is no contest between railroads—it is a question between some gentlemen and the Treasury of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is all we expect from the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let it be reported again.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No; let it be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 33.

The CHAIRMAN. So the amendment does not prevail.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. It comes too late.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish simply to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I had an amendment which I proposed to offer but in some way has been lost from my seat. I simply desire time to prepare another amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. The last time the gentleman from Maine spoke it was against the order of the House, but we made no objection. Although he was not the gentleman offering the amendment we allowed him to speak upon it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. All I wish to do is to offer the amendment which I had already in my seat.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the gentleman from Maine he desires time to prepare an amendment agreeing to withdraw his demand for a quorum.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I only made the point for that reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, then, of the gentleman from Iowa is rejected, and the Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman from Maine will send up his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Clerk has other amendments to read, which can be done while the gentleman is preparing his amendment.

The next amendment (by Mr. WASHBURN) was read, as follows:

Strike out in line 928, commencing with "together," to "Ohio River," in line 930, inclusive, as follows: "Together with the sums herein appropriated for the Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Ohio River."

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will allow me half a minute I will say that simply takes out the upper part of the river from the charge of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the gentleman will allow me to state the effect of my own amendment—

Mr. WILLIS. I was going to say so far as I knew there was no objection to it.

Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman is wholly mistaken. The effect of it is to retain the portion of the river between the Des Moines Rapids and the Illinois River under the management of the Engineer Department, and restore the part from the Illinois River to the Ohio River to the commission. All this work has been done under the control of the Engineer Department, and has been entirely successful and entirely satisfactory to the people interested.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that the private colloquy going on between gentlemen cannot be heard by the reporter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. We can not accept that.

Mr. WASHBURN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine is now at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let the gentleman go on and finish up the matter while it is fresh before the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. No; I will withhold my amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 923 to 938, as follows:
"Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $2,900,000; which sum, together with the sums herein appropriated for the Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Ohio River, shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved or amended by an advisory engineer of said commission, which office is hereby created, said advisory engineer to be appointed by the President, at a salary of $3,500 per annum; and James B. Eads is hereby recommended to the President for that position."

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Preserving improvements on the Mississippi River, $500,000; for preserving the improvements made by the commission in the Mississippi River, which commission shall report to the next Congress the results of the improvements already made."

Mr. REED, of Maine. I believe that amendment contains the true treatment this subject ought to receive. I believe the plans which have been presented to the House already show conclusively that this expenditure is not justifiable, except after the completion of the experiment which has already been entered into.

In reply to some observations which I made a moment ago, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] indulged in some remarks with regard to railroads. Now, I call the attention of the House to the fact that such expressions are used simply to create prejudice, and not for the furtherance of argument upon this question. I admit the right and propriety of the Congress of the United States making appropriations to facilitate the transportation of goods by water and thereby exercising a control over the rates which railroads may charge. But like every other business proposition the details of such an arrangement ought to be upon business principles; in other words, if you propose to curb the railroads and bring them within the controlling power of the water ways, it is your duty to do it by an expenditure which will produce that result. But there never has been a time when the Mississippi River would not hold all the commerce that could be put upon it. There never has been a time when this expenditure was necessary even if it would produce the results which are claimed for it by its friends.

But when it has been proved here by the admissions of the committee, by the statements of facts and by the reports of the officers of the Government, that the scheme as attempted is a failure, that it has given every indication of being a failure, I say to continue this under the pretense of regulating railroads is to palter with sound business sense. The commerce of the Mississippi River to-day will demonstrate the truth of what I have said.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to say just a word in reply.

Mr. WILLIS. I must insist upon a strict enforcement of the rule.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Arkansas does not understand me as objecting. I earnestly second his effort for a full and open discussion of this matter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes; to kill the bill if you can.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, which has just been read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I know by experience the thing is too consolidated to hope anything from a division.

The next amendment (by Mr. WASHBURN) was read, as follows:

Strike out "Des Moines Rapids," in line 929, and insert "mouth of the Illinois River."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 13, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. HEPBURN) was read, as follows:

Insert, after line 927, the following:

"Provided, That the sum last named shall be expended for no other purpose than to complete the work on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches."

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order upon this amendment that the same subject has been voted down this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that this is the substance of what has been already considered and disposed of. Is it conceded to be the same amendment which has been acted upon?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is not so conceded by me.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a fact, however, whether the gentleman concedes it or not. I feel satisfied that this amendment has been voted upon already.

The CHAIRMAN. The record of the proceedings of yesterday will decide it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The other proposition, I think, was to reduce the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will deem that it has not been acted upon unless the gentleman will furnish the amendment to which he refers.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not a copy of it before me, but I am satisfied an investigation will show that it is substantially the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the amendment heretofore acted upon, and which the Chair presumes the gentleman from Illinois refers to, to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 922 to 938, inclusive, and insert:
"For the continuation of the improvements of the Mississippi River, $100,000, to be expended in the completion of the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches."

The CHAIRMAN. It is evident to the Chair that the two amendments are not identical.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the statements which have been made in every report furnished by the Mississippi River Commission, as well as by gentlemen on this floor, to the effect that the improvements now being made on the Mississippi River are entirely in the nature of experiments. No gentleman has yet claimed that these improvements will be successful. Every one who has spoken upon the subject and ventured an opinion, has either said that they were experimental, or, like the gentleman from Arkansas, has said that they were absolutely worthless.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. How can the gentleman claim that, when we are simply seeking in the preparation of this bill to stop that which is only experimental and stick to that which is not experimental?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not yield for an interruption. I know what the language of the gentleman was.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But the gentleman mistakes my language. We have asked to be relieved of the incubus that rests upon the work.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am aware of no change which is made by the bill imposing any new duties upon the commission as far as this work is concerned.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The bill does not recommend an expenditure of a dollar for experimental purposes. The design is to prevent new methods of procedure.

Mr. HEPBURN. They are simply acting upon the plan, in my judgment, as originally proposed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Ah! in your judgment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, the first plan ever proposed provided for this work of revetments, the work of spur-dikes, the work of artificial embankments in midriver, and the commission have done no other work, except upon these three classes of improvements, excepting on the levees.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not time to answer questions in three minutes.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask just one question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. KING. I only want to make a correction.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not want to be corrected. I am satisfied with my own knowledge of the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the Chair will remember that I have been interrupted without my consent.

A MEMBER. Let him have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask if it is the pleasure to extend the time of the gentleman from Iowa for two minutes?

Mr. KING. Give him five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time for two minutes?

Mr. DUNN. I object. Only half a minute was occupied by interruptions.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] seem desirous to discuss this question. I ask unanimous consent be given to allow those gentlemen to be heard.

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 109.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky), as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 922 to 944 inclusive.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to submit to the Chair a question of order. My amendment is not intended to cut off amendments offered to what has been read. It goes a few lines further than the Clerk has read. The point of order I wish to make is that if I should fail to carry this amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order; the Chair is unable to hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I was stating, Mr. Chairman, that, if I understand correctly, the Clerk has read as far down as line 938.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole section has been read.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I mean in the second reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole section has been read, and the bill is not being reread.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The point of order I wish to raise is this, that in case this amendment, which goes to line 944, shall fail, would it then be in order to move to amend any portion of the paragraph ending with line 938?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I desire to address myself for the three minutes to the amendment which has been read by the Clerk. I propose to strike out from line 922 down to and including line 944, taking out the whole provision with regard to the Mississippi River Commission and the examination and surveys at the South Pass and the survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters. There are $75,000 in the bill for continuing the survey from the head of the passes to the headwaters of the Mississippi River. There is no necessity for that; and we had better strike out this whole business and let us have a further expression of public opinion on what has been done.

Mr. BUDD. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. To strike out all from line 922 to line 944, inclusive.

Mr. BUDD. That includes all of the three paragraphs?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It does.

Mr. BUDD. All right. Let all friends of the bill vote "ay," and thus save it.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for the reading of the next amendment.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. WASHBURN) was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting, at the end of line 950, the following:

"For the completion of the test of the flume invented by M. J. Adams for the improvement of the navigable channel of the Mississippi River between Saint Paul and Des Moines Rapids, provided for by act of Congress approved, March 3, 1879, under the supervision and direction of the said M. J. Adams, $20,000."

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. That it is new legislation, not authorized by law.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not think it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not material. This is not a general appropriation bill, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. WASHBURN. I simply desire to say that an appropriation was made by Congress heretofore to make a test of this, and the matter was very fully considered in Congress when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] was chairman of the committee. He has already investigated the matter very fully, and I yield him one minute to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] does not appear to be in his seat.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote. In the judgment of the committee the test has not proved satisfactory.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. NICHOLLS) was read, as follows:

After line 953 insert the following:

"For building and equipping a dredge-boat, and operating said boat for one year in the improvement of the rivers and harbors in the States of Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina, $100,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to say a word about that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NICHOLLS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Georgia yields to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are certainly two amendments to the preceding paragraphs which have not been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the whole of the paragraph for the improvement of the Mississippi River commencing in line 922 and the two succeeding paragraphs have been stricken out without the attention of the Chair being called to any amendments pending. The paragraphs have been stricken out and it is now too late to raise the question of order.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. For several years General Gillmore has urged that increased facilities be given him for necessary dredging of Charleston and several other harbors. The present dredging plant of the Government is worn out and utterly useless, and it is absolutely necessary for the commercial wants of Charleston, Wilmington, and Savannah that at least one first-class dredge-boat be supplied for use there. I think this is a most meritorious amendment, and I know of no objection to it that has come from any member of the committee who has given the matter any consideration. The chairman and I have conferred about it and we think it ought to prevail.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I also think that amendment ought to prevail. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NICHOLLS] desire to be heard upon the amendment?
Mr. NICHOLLS. No, sir; I desire a vote.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. BUDD), as follows:

After line 953 insert:
"For operating Government dredge-boat on the rivers emptying into the Suisun and San Pablo Bays, California, $15,000; the same to be taken from the money now on hand to the credit of the fund for the Sacramento and Feather Rivers."

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this amendment, which I understand is acceptable to them. It does not increase the appropriation at all. Last year, under an appropriation made by Congress, the dredge-boat was built, and this amendment simply makes available for operating that dredge-boat certain funds already on hand to the credit of the rivers named.

Mr. WILLIS. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] whether this increases the appropriation?

Mr. BUDD. Not one cent.

Mr. WILLIS. That is my understanding. I understand that the Government has built the dredge-boat, and that this amendment simply provides for running it, out of money already appropriated for those rivers.

Mr. BUDD. Yes; out of the money already appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (by Mr. COOK), as follows:

Strike out all of line 954, after the word "from," and all of line 955.

Mr. COOK. This amendment proposes to strike out all the appropriation for the improvement of the Missouri River below Sioux City. For years past every Congress, I believe, has appropriated money for the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri, and yet I hear of no commerce upon it. The bed of the river is but a body of quicksands. You can not tell to-day where the current will be to-morrow. The sides of the river are so unstable that miles of the shore upon the Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas side are, from year to year, washed into the river, and it is simply an impossibility ever to make the Missouri navigable to any considerable extent. I have inquired of members from Missouri—

Mr. COSGROVE. I would like to answer the gentleman on that point right now.

Mr. COOK. And of members from Iowa, who live upon the banks of the river, and they say that it is practically of no commercial use, nor has it been for years, especially from Council Bluffs to the mouth. Whatever traffic there is upon the Missouri is above Sioux City up to Fort Benton. I do not believe there are five boats passing between Sioux City and Kansas City during the whole year.

Mr. COSGROVE. That shows how little the gentleman knows about the facts.

Mr. COOK. I think the only effect of this provision in the bill is simply to throw $350,000 into the Missouri River. The gentleman from Kansas now tells me that during the whole of the past year the draw in the bridge at Atchison has been open but eight times for boats either way.

The gentleman from Missouri is a little excited, but what I assert is a matter of public notoriety. I have frequently been along the river between Kansas City and Sioux City and at every important place, and never have I seen a boat of any kind on the river or tied up at its banks. It seems to me that this is no more nor less than throwing $250,000 into a river of a little water and much quicksand.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. PUSEY), as follows:

After the word "dollar," in line 955, insert:
"Ten thousand dollars of which, or so much thereof as may be required, for survey and improvement of the Missouri River at the mouth of the Nishnebotny River."

Mr. COSGROVE. Mr. Chairman, is that amendment subject to the point of order?

Mr. PUSEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not increase the appropriation. One of the worst bends in the Missouri River from Saint Joseph to Sioux City is at the mouth of the Nishnebotny (which is a partially navigable stream), and this amendment is simply mandatory upon the commission to spend the amount of money named in removing snags and obstructions at the mouth of that river. The amendment does not increase the appropriation at all, and I believe it is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. The committee has placed this river under the Missouri River Commission. That commission is either competent or incompetent. If incompetent, it ought to be abolished; if competent, it ought to be permitted to pass on this point.

Mr. PUSEY. I think it is entirely within the power of Congress to direct what this commission shall do.

Mr. WILLIS. We refused to do this on the lower Mississippi in regard to Natchez and Memphis.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PUSEY] is entitled the floor.

Mr. PUSEY. A similar appropriation of $5,000 was ingrafted on the bill of last year. But the commission passed over this improvement—did nothing for it. This proposition simply requires the commission to make a survey; it does not increase the appropriation. I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PUSEY, it was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have sent to the desk an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman desire the amendment to come in?

Mr. HEPBURN. After the line last read.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole section has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 953 insert:
"For the improvement of the Mississippi River the sum of $2,000,000: Provided, That not more than $1,000,000 of this sum shall be expended on said river south of Cairo, and that sum shall be expended on Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches."

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to make a point of order on that amendment. The paragraph to which it relates has been passed.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; I am asking that this be added to the paragraph last read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will remember that yesterday, in trying to arrive at a rule for the solution of the anomalous condition of things, the Chair held that when a paragraph relating to a particular river had been once passed there should be no recurrence to the subject of that river. That ruling was enforced more than once during the last sitting of the committee; and it was only relaxed in the case of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], who stated that the West Fork of a particular river was known as a distinct stream. The point of order now raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is sustained.

The next amendment (by Mr. COSGROVE) was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 955, the words "three hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so that it will read when amended: "Improvement of the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, $500,000," &c.

Mr. COSGROVE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would only give one-half of the amount which Major Suter of the commission says is requisite and can be judiciously expended between the points named.

In this connection I wish to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Iowa who offered an amendment to strike out this entire appropriation. With his usual inaccuracy as to facts he stated, as I recollect, that there were not more than three or four boats plying between Saint Louis and a point named by him. I want to state to the gentleman that there are one or two lines of packets plying daily on that river and making trips from Saint Louis to Kansas City two or three times per week. But few points along that river are touched by railroad, so that the commerce has necessarily to be done largely by boats; at every railroad point on the river—that is, those points touched by railroads—there are at least one or more boats. At the city where I reside boats are constantly plying during navigable season upon this river. This river passes through one of the most fertile portions of the country—

Mr. COOK rose.

Mr. COSGROVE. I decline to yield. The gentleman did not honor me by yielding when I asked him to. I think the gentleman was talking about something he knew nothing about, and probably acting under a misapprehension of the facts furnished to him by one not acquainted with the true state of the case.

I therefore hope this amendment will be adopted. If you are going to spend any money, it is right to spend enough to give the commission an opportunity to do something. It is useless to give them a few dollars—not half enough to accomplish any substantial good in aid of the commerce of that river.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COSGROVE, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 20, noes 38.

The next amendment (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

In line 955, strike out "$350,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a vote on that amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out, in line 955, the words "three hundred and."

Mr. Chairman, it will be discovered that the money appropriated for the Missouri River is to be spent in accordance with the estimates, specifications, plans, and recommendations of the Missouri River Commission. That commission is but a branch of the Mississippi River Commission. The plans, specifications, &c., for work on the Missouri River are made by a separate department of the Mississippi River Commission, known as the Missouri River Commission.

Now, in the report of the Mississippi River Commission for 1883 we are told, on page 22—

Within the past year some serious inconvenience has been suffered from exorbitant demands made by land-owners for brush and piers. These materials are in most cases worth little or nothing to the owners, and are unsalable to any buyer except the Government at any price; but at the prices some of the owners ask for them they would make a large item of cost.

It strikes me this thing of tickling the flank of the Missouri River is about as objectionable as tickling the flanks of the Mississippi River, when we know the Missouri River Commission is but a subsidiary branch of the great Mississippi Commission. Although separated by law, they have the same idea about things. One idea seems to have taken control of the entire Democratic party, and that is to put their hands into the Treasury as deep as possible and draw out as many millions as they can. Therefore, if you are going to strike out the Mississippi River Commission, in good faith you ought to strike out the Missouri River Commission, because they are born of the same spirit of this Democratic party, who will stand for years on the principle that they can not appropriate money because the Constitution forbids them to do so when it is to be devoted to any other section of the country, but when it comes to be devoted to their own section then they are for it, if it only takes enough millions out of the Treasury for their purposes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. FUNSTON) was read, as follows:

In line 935, after the word "dollars," insert:

"Ten thousand dollars of which shall be expended in the improvement of the harbor at Wyandotte, Kans."

Mr. FUNSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this amendment merely for the purpose of getting what is called my share in this pot, but I do it because of a public necessity, which ought to be satisfied. It is an appropriation which properly belongs to this locality, because every other town of any importance along the Missouri River has received an appropriation for the improvement of its harbor. I hold in my hand the report of the Mississippi River Commission, showing the history of all the appropriations along that river, but the few minutes which are allowed to me under the rules will not permit me to go into any detail, and therefore I will say in general that by this Missouri River Commission report it is shown $2,000,000 have been appropriated for the Missouri River, and that almost every town of any importance along that river has received its share for the improvement of its harbor. Here are specified the amounts for Saint Joseph, for Kansas City, for Atchison, and other towns along the Missouri River, which have been devoted to the improvement of their harbors, each place receiving from $10,000 to $50,000, until as I have said $2,000,000 have been appropriated and expended in that way. Now, on the bank of this same river stands a city in the State of Kansas, with a population to-day of from 10,000 to 11,000, with a densely populated surrounding country, in which are the largest pork-packing establishments west of the Missouri River, and the most extensive machine-shops in the State, and which so far has never received one dollar for the improvement of its harbor.

I ask this appropriation provided in the amendment which I have moved in the interest of public improvement. It is due to the people of my country that they should have facilities of navigating the stream that goes by their doors, which they are not now able to do because of washes and deposits at and near the banks of the river. I say it is due to this locality that here at this time and in this bill we should have the small appropriation I have asked for to be applied to the improvement of the harbor of that city of Wyandotte.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Does it increase the appropriation?

Mr. FUNSTON. Not one cent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

Strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000;" so it will read:
"For continuation of surveys of the Missouri River from its mouth to its headwaters, now in progress; to make additional surveys and examinations of said river and its tributaries; and to make such additional examinations and investigations, topographical, hydrographical, and hydrometrical, as are necessary for maturing a plan for the permanent improvement of the entire river, $100,000."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. COOK) was read, as follows:

Strike out all of line 974 to line 985, inclusive.

Mr. COOK. This paragraph appropriates $10,000 in a specific manner for improvements at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and that so much of the appropriation which precedes it for the Missouri River should be there used. If it is specific, it should be limited to that amount. If it is not a limitation to $10,000, then it should be stricken out and should rest on an appropriation which covers the river from Sioux City to Saint Louis.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment increasing the amount to $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say this amount of $10,000 was inserted in the bill by the committee in order to protect the Government property at Fort Leavenworth. There the Government owns more than 7,000 acres of land, much of which is occupied by the fort and for military purposes. The reservation extends on each side of the river. A bridge spans the river there, but the action of the water is such that it now threatens more than 1,500 acres of this valuable land belonging to the United States and the usefulness of the bridge spanning the river.

It was to protect that land as well as to improve the bank and the regimen of the stream this appropriation was inserted. It is not for the harbor of Leavenworth or for private property. I insisted before the committee that the sum given was not sufficient; yet in view of the policy adopted by the committee in not making appropriations for particular harbors or localities, but leaving the money to be expended under the direction of the commission, they thought it would not be right to appropriate more than is given; but for the protection of this property of the Government, as well as to improve the navigation of the stream, they consented this amount might be appropriated for the specific use mentioned, and under no circumstances should the motion of the gentleman from Iowa prevail. This committee has been charged with sectionalism and with having acted on partisan considerations. In my judgment no such motives influenced the committee in the discharge of its duty. Sectionalism did not actuate or control it, and partisan considerations were forgotten in the appropriations recommended. We have been charged with looking after local interests and in forgetting the public welfare, although as a member of that committee I desire to say that my own State, the State of Kansas, is almost the only State in the Union which gets no dollar from this bill. We have not been influenced by any such considerations as have been charged against us. If it shall be the disposition of the House to vote down this paltry sum proposed for the protection of this Government property, all I can do is to submit; but I present it to the enlightened judgment of the House, believing the provision of the bill will not be stricken out.

Mr. PERKINS's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment (by Mr. LORE) was read, as follows:

Add after line 985:

"Improving harbor at Wilmington, Del., $25,000, which shall include the $15,000 heretofore passed in this bill for that purpose."

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. LORE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Delaware. Under the order of the House certain lines were postponed until after the reading of this entire paragraph—

Mr. WILLIS. This does not come within that agreement. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to finish its statement. Under the order of the House certain matters were postponed until we reached the end of the section. The end of the section is at the end of line 985, and this is a proposition to add to this section. Prior to that the three other matters which had been passed over would be in order, and without unanimous consent the Chair thinks it is first in order to dispose of these three subjects to which reference has been made.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no doubt about the point of order upon this.

Mr. LORE. I admit if the point of order is insisted upon that it can be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then understands the amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. LORE. I will withdraw it, since the point of order is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now go back to line 332.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. There have been amendments submitted to come in at the end of line 985 that have not been presented to the attention of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware of that, but there were certain other reserved lines in the section that have not been presented, and in the opinion of the Chair they take precedence of those amendments that come in at the end of the section.

Mr. WELLER. I understand the amendments I have already offered will not be precluded?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know, of course, what amendment the gentleman has at the desk. The Clerk will read the amendment to line 332.

The Clerk read the amendment (submitted by Mr. WARNER, of Ohio), as follows:

In line 332, strike out "fifteen" and insert "fifty."

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Ohio is absent, and I owe it to him to say, upon examination of the subject now before the committee, that if he will reduce it to $25,000 there will be no objection. He is attending a committee meeting, and I ask, therefore, that it be reduced to $25,000, to which the committee will have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to amend?

Mr. WILLIS. I move to amend by making it $25,000.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend by increasing it to $30,000.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not do that. There is an agreement between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] and the committee; and this amount will be satisfactory to both parties.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Large amounts of money have been thrown away there by reason of the fact that no appropriation has been made to complete the work.

Mr. WILLIS. But in this case the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is satisfied.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If he is satisfied then I shall not insist upon the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand certain lines from 922 to 935, inclusive, have been stricken from the bill. There were, as I understand it, pending certain amendments in the hands of the Clerk at that time. I want to know what becomes of those amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no official knowledge of any amendment to which attention is not called. When the motion to strike out was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, before arguing it he asked a parliamentary question, whether, if his motion failed, other amendments could be voted upon, to which the Chair answered in the affirmative. The motion of the gentleman, however, was carried, and we then passed to other matters and no attention was called to the fact that other amendments had been offered. The Chair had no information of any other amendments pending.

Mr. HEPBURN. Permit me a moment. Under the direction of the Chair these amendments were forwarded to the Clerk and were in his hands. It was supposed of course by members that they were to be considered as pending amendments under that order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a member proposing an amendment should have called attention to the fact before we had passed on to a half dozen other propositions.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the Chair will allow me I would ask if these lines, having gone out of the bill, do not necessarily take the amendments with them?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that might be the reason affecting the Clerk. But the Chair was not informed in reference to the matter.

Mr. BUDD. Is an amendment pending until it is read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if gentlemen do not call for the reading of their amendments the Chair is not responsible for their failure to be presented to the committee. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next amendment (by Mr. WASHBURN), as follows:

Add to line 774:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed."

Mr. WILLIS. That is to come in under the head of "surveys."

Mr. WASHBURN. I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

The next amendment (submitted by Mr. GUENTHER) was read, as follows:

In line 774, after the word "site," insert:

"Improving the Fox River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $100,000."

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly think it is the intention of this committee to commit so gross a wrong as to fail to make any appropriation for the Fox River.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my friend to reduce the amount to $75,000; and I understand the committee under the new report is willing to accept that.

Mr. GUENTHER. In order not to imperil the ultimate passage of the bill I will consent to this reduction to $75,000, though I should insist upon $150,000. I therefore modify the amendment and make it $75,000.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment in order that was passed over was one to the paragraph commencing in line 813 and relating to the Hennepin Canal. That amendment can not be considered until the question of order shall be disposed of. Is it the pleasure of the committee to have that question of order disposed of now or to take up the amendments which have been offered to come in at the end of the section?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask for a ruling from the Chair now.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the section is concluded with the exception of the amendment to which the Chair has referred.

The CHAIRMAN. There are amendments at the end of that section still to be disposed of.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that those amendments may be disposed of.

Mr. DUNHAM and other members. Let us have the ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] asked that that part of the bill which begins on line 813 and ends with line 842 be stricken out. They relate exclusively to the "construction of a canal from the Illinois River near the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River at or near Rock Island," and propose that $300,000 be appropriated therefor. He claimed that they should be stricken from the bill upon four points of order.

The first was that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of that canal. The second was that that committee had no right to put that canal into this bill and thereby give it the precedence allowed to bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors by paragraph 8, Rule XI. The third ground was that said lines are practically the same as H. R. 1975 upon the Calendar, reported last session by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] from the Committee on Railways and Canals. That being true, it is contended that those lines are therefore obnoxious to clause 4 of Rule XXI as to amendments. His last point was that this was "new legislation, increasing the amount of expenditure covered by the bill and doing it by a clause not germane to the bill." Allusion was there meant to the familiar third paragraph of Rule XXI.

For convenience the last two points will be disposed of first. In reply to them, it was urged that this bill is not a general appropriation bill and not covered by the third clause of Rule XXI, which in terms applies to "general appropriation bills;" and that clause 4 of Rule XXI is in terms confined to amendments, whereas the lines attacked are in the bill and not offered as an amendment.

In February, 1881, Mr. CARLISLE (our present Speaker), being chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, considering the river and harbor appropriation bill, held that it was not a general appropriation bill, and that therefore an amendment to add a new work—that is, "an ice-harbor at Dubuque, Iowa, $40,000"—was not out of order. (See RECORD, volume 47, page 1634, third session Forty-sixth Congress.) That decision has been followed ever since and upon the letter of the rule is fatal to the fourth point above stated. The third point as put is applicable to amendments only, and as the letter of the rule cited covers only amendments, and this is not an amendment, that letter again kills.

The question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], put to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] in the debate, indicated a broader objection, but it was not otherwise suggested. It, therefore, might be improper for the Chair, under the circumstances, to discuss that view. Besides, its elucidation would require a history of the present rule, which would be tedious. The Chair therefore forbears.

Let us now recur to the first and second points of order. Several replies were made to the point that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this canal. The first was that several petitions for the construction of this canal had been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors before it reported this bill to the House. It was not claimed that they were referred otherwise than through the petition-box "in the usual and ordinary way." It was said that by "the rules of the House all bills of this character shall be delivered to the Clerk like petitions and memorials, and thence referred."

Another member said in argument that—

When a petition was placed in the petition-box and referred to that committee a record was made of that fact, and that record was not approved until the next day, when the attention of every member of the House was called to that record, which showed the disposition of such petition; and when that record stands approved by action of the House it is too late in the Committee of the Whole or in the House to say the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of the question.

Does this conclusion follow from the facts stated? Clause 5 of Rule XXI requires:

All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors shall be delivered to the Clerk as in case of petitions and memorials for reference to the appropriate committee.

That declares two things: First, that all those bills go to that committee not through the House, but through the petition-box only; second, that the House trusts the Clerk to send such as relate to rivers and harbors to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is confined to bills.

Rule XXII needs to be examined, for it covers petitions and memorials (except memorials of State Legislatures, which are covered by clause 1 of Rule XXIV).

Rule XXII plainly shows that the reference of petitions and memorials is not even made by the Clerk, as was erroneously stated in the debate. The Clerk must deliver them to the committee to which the indorsement of the member directs. And if the reference be wrong, that committee may refer them to the proper committee "in the manner originally presented," i. e., through the petition-box. And in that case the Clerk has nothing to do but follow the direction of the committee making the reference. It will be seen that under the rule the House has nothing to do with the reference of petitions. This very fact was urged as an objection to Rule XXII when it was adopted. (See speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] on that point.) Sometimes the committee reports them back to the House for reference, but that is not claimed in this case. And that part of the Journal relating to petitions is not usually read in the House. (See Rules and Practices of House of Representatives, first session Forty-eighth Congress, page 341.) So far as the Chair knows it is never read in the House.

If such a reference gives jurisdiction any member may give jurisdiction to any committee over any subject-matter by his indorsement; he may give it to every committee by referring one such petition to each. He may refer the reorganization of the Supreme Court to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics by simply putting the matter of a bill for that purpose into the form of a petition and so directing it by his indorsement. The Chair does not say that by appropriate action the House might not correct such an abuse. The Chair is only showing to what the claim that jurisdiction can be thus obtained will lead.

For many good reasons Rule XI distributes all business between fifty committees. That rule imperatively declares that "all proposed legislation relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors shall be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and all proposed legislation relating to railways and canals, other than Pacific railroads, to the Committee on Railways and Canals." No disregard of that rule by a member's indorsement on a petition or by the retention thereof by a committee, if beyond its jurisdiction, can enlarge the jurisdiction of the committee fixed by the rules.

Next, it was contended that the jurisdiction had been conferred by reference to that committee of the Engineer's Report. The RECORD of the 8th of January last states that "a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the Report of the Chief of Engineers, with accompanying papers from officers in charge of river and harbor districts," was laid before the House by the Speaker, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This mere recital and the fact that the canal is mentioned in the volumes of that report it is contended gave to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors jurisdiction over the proposed canal. It seems to the Chair that a fair construction of that act of the Speaker was to commit to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors only those parts of that report "relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors." The construction opposite to this proves too much for those who invoke its aid. That construction would have given jurisdiction to that committee over the seacoast and lake-frontier defenses, the surveys of the Territories, the improvement and care of public buildings and grounds in and around Washington, the water supply of this District, the fishways at the Great Falls of the Potomac, the control of the Washington Aqueduct, &c.; for all these things are covered in that report. (See pages 5, 2300, 2301, 2339, &c.) The quoted language fairly excluded all but the matter about improving rivers and harbors. The other things mentioned therein belong to our other appropriate committees.

That Congress has provided for the construction of certain other canals throws no light upon this question without the facts as to each of them. They may have been passed as separate bills; they may have been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, or on Appropriations, or on Commerce, or on Rivers and Harbors. Each of those committees has reported such bills, and both separately and combined with other matter. The date of the act, the then jurisdiction of the committee reporting it, &c., must all be known. They may have been to connect parts of the same river with each other, ditches around instead of through obstructions to navigation. They may have been provided for as the original survey of the Hennepin Canal was in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, or as the other case cited in debate in twenty-first United States Statutes at Large, 189; i. e., without any points of order being made, and in bills passed by suspension of all rules.

But even if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the second point of order, that it could not be brought here for consideration in this bill, remains to be answered. Paragraph 8 of Rule XI provides that "the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills." And Rule XXIII, clause 4, provides that "in Committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence," &c.

The proposed work is simply a canal to connect two distinct rivers at the points to be connected thereby seventy-five miles apart. The Chair does not think that in any fair sense that is for the improvement of either river. Nothing but the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors have that great privilege of precedence over all other business except bills raising revenue and appropriating it to carry on the Government. That privilege should not be allowed to anything not clearly entitled thereto.

No answer to this view was made in the debate. The effort seemed to be to avoid that issue by the position that because this bill had been by the House committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union containing this provision, no question of order can be here raised, because it is said that this committee can not inquire into the jurisdiction of the committee which brought the bill into the House.

It is admitted that when the bill was reported to the House, and before and upon its reference to this committee, all points of order were reserved openly in the House and entered into its proceedings. But it is claimed that this precise question has been decided. It is asserted that during the last session of this Congress, when a like bill was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the then chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN], held this same canal to be in order under like circumstances, and that on appeal his decision was sustained by the committee by a vote of 103 to 63.

A decision under like circumstances deliberately made by that gentleman would have great weight with the Chair. The vote of the committee on appeal, even though but half the members voted, would add force to the decision were the issues fully understood when that vote was had. It is important, therefore, to examine the facts.

In that case points of order had not been reserved when that bill was referred. That decision did hold that the bill being referred as an entirety must be so considered. The chairman did say that had points of order been reserved he, "with the views he entertains of the question, would hesitate before undertaking to pass upon the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors," &c. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 63, 5014.) But when asked to state the ground of the decision he said:

The decision of the Chair is based upon the assumption that points of order were not reserved upon the bill when it was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.—Congressional Record, volume 63, page 4915.

Further down on the same page (4015) he said that even had such general reservation of points of order been made as claimed "he still believes it would not be competent for him to pass upon the question of the jurisdiction of another committee," &c. It was after all that that the committee sustained the decision of the Chair. Considering that these expressions came out in a colloquy, the members of that committee may have differed in their understanding of that decision when they voted on the appeal. Quoting these different expressions, gentlemen in this debate have been diametrically opposed in their views of the true grounds of that decision. Nothing beyond that colloquy has been quoted. The Chair will pursue it a little further.

A proposition was offered to amend the Hennepin Canal section by providing for a ship-canal "to connect the waters of the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays." It was ruled out of order on the point that the committee had no jurisdiction, and that that was the substance of a pending bill. (Ibid., 5017.) All the foregoing, as to that bill, occurred on the 11th of June, 1884. On the next day the bill was again under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the same gentleman was in the chair. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] moved to amend by providing for a survey of a ship-canal to connect the Delaware River with the Atlantic Ocean. It was objected to upon a point of order. The Chair held that as the Hennepin Canal was then in the bill this other canal was germane, and therefore in order. The Chair will read on page 5068. Observe its purport:

The Chair will further state that on yesterday he refrained from giving expression to his opinion touching the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over the proposition for the Hennepin Canal, for the reason that the bill in its entirety having been referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole, it was not competent for the Committee of the Whole to go behind the reference and pass upon the question of original jurisdiction in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Chair thinks it needful to a proper understanding of his present ruling to say that in his opinion the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have jurisdiction over that subject, and had the point been presented before the House at the proper time and in the proper way the Chair thinks the clause should have been stricken from the bill.

That extract contained a deliberate opinion "that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have jurisdiction over the subject." It further held that "had the point been presented before the House at the proper time and in the proper way the Chair thinks the clause should have been stricken from the bill." There, as here, jurisdiction was asserted by reason of reference of the Chief Engineer's report, &c., to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

That chairman gave no opinion as to what was the proper time and proper way in the House. Doubtless the proper time would have been when the bill was reported and before it was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. And now about the "proper way." Had the House been informed that this matter was in the bill before it was sent here, action might have been taken in the House other than reserving points of order if its rules and practice allowed consideration in the House before consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But there is no such practice as to appropriation bills. When this bill was reported its title indicated what it was. It was an original bill reported from the committee, never having been before introduced into the House. By Rule XXI, clause 1, it was then read only by its title and referred to this committee. It was never read in the House except by title. But suppose it be treated as having been so read. Rule XXIII requires that—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or property * * * shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has been commenced.

It seems to the Chair that had it been so read in the House and a point of order had been raised and a motion had been made to strike out this canal provision, the Speaker could but have said that that was a "motion" or "proposition" or "proceeding touching appropriations of money" under Rule XXIII, and all that the House could do was to refer it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where that rule demands that its first consideration shall be had.

Suppose that is not true. Suppose that the House, when for the only time this bill was before it, had instructed this committee first to pass upon this point of order. None would then doubt that this committee could so act. Where is the difference when, pursuant to its ordinary practice, the House allowed all points of order to be reserved and sent the bill here under that disability for the action of this committee?

Paragraph 3 of the same Rule XXIII declares that "the rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committee of the Whole House so far as they are applicable." Our Digest of Rules, when it states that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole can not rule a proposition in an appropriation bill committed to it out of order, says:

Of course it is otherwise where the point was reserved before commitment.—Digest, 265.

The fact that the House allows points of order to be reserved before commitment proves that it virtually instructs that the fact of commitment shall not cut them off. Otherwise the practice of reserving points of order on these bills would be worse than an unmeaning farce. It would operate as a snare and a fraud. Otherwise all the purposes sought by distributing matters among our committees according to their jurisdictions, fixed by the rules, would be thwarted. Otherwise the river and harbor bill would be an omnibus, capable of carrying whatever a majority of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors chose to pack into it, however foreign to its jurisdiction, and that too with a guaranteed "right of way" in preference to all legislation except that necessary to preserve the life of the Government. Such a construction must be wrong. The first and second points of order are sustained and the lines objected to will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I am compelled to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and upon that appeal I wish to be heard.

Mr. WILLIS. The hour for adjournment has almost arrived. Will my friend from Illinois yield to me that I may move that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider this bill. The appeal taken from the decision of the Chair will be considered as pending.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. As the gentleman from Illinois has submitted an appeal from the decision of the Chair, I desire to submit a motion relating to that appeal.

Mr. MURPHY. It is understood we reserve all rights of whatever kind we may have, and that in the flurry of the committee rising at this time no right shall be sacrificed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation. An appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman taking the appeal has the floor, and, pending that, yields for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] may be allowed to waive that motion until this appeal is disposed of. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 59 minutes a. m., February 20, 1885) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. JAHU DE WITT MILLER, of the city of Philadelphia. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of $10,500, required under section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, to refund to persons money collected from them without warrant of law under a recent decision of the Court of Claims; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, reporting the allowance of the claim of John Finn, payable from an appropriation which is exhausted; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations received from the Secretary of the Navy for the contingent expenses of the Navy Department for the fiscal years 1884 and 1885, and for testing rifled cannon for new cruisers; which, with the accompanying estimates and papers, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 14th instant, a report of the Chief of Engineers on the subject of a new lock on the Saint Mary's Falls Canal, in the State of Michigan, and estimates therefor; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEY WEST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives returning a Senate bill with amendments. The message will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 19, 1885.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., pass with the following amendments:

In line 2 of the bill, after the word "directed," to strike out all down to and including the word "necessary," in line 4, and insert "purchase, at private sale, or by condemnation in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, all the land that he may deem necessary."

In line 8 strike out the words "including the purchase of land;" in line 10 strike out the word "fifty" and insert "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill with the amendments will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONEY] informs me that there is a clerical error in the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the House strikes out certain words from the bill and inserts identically the same words. The Chair thought that it might go to the committee so as to be reported with the correction.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3343) for the erection of a public building in the city of Auburn, N. Y., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7585) for the relief of William M. Gardner;

A bill (H. R. 7584) for the relief of A. B. Montgomery; and

A bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a copy of concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of New York, which is as follows:

Whereas Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, in January, introduced into the Senate a bill entitled "A bill to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army," which bill has passed the Senate and is now awaiting action in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas the said bill is intended to create a position upon the retired-list of the Army for that illustrious soldier Ulysses S. Grant: Therefore,

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That our Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they are hereby, requested to support the said bill, and to urge a measure which will place General Grant upon the retired-list.

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Representatives in Congress.

I move that the resolutions lie on the table.

The bill having passed the Senate I suppose the resolutions should lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that the paper he sent to the Chair is not an original paper. It is a printed copy.

Mr. LAPHAM. I stated that it was a copy.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The original of the resolution was presented and read several days ago, as I remember.

Mr. LAPHAM. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper will be received, and laid on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a petition of the Ministerial Association of Erie, Pa., in relation to the Mormon question, praying for the passage of a bill the design of which shall be to check in our Republic the subversive influence of Mormonism on our democratic laws, free institutions, and the morality of the nation. I suppose this petition should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As that subject has been passed upon by that committee and by the Senate, the petition had probably better be laid on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Preamble and joint resolution adopted by the thirty-fourth General Assembly of Illinois.

Whereas the Senate of the United States did pass a resolution of the date of April 22, A. D. 1884, instructing the honorable Secretary of War to cause an inquiry to be made as to the cost of construction of the Lake Superior Ship Canal and Portage Lake Improvement Company Canal, and also inquire upon what terms said canals might be purchased by the United States, and make free water ways to the commerce of the great lakes; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War designated Col. O. M. Poe, of the United States Army, to make such examination and report, in conformity with said resolution; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War did report, on or about January 5, A. D. 1885, that Colonel Poe had made such examination, and on whose report did recommend that Congress take steps to purchase the same and make them free water ways to the commerce of the lakes; and

Whereas the tolls collected by these canals are a serious burden to a numerous people and a very large industry embraced inside the limits of the territory supplied by these canals; and

Whereas these water ways should be made free channels to the great traffic that is now springing up with Minnesota, Iowa, and the country along the Northern Pacific Railroad, that passes through Lake Superior, finding an outlet to the east and seaboard; and

Whereas the dangers of the navigation of Lake Superior may be greatly lessened by the improvement of this water way, and make a safe shelter at a point where the dangers of this lake are the greatest and most serious disasters have occurred: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Illinois (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use their best endeavors to secure such legislation by Congress as will result in the United States acquiring the title to, and the ownership of, the ship-canals connecting the waters of Keweenaw Bay, by way of Portage Lake, with the waters of Lake Superior, in the upper peninsula of Michigan, in accordance with the report of the honorable Secretary of War, presented to the United States Senate on or about January 5, A. D. 1885, in reply to its resolution of April 22, A. D. 1884, and making them free for the navigation and commerce of the great lakes.

Resolved, That the honorable secretary of state is hereby requested to forward a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Illinois.

Adopted by the senate, January 30, A. D. 1885.

J. C. SMITH,
President of the Senate.

L. F. WATSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Attest:

Concurred in by the house of representatives, February 4, A. D. 1885.

Teste:

E. M. HAINES, Speaker.

R. A. D. WILBANKS,
Clerk House of Representatives.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Illinois, ss:

I, Henry D. Dement, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a preamble and joint resolution adopted by the thirty-fourth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, and filed in this office February 6, A. D. 1885.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of State, Done at Springfield, the 6th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1885.

HENRY D. DEMENT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., favoring certain amendments of the House bill in relation to bills of lading and to determine the liability of ship-owners and others thereunder; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition signed by a number of leading attorneys and citizens of Saint Louis, Mo., praying that a committee of Congress, or a commission outside of Congress, be appointed to prepare a code of procedure for all Federal tribunals of every kind and jurisdiction. Attached to the petition is a memorial stating the reasons why they desire this done. I ask—it is not very long—that the petition may be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It will doubtless attract some attention, and I think it would be to the interest of the public service that it should be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents a memorial the nature of which he has stated. He asks that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That order will be entered, if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Elias Jessup, William T. Smith, and Isaac T. Gibson, representing the Iowa Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, praying for the establishment of international arbitration for the prevention of war; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SLATER. I present a petition of citizens of Coos County, Oregon, praying for an appropriation of $100,000 for the improvement of the mouth of the Coquille River, and setting forth the importance and necessity of such improvement. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented a concurrent resolution of the house of representatives of Kansas; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

[House concurrent resolution No. 16, relating to the resurvey by the Government of certain townships in Edwards County.]

Whereas it appears from information in possession of the Legislature, that townships numbered 26, 27, 28, of ranges Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, W., 6 P. M., in Edwards County, Kansas, have never been sectionized and subdivided according to law, and that no section corners have ever been established therein; and

Whereas a large population has settled upon these lands (the same being known as the Osage trust lands, &c.) according to law, many of whom it is believed are not in fact actually located upon the several pieces of land upon which they have legally and in good faith filed their claims and purchased; and

Whereas the Government field-notes of said lands are found to be false and fraudulent, and no section corners, after careful and persistent search, have ever been found in said townships, and as no authority exists under the laws of the State of Kansas by which said lands can be resurveyed and proper lines and corners established; and

Whereas under the laws of the United States as they now exist no such resurvey can be made except at the expense and cost of the settlers upon said lands, which expense said settlers are utterly unable to meet, and as said lands were disposed of by the United States Government under the authority of law, with the express guarantee and said lands had been properly surveyed, sectionized, and the corners distinctly marked according to law; and

Whereas in case of such resurvey, because of the false and fraudulent characters of said field-notes, the United States Government has in fact and law ample security for the cost of such resurvey, in the still existing bonds of the original contractors for the original survey of said township; and as there is good reason to believe that others and similar cases exist in other counties of the State of Kansas inflicting great wrong and hardships upon the settlers upon such lands: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to bring this subject before Congress, and ask the immediate enactment of laws providing—

First. That on the presentation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that any township or part of township of land, sold or otherwise disposed of under authority of law, had never in fact been surveyed according to law, or that the plat and field-notes on file in the proper office were in fact false and fraudulent, it be made the duty of said Commissioner at once to order a resurvey of said townships or parts of townships at the cost of the Government, and also to prosecute the contractors for the original survey of such townships or parts of townships, and their sureties, for failure to perform their contracts, and for such damages as may be provided for in such contracts.

Second. That on the presentation of such satisfactory proof that any township or part of township has never in fact been legally surveyed and subdivided according to law, that provision be made for the relief of actual settlers upon such lands; that the time given them to perform the duties and make the proofs required according to law.

Third. Be it resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward duly authenticated copies of this preamble and of these resolutions, with accompanying papers, to the several members of Congress from this State.

STATE OF KANSAS, Office of Secretary of State:

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kans., this 13th day of February, A. D. 1885.

E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of certain North Carolina Creek Indians now residing in the Indian Territory praying the confirmation of lands awarded to them in North Carolina under a decree of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of J. R. Haskell, of New York, praying that an appropriation of $250,000 be made for the purpose of constructing and testing three of the Haskell multicharge guns; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. 5838) granting a pension to Henry Ballinger;

A bill (H. R. 3040) for the relief of Mary Tarbell;

A bill (H. R. 5835) granting a pension to J. H. Adams;

A bill (H. R. 6182) granting a pension to Edwin Thomas; and

A bill (H. R. 3158) for the relief of Werner Lentz.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5555) granting a pension to James Frazier;

A bill (H. R. 2068) granting a pension to James H. Reid;

A bill (H. R. 2284) granting a pension to Elizabeth Fowler; A bill (H. R. 3074) to grant a pension to Jasper J. Henry on account of wounds received while acting as guide for the First Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers in the war of the rebellion;

A bill (S. 1612) granting a pension to Bryson R. McCartney;

A bill (H. R. 5938) to pension Julia A. Marcum;

A bill (S. 2316) granting a pension to Mrs. Cordelia Brainerd Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 7802) to grant a pension to Harriet M. Bailly; and

A bill (H. R. 7731) granting a pension to Lois B. Smith.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1776) granting a pension to James H. Reid, and the bill (S. 2222) granting a pension to James H. Reid, reported adversely thereon; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3749) granting a pension to William Bolwark;

A bill (H. R. 2537) granting a pension to Hugh Ryan;

A bill (H. R. 2539) granting a pension to George W. Kiser;

A bill (H. R. 1046) granting a pension to Mary A. Griffin;

A bill (H. R. 7336) granting a pension to T. A. Morton; and

A bill (H. R. 7338) granting a pension to Chloe A. Whipple.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2451) for the protection of forests on the public domain, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am also instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report a joint resolution placing a portion of the Arlington estate, now owned by the United States, under the control of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 131) placing a portion of the Arlington estate, now owned by the United States, under the control of the Commissioner of Agriculture was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object unless it will lead to debate. If it does, I shall object.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is not concluded.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the joint resolution will go upon the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7262) increasing the pension of Elmira P. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 3728) granting a pension to Charles P. Mahan;

A bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Eliza Sluss;

A bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John A. Vanderhoff;

A bill (H. R. 7822) granting a pension to Mark Spencer Van Loan; and

A bill (H. R. 6018) increasing the pension of George Tapp.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 882) for the relief of William B. Stokes;

A bill (S. 186) granting a pension to Penelope T. Heald;

A bill (S. 185) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary S. W. Harris; and

A bill (S. 725) for the relief of Charles Seymour, of Flint, Mich., for services in the war of 1812, and for pension.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 358) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner, to report it adversely and move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been trying to get that bill out of the Senate for a long time, and I thought I had once before requested that it should be withdrawn. The pension was granted some time ago, and I suppose that is the ground upon which it is reported adversely.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the ground of the adverse report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7709) granting a pension to Louisa A. Estes; and

A bill (H. R. 4833) granting a pension to Louisa Earle.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3352) to restore the name of Warren Sams to the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 5124) granting a pension to Samuel Z. Cooper.

Mr. SLATER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report adversely on the bill (S. 2043) for the relief of Maria L. Strong. I desire to state that this is the report of the majority, there being a minority opposed to the report. I ask that the bill be put upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 278) granting a pension to Mary E. McConnell, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill (H. R. 445) authorizing the establishment of a horse-railroad upon and over the island of Rock Island and the bridges erected by the United States connecting the cities of Davenport and Rock Island, previously reported by him.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route; and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Objection is made.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Kansas withdraw his objection for a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLAN. The amendment is such as the Senate has invariably incorporated in these House bills, and its adoption will require the bill to be returned to the House for consideration there. The House, I am sure, if they have an opportunity, will consent to the amendment. It will take but a very brief time to consider the bill if the Senator will withdraw his objection. [A pause.] Silence may be regarded as giving consent, Mr. President.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. During the last session of the present Congress a bill was introduced for the relief of Juliet Leef and others. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, and reported back adversely. Quite recently the House of Representatives passed a similar bill, the bill (H. R. 737) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil. That bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Claims, and I am instructed by that committee to report it back without recommendation. The committee is willing that it should go upon the Calendar. The committee, however, does not withdraw its objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the committee has not changed its former report.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The committee has not changed its former report.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to state that the Committee on Pensions will ask the Senate to take up private pension bills on Monday, including not only those favorably reported, but a large number adversely reported. Among the latter bills, those of prominent cases that have attracted the general attention of the country and the special attention of many Senators, are the cases of Mrs. Ann Cornelia Lanman, Mrs. Emma De Long, Mrs. Francis McNeil Potter, Mrs. Emily L. Alvord, Mrs. S. Dana Greene, Mrs. Margaret D. Marchand, Mrs. Margaret B. Harwood, Mrs. Martha C. Breese, Mrs. Emily M. Wyman, Mrs. Sophia A. Morgan, and Mrs. Eliza Willson Thornburgh.

Sensors will please take notice of this proposed action, and I think if we go about the business promptly on Monday we can get through with all the pension bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. There are a number of other contested cases on the Calendar besides those which the Senator has mentioned.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are many other cases of adverse reports on the Calendar, in which of course the Senators who requested those bills to be placed on the Calendar are interested. I only mention those which have received attention generally.

SUPREME COURT OPINIONS FOR SENATORS.

Mr. MANDERSON. At the last session of the present Congress there was referred to the Committee on Printing the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to make provision that printed copies of all opinions given by justices of the Supreme Court be furnished to every Senator as soon as filed.

I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution; and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to obtain 100 copies of each printed decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to pay for the same from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator to amend the resolution by inserting "and any dissenting opinions filed with the same." I suppose the purpose was to include dissenting opinions.

Mr. MANDERSON. That was certainly the purpose of the committee. I thought the language used would cover that; but still I have no objection to inserting those words, so that there may be no uncertainty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "States," insert the words "and any dissenting opinions filed with the same;" so as to read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to obtain 100 copies of each printed decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and any dissenting opinions filed with the same, and to pay for the same from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

LIST OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was referred to the Committee on Printing a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of all persons employed in his Department during the year ending December 31, 1884. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report in favor of the printing of the report, and I ask that it be so ordered. It requires no resolution. A simple order of the Senate that the report be printed will be sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear what the report is. I have been trying to catch what the Senator from Nebraska said, and could not hear a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read, or the Senator from Nebraska will state the substance of it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I can state to the Senator from Missouri what it is. The statutes require that the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress a list of the employees of the Treasury Department. In compliance with that law the Secretary of the Treasury has transmitted the list for 1884, and for the first time the list is classified as required by the civil-service act. The Committee on Printing report favorably as to the printing of that report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order for printing the report will be made if there be no objection.

REPORT ON LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Mr. HAWLEY. A concurrent resolution was referred yesterday to the Committee on Printing which originated in the Senate, went to the House, and was there amended. The committee instructs me to report in favor of concurring in the amendments of the House, and I ask for immediate action upon the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 19, 1885.

Resolved, That the House concur in the foregoing resolution of the Senate with the following amendments:

In line 6 of the resolution strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "six."

In line 7 of the resolution strike out the word "sixteen" and insert the word "thirteen."

In line 8 of the resolution strike out the words "and one" and insert the word "five;" and strike out the word "copies" in same line.

In line 9 of the resolution strike out the words "Senate Committee on Education and Labor" and insert "Bureau of Labor Statistics, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read as it was amended in the House, and as it will be if it is passed as recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as amended by the other House and reported by the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk began to read the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can relieve the Secretary from embarrassment in reading the resolution. The blue pencil interlineations are incorrectly made, and in engrossing the resolution the clerks will be governed by the written description of the amendments. The resolution as amended gives 6,000 copies to the Senate, 13,000 to the House, 5,000 to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and 1,000 to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, who desire to distribute some numbers to the numerous witnesses who were called before that committee. The aggregate is the same as that ordered by the Senate originally, but a little differently distributed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture. I will state that I do this for the purpose of moving, when the bill is returned, a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. It seems likely that under the rules of the House it will not be possible to secure in that body a consideration of the bill, and, therefore, if the bill is to become a law at this session it will be necessary that this course should be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to move at this time that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill the title of which he has named, being the bill for the repeal of the pre-emption law. Is there objection to the motion being received?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the title of the bill be read.

Mr. DOLPH. It is the bill to repeal the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act, and the desert-land act, and for other purposes, which passed the Senate a few days since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion being entertained?

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator desire simply to move that the Senate recede from its amendments?

Mr. DOLPH. I simply move at this time that the Senate ask that the bill be returned to the Senate from the House of Representatives, and then I propose when the bill is returned to move for a committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is an unusual proceeding, I think. I shall have to object for the moment until I can look into the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask if the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order at this time. It would be in order under the call for resolutions, subject on objection to be carried over one day.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2652) for the protection of seamen; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Commerce. A bill has come up from the House of Representatives which I am informed undertakes to amend the Dingley act, so called, passed at the last session. The Dingley act prohibited contracts with landlords and with other persons who surround sailors when they are in port by which the sailor should pledge his wages to that class of persons. I understand the bill which has just come up and been referred to the Committee on Commerce repeals that provision, and tends, in the opinion of some humane friends of the sailor, to make the sailor a prey, as he has been in times passed.

The bill which I introduce is a transcript, with the proper changes, of the law of the State of Massachusetts prohibiting all such pledges in advance of the sailor's wages and allowing him only to pledge them for the necessary support of his wife and children during his absence. I hope the Committee on Commerce will consider this bill and report it as a substitute for the House bill, and in that way insure its passage.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2653) for the relief of S. S. Webb & Co. for the use of William G. Ford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2654) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FRYE. Yesterday I submitted a proposed amendment to the river and harbor bill to continue the dredging of the ship-channel in Portland Harbor, Portland, Me. The print has it "Rockland Harbor." I ask leave to change "Rockland" to "Portland," and to reintroduce it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will send for the original paper. If it is a misprint it does not need any order. The print will be corrected.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. MILLER of California submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them severally to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. GEORGE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them severally to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT TAXES AND EXPENDITURES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" being in order, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution which was submitted yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and which went over under objection. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to immediately inform the Senate of the causes that have prevented them from complying with the resolutions of the Senate adopted on the 24th of June, 1884, relating to the taxes collected from 1875 to 1884, and to receipts and disbursements on account of the water department or water fund for each year from 1875 to 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether he has been informed of any return made by the commissioners?

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANIES' TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the other railroad companies affected by the act approved July 1, 1862, granting subsidies in bonds and lands, have constructed and are maintaining and operating their own lines of telegraph, and whether telegraphic messages are accepted and transmitted for all persons and corporations without discrimination as to price, and other conditions, as provided in section 15 of the act above referred to.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up a resolution in regard to the payment to George E. Spencer, late Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order.

Mr. HOAR. This is the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the regular order after the call for resolutions is exhausted. Are there further resolutions?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have a resolution to submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

STEAMER WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate any reports or opinions in his Department relating to any legal services performed, and by whom, in defending suits against the United States Government steamer William H. Seward.

That information is desirable at an early day, and I should be glad to have the resolution adopted at this time.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Senator that he change the word "requested" to "directed." That is the proper form.

Mr. MITCHELL. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified accordingly.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions that order is closed.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the resolution which I just now named.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1236, which is the regular order if the Senator has the floor to make the motion, resolutions being exhausted.

Mr. COCKRELL. But that is setting aside the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order, if the Senator from Missouri makes one, because Rule VIII as modified provides that the Senate shall go to the Calendar "unless the Senate shall at any time otherwise order." The Senator from Massachusetts proposes, according to the constant practice of the Senate, that the Senate shall "otherwise order" by taking up the resolution he has named.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This is a resolution which was reported the other day and went over under the rules to the next day. Now, when "concurrent or other resolutions" are in order, is it not in order to ask to have a resolution of that character laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that applies to a resolution reported from a committee, but a resolution reported from a committee is like any other resolution or bill of the Senate, and is placed on the Calendar and requires a motion to proceed to its consideration, unless when it is reached in regular order.

Mr. HOAR. This is a Senate resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a Senate resolution, but it is the report of a committee, the Chair thinks, and has so held constantly.

Mr. HOAR. If I may pursue my parliamentary inquiry, I do not wish to displace the ordinary business of the Senate which the Senate is expected to conduct at this time by a motion to lay aside the Calendar. I rose supposing I was entitled to call up the resolution when resolutions were reached, as of right, it having gone over one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it had been a resolution offered by the Senator and objected to, it would have been laid before the Senate the next morning.

Mr. HOAR. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may offer the resolution, in the terms of that, which I will have copied for the purpose, and call it up to-morrow or the next day when resolutions are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks leave to offer a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate to George E. Spencer, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, the sum of $7,132, being the amount actually and necessarily expended by him in maintaining his title to his seat.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made and it goes over. It will be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning on the call of resolutions.

Mr. LAPHAM. I give notice that at the time of the consideration of that I shall also ask for the consideration of Order of Business 787, being the resolution to pay the expenses of Judge Underwood. The subjects ought to be disposed of at the same time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion to proceed with the consideration of the resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

PROCEEDINGS OF TO-MORROW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, with the leave of the Senate and of the Chair, before the Senate proceeds to its morning business, that there shall be an understanding about the proceedings to-morrow, whether the Senate expect to proceed with ordinary legislative business after the ceremonial exercises in the other Chamber are over. For one I hope the Senate will proceed with its ordinary business after we return from the Representatives' Chamber, as we have but ten or twelve more working days, and the time is precious to the country beyond computation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the order adopted in regard to those ceremonies be read. I think that fixes the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. That order is a very long one. I think we all understand it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask for the whole programme, but there was an order adopted—I have forgotten myself what it was, and I should like to hear it. My impression is that it provides for no session to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio at what time he thinks it likely the exercises in the House of Representatives will be completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should say not later than 5 o'clock; probably between 4 and 5.

Mr. ALLISON. Let this matter go over until later in the day. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is Senate bill No. 1886.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask that that amendment may be now read, and I call the attention of the Senate to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. Before the commencement of any action or actions by the Attorney-General, in pursuance of this act, the person or persons in whose interest and for whose benefit the same is to be prosecuted shall deposit with the clerk of the court a bond or bonds (to be approved by the court, or a judge thereof, as to the form and penalty of the same) conditioned to pay to the person or persons to be prosecuted all costs and expenses of the defense or defenses of such action or actions in case the plaintiff shall fail to recover therein.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask to amend that by adding "a bond with surety or sureties."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator repeat his proposed amendment?

Mr. LAPHAM. My amendment is to make it read, "a bond or bonds, with surety or sureties (to be approved by the court, or a judge thereof, as to the form and penalty of the same)."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification suggested by the Senator from New York will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "bonds," it is proposed to insert "with surety or sureties."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. LAPHAM. It will be seen that this is the usual form of a bond by way of a security for costs. It is not an uncommon proceeding by any manner of means; it is a very usual proceeding, especially where insolvent parties or parties against whom costs can not be recovered are authorized to prosecute. I do not want this bill converted into a proceeding authorizing the Government to sue in forma pauperis, as is the practice in some cases. I want somebody to be responsible for the expenses of the litigation that this bill proposes, in case the prosecution fails to recover.

I have not heard a word from any Senator thus far in opposition to this amendment. I doubt the ingenuity of any Senator to state a reason against this amendment which is deserving of serious consideration. The design and purport of the amendment are so obvious, it seems to me, that it should receive the sanction even of the advocates of this bill, unless they want to prosecute and persecute the purchasers whom I represent with numberless actions without any hope of compensation to them for the expenses to which they are to be subjected. On the contrary, in answer to this proposition that we shall have security for costs, the Senators from Iowa who are advocating this bill renew their proposition that this is a bill like the bill we considered yesterday for the forfeiture of a railroad grant. While I was discussing the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Alabama to that bill, and urging that there should be a preliminary judicial investigation before the lands were opened to settlement, the senior Senator from Iowa—senior in service I mean—interjected the expression "the Des Moines River bill;" thus showing that he concurs with his colleague that the Des Moines River bill is a bill to forfeit a legislative grant by the Government, as it in fact is. Now, there is a wide difference between these propositions; and the artillery which the Senators from Iowa aim at me in opposition to this bill is like the muskets described by Trumbull:

Though well aimed at duck or plover,
Bear wide, and kick their owners over.

In the proposition submitted by the Senator from Alabama to the Oregon bill some days since and to the Texas Pacific bill yesterday, his object was to provide that the United States should settle all questions of title before it offered the lands to the public. What was the state of things in Iowa? Iowa had a body of public lands about which there was no dispute. The Government gave it to Iowa. There was a defective description of the lands, which the officers decided in the first instance went into the Territory of Minnesota even, which they afterward held only went to the northern boundary of Iowa, and they refused to certify lands to the State of Iowa north of the boundary line of that State. They refused, in fact, as the record shows, to certify any more lands to the State of Iowa unless that State should relinquish all claim to lands in Minnesota. The State refused to do that. That stopped the certification of lands, and that arrested the river improvement. Iowa asked that Congress should make a confirmatory grant of the lands which had thus been certified up to that time, and the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, was for the express purpose of validating all the titles which had theretofore been conveyed to the State and by the State to the river company and by the river company to purchasers, in whose behalf I appear.

This was all done in the interest of the State of Iowa, for the benefit of the State of Iowa. The State of Iowa obtained over three-quarters of a million of acres of public land from the United States. Iowa spent three hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars in the attempt to improve the navigation of the river, and there the work was arrested for the reason I have stated, because she would not relinquish her claim to lands in Minnesota. Then it was changed to a railroad along the banks of the river, and that railroad has been built out of the proceeds of public lands. They spent the $360,000 for improvements out of moneys that were paid by those who purchased the lands, as those I represent purchased the lands from the State.

Now, sir, I submit with great confidence to the Senate the proposition, who should pay these unfortunate settlers, if anybody should pay them? It is the State of Iowa who has had this large grant of public lands from the Government. The attempt by this bill to recover them out of honest purchasers whose titles have been confirmed is an attempt which I trust will not succeed. The law which enables them to make the attempt I trust will not be passed without annexing this condition, the condition that security for costs shall be given before any suit is instituted.

The difference between this bill and the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is so obvious that no one can mistake it. As was said on one occasion by a caricaturist, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama proposes to settle all these questions previous before the war; this bill proposes to settle all these questions previous after the war. There is a hiatus between them as wide as the globe; there is no similarity in the two questions; and unless something can be said which commends itself to the judgment of the Senate against the amendment now pending that we shall have this security, I trust the Senate will vote upon this bill the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, this bill has occupied the attention of the Senate so long that I have no doubt all Senators are weary of it, as I am myself, and I must say that it is with a difficulty which I can not overcome that I endeavored to discover the pertinency of the remarks of the Senator from New York to the amendment which he has proposed.

The bill proposes that a suit shall be instituted by the Attorney-General in the name of the United States for the assertion of the title of the Government to the lands involved. That suit will be in the name of the Government, and the parties for whom the Senator from New York says he appears here will have the same opportunity to co-operate with the Government as will these so-called settlers on the Des Moines lands. The second provision of the bill is:

And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

That is, they may co-operate; and it does seem to me that it would be unseemly to provide by law that in an action of this kind by the Government in an effort to assert its title to these lands private parties should be required to come in and give bond for security for costs, and therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, there is an obvious answer to that suggestion. If the settler and the purchaser unite with the Government in a suit to be commenced under this bill, I should like to know who will be made defendant? It is an absurdity on the face of it. Who will be prosecuted? Sir, such is not the design of this bill. The design of this bill is to have the Government unite with these squatters and sue the purchasers, or else there is no design in it. There can be no action commenced without making the claimants to this title under the purchase the defendants in the action.

I am amazed that the advocates of this bill are driven to such subterfuges as this. Who is to be prosecuted, who is to be made defendant, I repeat, if the claimant of the title unites with the Government, and the settler unites with the Government? How long would such a bill stand in a court on a demurrer? How long would a bill stand in court on demurrer if filed by the United States and one of these settlers who have no community of interest? It is either the land of the Government or the land of the settler or of the purchaser under the river grant. There is no joint interest in it; and a demurrer upon the ground of misjoinder of parties would inevitably defeat any action which can be brought under this bill, as every lawyer knows. It is impossible that we can subvert the principles of law by this bill.

Now, then, the purchasers will be prosecuted, if anybody, under this act; and this amendment simply provides that they shall have the ordinary security for costs for two reasons: first, that the settlers are irresponsible, and secondly, that the Government can not be made liable. If we could recover costs against the United States, I would not press this amendment; if the United States was liable for costs, I would not press this amendment; but it is because we shall be compelled to litigate this question at our own expense without any remedy for costs that I have offered the amendment which is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LAPHAM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York whether, if the proceedings are to be in the name of the United States, he desires to have a bond filed by the United States?

Mr. LAPHAM. They will be in the name of the United States and the settlers.

Mr. DAWES. Will the United States and the settlers together be sufficient to pay the costs?

Mr. LAPHAM. The United States is not bound; there is the difficulty; the United States is not liable in an action for costs. There is the trouble.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see why they would not be, if judgment were rendered against them. I understand that while the United States can not be called against its will into court, if the United States does of its own accord go into court it has to run the chances of any party. I may be mistaken.

Mr. LAPHAM. The honorable Senator is entirely mistaken. There can be no judgment for costs against the Government.

Mr. DAWES. Judgment is rendered against the Government in court frequently. I never heard before that it was a judgment without costs; but I may be mistaken.

Mr. LAPHAM. You are. In the Court of Claims by a special provision costs may be recovered.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator say that in suits against a collector or in any suit the United States brings upon a bond, for instance, and a judgment gets unfortunately rendered against the United States—that is to say, where the balance was on the other side, as it is sometimes—does he mean to say that judgment is rendered for the amount without costs?

Mr. LAPHAM. A party can not have costs against the Government. The honorable Senator will find no case of that kind.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is more familiar with these proceedings than I am, and I take his construction on that point; but I confess it is a humiliation to state before the Senate that that is news to me.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am requested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] to announce that he is confined to his house by illness. I have not paired him on this bill.

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] is absent on account of illness, and is not paired.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is confined by sickness at his room to-day. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I have not paired him.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer the following amendment, to add at the end of the second section:

In every action commenced under and in pursuance of the provisions of this act the defendant or defendants if successful shall have judgment for costs against the United States.

It will be seen this differs from the other amendment simply in dispensing with security for costs and making the Government liable for the costs. I ask for the yeas and nays on this.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how he would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 31; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of section 2:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to such of the lands referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided validated the titles of bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa or its grantees prior to the passage of said joint resolution.

A few words, Mr. President. It will be seen that this amendment differs from the amendment, which was lost by one majority only, which I first offered, excepting all the lands which had been conveyed under the river grant to purchasers for value. I have drawn this amendment so as to limit it to those titles which the Supreme Court has decided were rendered valid by the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, so as to prevent by this legislation a reopening of questions which have already been litigated between the settlers and these purchasers, or between other parties and these purchasers.

A large number of cases have been decided; some questions of law have been settled; and my object in this amendment is to prevent this bill from reopening those adjudications and again renewing the contro-versities which ought to be regarded as having been settled by the decisions which were thus made. I have for that reason limited the exception to the class of cases in which the Supreme Court has decided that by the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, the titles of the purchasers were rendered valid.

Who can object? If this bill is a bill to quiet titles, shall it be converted into a bill to reopen and disturb the titles already settled? Are Senators willing to vote such consequences as that? Are Senators willing to vote to reopen all the litigations which have been decided? On the contrary, will not Senators, lawyers, say that so far as the Supreme Court has determined these questions this litigation shall not reopen them.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this proposition ought to receive the sanction of the Senate. I beg Senators to remember in whose behalf I am standing here, accused as I am of consuming time unnecessarily. I am standing here in behalf of a class of persons who more than twenty years ago paid their money to the State of Iowa, $350,000, which the State of Iowa has had, and whose titles the Supreme Court has said are valid and binding and can not be disturbed. That is my position. I have been earnest in it, I have been persistent in it. I mean to be earnest and persistent in it to the end. I would defend the title of these purchasers here to the last extremity by every means known to the rules of parliamentary law and practice, as I would defend it if I were standing in a court of justice and they were being prosecuted. That is my duty. It is my pleasure, Mr. President, as well as my duty. If there is any position a Senator can occupy, if there is any position a lawyer can occupy, it is the position of defending titles which have been determined by the highest tribunals of the land to be valid; it is to defend those who in good faith have invested their money at the invitation of the Government of the United States, and whose titles have been ratified by the Congress of the United States and confirmed by the judgments of the Supreme Court.

This is my position; this is the secret of my zeal and earnestness in behalf of the measure, and this is why I press upon the attention of the Senate these amendments in the various forms in which I have offered them. First I offered an amendment providing that we should have security for costs. Then I offered an amendment providing that the Government should be liable to costs. First I offered an amendment that all the purchasers in the Des Moines River grant should be excepted. That was voted down by a bare majority. Now, I ask it, confining it only to those whose titles the Supreme Court has decided are valid under the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861. I submit to Senators that there is nothing unreasonable in this exception. It is not as broad as the exception which was framed by Senator McDonald, which I offered as the first of my amendments. It is narrowed to cases which have been adjudicated, which have been decided, which have been determined in favor of these purchasers. Now until this can be done the title of the bill is a misnomer. The bill to quiet the title of the Des Moines River lands is to become a law to reopen and again prosecute the controversies in regard to those lands which the Supreme Court has closed by its repeated decisions, which the courts of Iowa have closed by their repeated decisions, and this bill ought not to become a law without this exception is ingrafted upon it.

It would, as I said yesterday, instead of quieting titles, reopen the whole flood-gate of litigation in the State of Iowa, and perpetuate it we know not how long, and all the insecurity and turbulence and violence which have prevailed there for so many years would be renewed, and renewed in a form which, according to the refusal of the Senate thus far to ingraft an amendment by way of security, will forever deprive the owners of these lands of any compensation for the expenses of the litigation to which they are to be subjected.

Mr. President, I earnestly urge on the Senate the consideration of the amendment in the form in which I now offer it. I earnestly ask that the Senate will consider the propriety of this amendment and place it upon this bill, so as to prevent the retrial of questions which have been heretofore adjudicated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being Order of Business No. 872. The title of the bill will be read:

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 1652) to provide for the improvement of the channel between Galveston Harbor and the Gulf of Mexico."

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar. This bill has been partly considered, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is ready to make a brief speech upon the subject, and I trust we may be able to get through with it in a very short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1074. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar."

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to address a question to the Senator from Vermont and have his answer before the Senate votes. —

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont what is his purpose. I was very desirous of taking up the railroad funding bill, which it has been expected by a very large number of the Senate would follow the question which was disposed of yesterday. Of course a silver debate, such as we have had a good many specimens of in the last few years, is of no importance to the country; but a silver vote stopping superfluous coinage would, in my judgment, be worth not only any possible inconvenience, but an extra session. I should be prepared, for one, to have both Houses assemble here on the 5th day of March to secure the stoppage of the silver coinage, although it would be at the expense, of course, of great personal inconvenience to all of us to have such a session, so that nothing would stand in the way of the accomplishment of that hope. But I desire to ask my honorable friend from Vermont how soon he believes he will get a vote on the bill if it is taken up?

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, have I liberty to respond to the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I yield, if I can, to the Senator to answer my question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will proceed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I asked unanimous consent that I might address a question to the Senator from Vermont and have his reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has asked unanimous consent for the Senator from Vermont, and he has it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not anticipate a prolonged discussion upon this subject. I understand that the opponents of the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee to the trade-dollar bill are more anxious for a vote upon it than they are for a discussion. I trust that we may be able to get through with it in a very short time.

Mr. HOAR. In an hour?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. There are now two of the general appropriation bills before the Senate reported with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations, and it is desirable in view of the great appropriation bills which have not yet come from the other House, but which will be poured in upon us next week, that these two bills should be passed by the Senate to-day, for the likelihood is that to-morrow there will be no opportunity for doing business. I wish to give notice that if the Senate does not sustain the motion made by the Senator from Vermont I shall then seek to call up for consideration the agricultural appropriation bill, and upon that being finished the Post-Office appropriation bill in charge of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be called up with the leave of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate grant consent to the Senator from Colorado being heard on this question? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that the opinion expressed by the Senator from Vermont I think is entirely wrong. Before such an important measure as that which he proposes shall pass this body it will be necessary to lay material before it which will occupy at least several days. It is a measure of great importance which affects the volume of currency, and to seek to accomplish such an end by an amendment to the bill of the House seems to me to be very dangerous legislation, and I assure the Senate that it will require several days at least to get the proper information before the body in regard to it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill which the Senator from Vermont has asked to have considered now by the Senate contains a provision for the retirement of the trade-dollar or its payment in standard silver dollars, about which I suppose there is but little difference of opinion in the Senate. If other subjects involved in the bill will lead to a more lengthy discussion, I hope at least that the Senate will agree to consider and favorably consider that portion of it relating to the trade-dollar.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a very brief statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose most Senators know that Pennsylvania is, perhaps, more greatly interested in the primary question involved in this bill than any other State in the Union. The people of that State think a great wrong has been done to them because Congress has not provided for the redemption of the trade-dollar. Therefore, without regard to the importance of the question of coinage and the question of currency involved in the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, I shall vote against that amendment and vote for the passage of the House bill for the redemption of the trade-dollar. I believe many other Senators will do the same; and I trust we shall be able to get a direct vote upon the bill itself as it came from the House. The House passed it to provide for the redemption of the trade-dollar. Then if the question is presented either by a bill from the House or by a bill reported from the Committee on Finance here, I shall be as ready as any Senator to dispose of the whole question. I do not, however, believe it is possible that that question can be disposed of during this session. Therefore I think it impracticable to involve the subject of the redemption of the trade-dollar with the consideration of the coinage question in general. I hope the bill will be taken up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the so-called trade-dollar bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Would a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill now be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not until after the question is put on the pending motion. It would be merely piling up motions which are not subject to amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule IX, and ask that that rule be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule IX will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The first part of the rule, the first subdivision.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the Calendar. Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate, and shall have precedence in the order above named, and may be submitted as in the nature and with all the rights of questions of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state in reply to the inquiry which the Chair supposed was intended by the Senator from Wisconsin—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think I have discovered that this rule applies to business during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it applies to business all the time except when a special order is up; but Rule X as to special orders provides that they shall be laid before the Senate, and there is one now laid before the Senate. Then at the foot of the rule about special orders it is provided:

And all motions to change such order, or to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

The Chair is under the impression that if the pending measure, the Galveston Harbor bill, were not a special order, the operation of Rule IX would be complete and effective, and that a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill would stand next in order to a motion to adjourn or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, and must be put in the order of its precedence, no matter when made, as a preceding motion; but the Senate now having before it a special order, the Chair thinks that the simple motion is to proceed to the consideration of other business, and that the Senator from Vermont has made.

The Chair will now ask the unanimous consent which the Senator from Maine proposes, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRILL. I shall object, but I will give way by an informal postponement if the bill is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the trade-dollar bill, so called.

Mr. MORRILL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered. Mr. BECK. I understand the Senator from Vermont, after this bill is taken up, is willing to allow the appropriation bill to be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I so said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. VEST. I was about to announce the pair of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on authority from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON], presuming that the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea," but I see the Senator from New Hampshire is about to vote.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will pair with the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Louisiana is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (after having voted in the negative). I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. PIKE. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understand my pair would vote "nay." I also vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Palmer,
Bayard,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Platt,
Beck,	Groome,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out section 5 of the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. I now consent, as I indicated I would, that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] shall bring up the appropriation bill he mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that this bill be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. I was about to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion shall now prevail, will the effect of it be to displace and throw back on the Calendar the bill which has just been taken up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The effect of it will be to leave the trade-dollar bill on the Calendar subject to a motion to take it up again.

Mr. PLATT. Then I hope that the Senator from Maine—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to say that I hope—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to be heard on the pending question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senator from Maine will not press his motion at the present time. I have no doubt that he can get unanimous consent after a little while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

MARIA G. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask permission to offer a resolution to lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being received at this time? The Chair hears none. It will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Alice E. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

Mr. ALLISON. I object. That resolution is not in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York received unanimous consent to present it. The Chair asked for unanimous consent that he have leave to offer the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not hear the Chair state that. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so stated distinctly, and the Chair heard no objection. The resolution is now objected to by the mover of it, and goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agricultural appropriation bill is the business before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., to correct an error of engrossment of the House amendments.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 305) for the relief of Thomas T. Stratton, assignee of W. B. Waldran;

A bill (S. 1031) for the relief of W. C. Marsh;

A bill (S. 1347) for the relief of the sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron;

A bill (S. 1412) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States; and

A bill (S. 1839) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.

GEORGE E. SPENCER AND MARIA G. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution for payment to George E. Spencer of a sum of money for expenses incurred by him in defending his title to a seat, and the resolution just introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] in regard to Maria G. Underwood, be referred to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator include in his request both resolutions?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the resolution introduced by himself this morning, and one introduced on a former day by the Senator from New York, be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. There are two resolutions on each of these subjects. I should like to have them all go to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two resolutions upon each subject will be included in the request—the two resolutions on the Calendar and the two introduced to-day and on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to the Spencer resolution going to the committee, but the Underwood resolution I propose shall lie over till to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection as to the Underwood resolutions, is there objection to the others being referred?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I object then to the others being referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection. The reading of the agricultural appropriation bill will proceed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask consent to withdraw my objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts to send certain resolutions to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I am satisfied there ought not to be anything like retaliation in the legislation of this body, and I regret that I made the objection, although I felt somewhat aggrieved at the moment as to the other case which interested a citizen originally of New York. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] renews his request. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the resolutions referred to by him a moment since, the two in respect to Spencer, be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. If there be no objection that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT KEY WEST.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill of the Senate (No. 229) "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.," to correct an error of engrossment of House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the order returning the bill to the House of Representatives will be entered. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be considered by clauses or sections for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be considered in their order as the reading proceeds. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "office of Commissioner of Agriculture," in line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One microscopist, $1,800; one botanist, $1,800; one assistant botanist, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 35, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the total compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture and the clerks and employees in his office, from $65,480 to $70,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the heading in line 37, after the word "chemical," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" and in line 42, after "chemical," to insert "division;" so as to make the clause read:

CHEMICAL DIVISION.

For compensation of chief chemist, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one assistant chemist, $1,400; employment of additional assistance, when necessary, in the chemical division, $6,000; in all, $11,500.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to ask for the reason of the change, striking out "bureau" and inserting "division?" The Agricultural Department uses the word "bureau," and the statistics collected by it go to its bureau of statistics. A year ago we passed a law creating a Bureau of Animal Industry in the Agricultural Department. That, of course, remains as the title was made by law. It seems to me it would be much better to use the title "bureau," in referring to all the special divisions of any Department, rather than to use the word "division." It is more in accordance with the general practice in governmental affairs. I know that the Department itself desires to retain the title "bureau" rather than that of "division."

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator on my explanation will see that the committee are right in this change. The House of Representatives in passing this bill took up each of the little divisions and subdivisions and called it a bureau. For instance, on page 4, the whole force in the business of the Department under the head of "the microscopical bureau" is one man at $1,800 a year, and they make that the "microscopical bureau."

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That would be undoubtedly wrong.

Mr. HALE. In the botanical branch there are two men, and they are made the "botanical bureau;" and so the seeds division is made a bureau, and so the agricultural statistics division, and so as to this chemical division where the whole number employed is only seven or eight men and $11,000 is expended. The House made them all bureaus.

To the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that proceeding smacked of absurdity, if I may use that word. A bureau is a great branch of the Government. The Pension Office, with its thousands of employes and the expenditure of tens of millions of money, is a bureau; the Land Office, with its great interests and expenditure and force is a bureau; the Patent Office, with hundreds of clerks ramifying all over the country into every branch of industry and human invention, is a bureau. So in the Treasury Department; the great subdivisions there, the Comptroller's Office, the Customs Office, the various Auditors' offices, the Treasurer's branch, &c., are bureaus; and in those bureaus are subdivisions which are simply called divisions. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe that it was fitting or proper to elevate the subdivisions of this Department into the scale of bureaus, and so has retained the old arrangement of divisions. A statute of last year created the Bureau of Animal Industry, fixed that in terms, and so the committee did not seek to interfere with that and has left it, and has left all the rest as they have been heretofore, simply "divisions."

I think this will appeal to the Senator from New York himself. If he were casting the bill he would cast it in this way, I am confident.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In the main I agree with the Senator from Maine as to what he has said; these small divisions should not be dignified by being made bureaus; but it occurred to me that the change of name might be proper as to the chemical division of the Department of Agriculture, though I am not well informed in regard to that division. In the Treasury Department the Bureau of Statistics is dignified by being called the Bureau of Statistics, and all their statistics are issued by that bureau under that name. In the Agricultural Department statistics are also issued as coming from its bureau of statistics. They use that title, whether legally or not, and it is so on all the publications I have received from the Agricultural Department. I have only to suggest that perhaps in one or two cases the title "bureau" might be retained, but not certainly in all the smaller divisions the Senator has indicated. I have no particular desire or care about it, but there is one bureau, that of animal industry, established by law.

Mr. HALE. That has not been interfered with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the word "bureau" and insert "division," in line 37 and in line 42.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the heading in line 44, after "entomological," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" in line 47, after the word "entomological," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" and in line 57, after the word "entomological," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" so as to make the clause read:

Entomological division:

For compensation of entomologist, $2,500; one assistant entomologist, $1,400; assistants in the entomological division, when necessary, $4,000; for investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture and horticulture, experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them, and for the promotion of economic ornithology, or the study of the interrelation of birds and agriculture, an investigation of the food, habits, and migration of birds in relation to both insects and plants, and publishing report thereon, for drawings, and for chemicals and traveling and other expenses on the practical work of the entomological division, $20,000; in all, $27,900.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no objection to that amendment, but I want to move an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that the order is to act first on the amendments the Committee on Appropriations have reported.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I supposed we were to offer amendments as the reading went on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the order to be to act first on the amendments reported by the committee, and then the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think it will be better to let me offer my amendment now. This is the only amendment I have.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York propose to amend the amendment of the committee?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. No; let that be acted on.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will now propose his amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to move an amendment, in line 57, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "thirty;" and also in the same line to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

And other expenses on the practical work of entomological division, $30,000; in all, $37,900.

I ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments to this proposition. The action of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was had two or three weeks since on this question, and I gave the papers relating to it to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, supposing he would have charge of the agricultural appropriation bill; but it seems in the preparation of these bills it fell to the charge of the Senator from Maine, and I presume his attention was not fully called to this proposition and to the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture.

The occasion for this increase arises in this wise: In line 51 there has been inserted in this bill a clause including:

And for the promotion of economic ornithology, or the study of the interrelation of birds and agriculture, an investigation of the food, habits, and migration of birds in relation to both insects and plants, and publishing report thereon, for drawings, and for chemicals and traveling and other expenses.

Those words have been put into this bill this year, of course resulting in an increase of the labor of the entomological division and largely increasing its expenditures if it is to do the work that has been assigned to it. The reason for this has come about in this wise: There has been organized in this country an ornithological union, composed of the leading naturalists of this country, extending over the entire country and also over Canada. There has also been organized an international ornithological union, and these unions of the different civilized countries are acting in connection. Some of them have been at work for several years. The unions of the various countries have applied to their respective governments asking that the governments take up this work to a certain extent—that is, the work of the collation of facts and the publication of facts.

These ornithological unions, which are studying the questions designated in these lines, are doing the work voluntarily for the advancement of science and the good of mankind in general. These associations are entirely voluntary, and all their work is done without compensation for love of the cause. They have collected and are collecting large amounts of information upon this subject, which is very valuable and is undoubtedly to be of great value to the agriculturists as a class. They do not feel able to undertake the work of classifying and collating the information which they have obtained, or of publishing it for the benefit of the world, and they have asked for the action indicated in the lines which I read.

During the past two years there have been scattered all over the United States more than a thousand gentlemen engaged in making these observations. Circulars were prepared and sent out to all the various stations by the Smithsonian Institution at the request of the Ornithological Union, of course the expense being paid by the Smithsonian Institution as under the law it had a right to do; but it is not able to go on with the proper publication of these results. A very large amount of information has been obtained. All the light-house keepers in the United States and in Canada have been instructed by the proper department to obtain the information desired; blanks have been furnished them, and they have made regular reports, and these reports have come in in very large numbers.

The Ornithological Union presented some weeks ago to Congress a memorial fully setting forth the work they were doing, and what they desired the Government to do in the premises. I will not detain the Senate by reading the whole of it, but will simply refer to a few passages in it in order to show that the work they are doing is not only of great scientific value to the country but that it has much of practical advantage to farmers. First, as to their means of obtaining information:

The stations from which returns have come, in addition to those in Spanish America, are scattered over the whole country, extending in the east from Sonbrero Key, Florida, to Newfoundland, and in the west from Arizona and Southern California to British Columbia. They are most numerous in New England, the Atlantic district, the Mississippi Valley, and Nova Scotia.

They go on to say:

That material now in hand is of great value, and is so voluminous that the committee can not properly arrange, systematize, and publish it without Government aid. Its value does not consist wholly in its scientific interest, for it has direct bearings upon many of the problems with which the practical agriculturist is concerned.

On that point let me say that this investigation includes a thorough examination into the food and habits of all birds, and they have already discovered that some species of birds which have been supposed to be of injury to the horticulturist and farmer have been found to be their best friend, and instead of being destroyed they ought to be preserved. On the other hand, they have discovered that some birds which were supposed to be of advantage to agriculture are enemies of agriculture and ought to be exterminated. The operations of this union cover the migration of birds, their geographical distribution, and also includes the whole subject of economic ornithology.

The subcommittee on migration has undertaken to ascertain the whereabouts of all our birds during the winter season, and the times of leaving their winter homes; to determine if possible the number and extent of the chief avenues of migration in North America, and the average rate of speed at which the different species travel; to find out the dates of appearance and disappearance of each successive bird-wave for at least a thousand localities, both in spring and fall, for a period of years, together with the causes which influence the same, and to draw therefrom such generalizations and deductions as the material collected will permit.

The inquiry concerning the food of birds is one of much consequence, because it undertakes the solution of many of the problems which beset the practical farmer and sheds light upon many questions concerning which almost universal ignorance prevails.

Primarily, the food of all birds must consist either of animal matter or vegetable matter or both, and its consumption must be serviceable or prejudicial to the interests of mankind. On this basis, all birds may be classed under one of three heads:

I. Birds whose habits render them, on the whole, beneficial.

II. Birds whose habits render them, on the whole, injurious.

III. Birds whose habits, so far as known, make it doubtful whether, on the whole, they are beneficial or injurious.

And it is for the solution of this and other problems that this union has been formed and has been doing this voluntary work. I believe that there is no investigation now being made into natural history which will be of so great value to all our people and to the whole world as the investigations of these various unions of ornithologists who are now pursuing this subject.

In the investigation of economic ornithology still other questions present themselves. Among them may be mentioned:

At what season and for how long a period is the bird with us? How many broods does it rear each season?

Does it inhabit marshes, uplands, cultivated fields, or forests?

Does it take up its abode near the habitations of man, or does it inhabit districts remote from civilization?

What effect does the settlement of a region have upon its bird-life? What birds, if left to themselves, are likely to become most abundant as the country grows older?

In pursuance of these researches it is evident that much good would result from friendly co-operation with the entomological and botanical divisions of the Department of Agriculture and with the United States Entomological Commission.

They continue:

The practical bearings of this investigation are not obscure. When the limitations of the several faunal areas have been ascertained with sufficient exactness and admit of graphic illustration by means of colored maps, it will be possible to predict, with considerable accuracy, the course which an injurious insect will pursue in extending its march from the point where its first devastations are committed, and our farmers may be forewarned, so that those living in districts likely to become infested can plant different crops and thus be saved large pecuniary loss; while those living just outside will derive increased revenue from the cultivation of the particular crop affected. The questions having to do with the distribution of species are referred to the subcommittee on that subject.

Further in regard to the practical value of this work the memorial sets forth:

It has already been shown (in the sections treating of economic ornithology) that the study of the distribution and food of birds has such direct bearings upon practical agriculture that its importance can hardly be overestimated. There can be no reasonable doubt that the farmers of the United States would profit to the extent of thousands of dollars per annum by availing themselves of the results of these inquiries.

In view of the facts herein briefly outlined your memorialists humbly beg to suggest the urgent need of the creation, as a branch of the Department of Agriculture, of an ornithological department or bureau for the collection and elaboration of data respecting the migration and geographical distribution of our birds and the investigation of all questions of an economic character relating to North American ornithology.

In the event of the immediate establishment of such a bureau by your honorable body, your memorialists pledge the same their hearty support and co-operation.

This is signed by the officers of this Ornithological Union. This matter was laid before the Department of Agriculture and brought to the attention of the Smithsonian Institution, and Professor Baird joined in recommending this action, and of course an appropriation is needed. The result has been that authority to undertake this investigation and the compilation of the statistics and the data which can be furnished and will be furnished by this union has been put into this bill, but there has been no increase of the appropriation for the expenditures of the entomological division. Ten thousand dollars was asked for as being the least sum that can properly do this work. When the bill passed the House and the chief of this division, Dr. Riley, discovered it he came to see me, and not finding me wrote to me a letter, portions of which I will read, and from which the Senate will see that it is necessary to increase this appropriation somewhat; otherwise the work can not be done at all:

I regret very much to see that in the bill appropriating for the expenses of this Department, as it passed the House on Saturday, a clause was interpolated in the paragraph making appropriations for the entomological bureau (lines 47-51) requiring certain work in economic ornithology, without making any additional appropriation to meet the additional work required.

By the advice of Commissioner Loring, I beg to call your attention to this fact in the hope that you will urge the Senate Appropriations Committee to so modify the bill by a Senate amendment as to do away with the disadvantages which in its present form it would bring about in my work.

The work of the entomological bureau has all been planned and the force organized on the basis of the present appropriation, and the diversion of any portion of this small appropriation to work hitherto not suggested would seriously affect and cripple the present work of the bureau. In other words, I should be obliged either to disrupt the present organization of the bureau and disappoint the farming community, or, continuing the work already planned, make merely a pretense of pursuing the ornithological work required.

I will say that I am fully in sympathy with the purposes of the Ornithological Union, and that I regret very much having found you out when I called on you.

Then he goes on to say that this item in the appropriation bill of $30,000, and in all, for the entire division, $27,900, is precisely the same appropriation that was made last year, and which of course was used in the work of that division, without any reference to this new work which is to be added to it, and it will be absolutely impossible for the division to do this work properly unless this small sum of $10,000 be added to it. I trust that the Senate, in the interest of agriculture, in the interest of science, will grant this addition of $10,000. The large amount of work already done by the union would be placed in the hands of the Department, and by proper clerks it can be classified and generalizations from it made and put in proper shape for publication, that all may have the benefit of the work.

Nearly all the other governments of the civilized world, so far as I know, have taken action on this matter, as I understand from the president and secretary of the American union. In Canada the government has done the same thing. I hold in my hand a circular issued by the department of marine at Ottawa, in which it calls on all the various stations of observation established all over that country to send their communications to the department of marine, by which they are to be taken in charge and collated; and it also gives notice that all their communications are to be post free—that is, franked. It seems to me that our Government ought to do this much for the public benefit.

If any Senator has any question or any suggestion to make I shall be happy to answer it.

Mr. HALE. I think we can get at this. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.
Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is an increase of $10,000 in line 57.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 57, page 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "twenty," before "thousand," and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

For drawings and for chemicals and traveling and other expenses on the practical work of the entomological division, $30,000.

Mr. HALE. "In all, $37,900?"

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Yes; that is included.

Mr. HALE. Let me inquire of the Senator from New York if this amendment is moved under the rules by a committee?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The amendment is moved by proper authority from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HALE. I will not, if I can, make the point of order, because I sympathize with the Senator from New York in what he is seeking to accomplish.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no doubt if it had not been on account of my mistake, supposing the Senator from Kansas would have charge of this particular bill, if I had presented the matter to the Senator from Maine and submitted it properly, it would have been put in the bill at once; but I sent it to another Senator, supposing he had charge of the bill, and therefore neglected properly to bring it to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. I do not make any point of order; but I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from the letter of Dr. Riley. There has been certain work added to this division. It is a cognate work to what it has been doing before, but it extends its scope and no additional appropriation has been made for that purpose. I see in the letter of Dr. Riley, a part of which the Senator read, he says:

In view of the foregoing facts he would beg you either to get the general appropriation to the entomological bureau increased by either $5,000 or $10,000, or, what would be preferable, to add the new matter as a separate and independent clause.

And in a postscript he says:

I had a consultation with Mr. HATCH, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, last night, and he agreed to support an addition of $5,000 to the appropriation, and I have little doubt but an explanation to Senator PLUMB will bring about the desired amendment.

I think if the Senate will put the increase at $5,000 we shall have no trouble with the House and it will go through easily. I make that suggestion.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that in any way, because in my talk with Dr. Riley I found that even $10,000 would be scarcely enough, and the suggestion that the addition be either $10,000 or $5,000 was made under an apprehension that Congress might not be very favorably disposed to scientific pursuits. I think therein he did us great injustice. My conversation with the president and secretary of the American Union of Ornithologists leads me to believe that the appropriation ought to be much more for the amount of work now on hand. I have seen some of the work; and it is very voluminous and very valuable, and I do not believe clerks can be set to work upon it to put it in proper shape ready for publication for less than $10,000. If we appropriate $5,000, a less number of clerks will be put to work, and it will simply delay the publication of the results, which I believe are very valuable to all of us, for another year, and certainly I think the Government of the United States can afford to give this pittance of $10,000 in order that we may get at the results, and that whatever benefit may arise to agriculture or to science may not be delayed and postponed to a distant day. The Department of Agriculture is not a very great burden on the public Treasury, and I hope the Senate will simply consent that my amendment for $10,000 shall be adopted as it stands. Then if there shall be any trouble with the House, that can be arranged.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the difference is enough to pay for making any more fuss about it, and if the Senator insists on his amendment I shall not oppose it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Committee on Agriculture considered this whole matter, and it is the only change that the Committee on Agriculture suggest in the bill. In other respects they leave it as it is.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 74, 75, 76, as follows:

Microscopical bureau: For compensation of microscopist, $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 77, 78, 79, and 80, as follows:

BOTANICAL BUREAU.

For compensation of one botanist, $1,900; for one assistant botanist, $1,200; in all, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 95.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to disturb the order of procedure, but inasmuch as the Senator from New York was indulged to propose an amendment prior to the adoption of the amendments of the committee as a whole, I ask leave to move an amendment at line 94 at this time, if it will not disconcert the Senator having charge of the bill.

Mr. HALE. No, sir; I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Kansas will state his amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 94 I move to strike out "twenty" before "thousand" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

LABORATORY.

For chemicals and apparatus for the use of the chemists and microscopists, and for the necessary expenses in conducting experiments, including experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and other vegetable plants, $50,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. The sum of money proposed by the amendment which I now offer was appropriated by the last agricultural appropriation bill. The design of the committee, and of the Senate in providing for that appropriation, was to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to engage in certain experiments in regard to machinery necessary for the manufacture of sugar from sorghum. The whole of the appropriations are illy placed in the bill. In fact, the bill itself in every way is as badly arranged as any bill could possibly be in failing to bring together cognate subjects of inquiry. But following the arrangement which has been perpetuated ever since appropriations have been made separately for the Agricultural Department, under the head of "laboratory" is this item, which as I said before was increased to $50,000 last year with the design of having these experiments made.

The experiments were especially calculated to be in a certain direction, in the direction of what is called diffusion as applicable to the extraction of the saccharine matter from cane. The ordinary process of crushing and of steaming in connection with it as sometimes applied has not been satisfactory.

I have before me a letter written by a gentleman in Louisiana addressed to Mr. Wiley, the chemist of the Department of Agriculture, under date of December 15, 1883, in which in discussing this question of the amount of juice extracted from the cane, and referring to the date of 1873, at which time certain experiments had been made among the cane-growers of Louisiana in the use of the diffusion apparatus, he says:

We were then still sharing the common belief of our planters, that they could and did, with their more powerful mills at least, extract from seventy to seventy-two pounds of juice out of every one hundred pounds of cane. We only hoped to increase this, by diffusion, to eighty-four or eighty-five pounds, so that by adopting the process our planters should gain about 20 per cent.

You may therefore judge how great must have been our surprise when, by the use of scales, by the measuring of the juice, and by the usual polariscopic tests, we ascertained beyond a doubt that only a very few mills in this country did extract more than fifty-five to fifty-eight pounds of juice; that instead of obtaining only 20 per cent. more juice by diffusion the yield was really increased from 40 to 50 per cent., and that this juice, in spite of the various defects in our primitive machinery, with its unavoidable irregularities and delays, had rather gained than lost in purity.

It is conceded now everywhere that the ordinary crushing machinery applied to the extraction of juice from cane, whether the Louisiana cane or the bastard cane known as sorghum, does not ordinarily result in the extraction of more than 50 to 55 per cent. of the juice. The total amount of juice is supposed to be 88 per cent. of the weight of the cane, and about 37 to 45 per cent. is the range of the amount obtained by the ordinary processes of extraction.

The question of the manufacture of sugar has recently excited more than usual attention and has resulted in the establishment of works in Illinois and at three different points in Kansas for the manufacture of sugar from sorghum. As the result of that, during the last year from 600,000 to 700,000 pounds of merchantable sugar were made in Kansas from the sorghum plant. I have here a sample of what is called "A sugar," made by the ordinary process, and which I should be glad to have every Senator who has any interest in this matter examine and taste for himself in order to see that the sugar made from sorghum, whatever it may have been heretofore, is as absolutely free from any anti-saccharine substance, from anything which to the taste characterizes it as different from the ordinary sugar, as can be imagined. It is as good in every respect and has taken its place alongside of the best article manufactured out of the Louisiana cane, and has met every expectation of both seller and consumer.

The result obtained in sugar has been supplemented by an equally acceptable result obtained in the manufacture of molasses. It is now made in large supply and of a quality which is nearly as uniform as that which comes from the refineries of the product of the Louisiana cane.

For the purpose of relieving the manufacturer from the great loss resulting from imperfect machinery, experiments have been adopted in the use of a new process called diffusion, and that is new only in this country, because in France and in Germany, where sugar is made almost wholly from beets, the diffusion process has been in use for many years and with great success. It is estimated in those countries that about 98 per cent. of the saccharine substance is taken from the beet.

About two years ago there was set up in a building adjoining the Agricultural Department in this city a small diffusion battery, which was experimented with considerably and I believe satisfactorily, so satisfactorily indeed that the Commissioner of Agriculture recommended, and Congress yielded to the recommendation, an appropriation sufficient to erect larger batteries to be used elsewhere for the purpose of more completely testing the ability of this process to extract the juice from cane to an extent which would make the manufacture of sugar from sorghum profitable and which would put that industry upon its feet. By some misadventure the apparatus which was designed to be tried last year was not constructed in time to have the experiment made during the last season. However, it has recently been arranged to send that apparatus to Ottawa, in the State of Kansas, to be set up in connection with a manufactory of sugar already in operation there, and at which favorable results have been already obtained.

The interest in this subject is not, however, confined to Kansas; it is not confined to what is known as the sorghum belt; but the interest is also very great in Louisiana, where by reason of the diminished price at which beet-root sugars have been sold during the last year the industry of sugar-making has been almost prostrated. I think it is safe to say that that industry was carried on in Louisiana this year if not at a loss certainly without any profit, and if the existing condition of things shall continue it threatens the overthrow of the entire sugar-making industry of the United States. But even if there should be a revival and an increase of price sufficient to warrant the continuation of the manufacture under the old condition in Louisiana, there is the constant threat of a diminution of the tariff and also a constant threat of the foreign competition, which has been so disastrous this year, and at any time the operation of either one of these causes will be liable to overthrow the industry entirely.

Thus capital is exceedingly timid about even continuing in the manufacture, and certainly no prudent person would under such circumstances engage in it very largely.

In the State of Kansas, as I have already said, there are three manufactories of sorghum sugar. At each one of those establishments sugar has been manufactured for two consecutive years, and I think at one of them for three. So far as the quality is concerned the success has been very great. It has removed very largely, and I may say almost wholly, the objections which have heretofore obtained to this product on account of its being of a taste to which people were unused and which usually made it unacceptable to the consumer.

While this result has been reached, and during the time necessary to bring it about, various important problems connected with the manufacture of sugar from sorghum have been settled, and settled in the right way—that is to say, in the direction of increased economy in manufacture and improvement in the varieties of cane—and if it had not been for the great fall in prices this year the manufacture of this product in Kansas during the past season would have been attended with some profit. As it is, I was informed by the superintendent of one of the works that the sugar made this year cost just about the wholesale selling price. Whether that included the wear and tear of machinery, I am not certain.

Notwithstanding the fact that the industry was carried on this year without a profit, there has been found great ground for encouragement in the fact that the experiments made in connection with the manufacture, and stimulated by it, helped to a great extent by the skill and judgment of an agent of the Department, have demonstrated that the manufacturing season can be extended more than twice as long as was heretofore supposed possible; that by covering the cane with earth the process or change from ordinary saccharine to glucose in the cane is arrested, and so the manufacturing season can be extended from September until as late as the 1st of February. I do not say that this has been determined beyond any possible doubt, but it seems to have been determined beyond any reasonable doubt, and along with it some other questions incidental to it have also been settled. So these manufacturers during the period of three years in which they have been engaged in the business have settled certain very important problems which have heretofore remained unsettled, and have taken long strides in the direction of their ability to manufacture sugar from sorghum successfully, and thus have opened up to the people of the United States a greater possibility than they have ever heretofore had of their ability to manufacture all the sugar needed for their consumption.

This is not a subject of any minor importance if we have regard to the amount of sugar that is used by the people of the United States, and especially if we regard the amount which they import. The value of the sugar imported during the last three years has never been less than $100,000,000 annually. It is therefore a subject of very great importance if we can approach it with any hope whatever that by any stimulus or by any process or by any discovery we may be able to so meet the emergency as to produce the supply, or even any considerable portion of the supply, which we are now obliged to obtain from outside.

The chief results which have been obtained during the last few years have been at the expense of private capital. The Government has done something. It has had intelligent chemists at work in the Department of Agriculture; it has made some experiments in the way of machinery. I do not in any wise belittle what has been obtained as the result of these efforts either under the present administration of that Department or under preceding administrations, nor have I any designs of comparing one with another, but I say that the chief valuable results which have been obtained have been at the expense of private capital; that the Government has not given that aid to this industry heretofore which I think it ought to have had. When I speak of that I do not speak of it with reference to the possible profit which might have been derived to the manufacturer himself, but I am thinking about it with reference to the advantage to accrue to the entire people of the United States.

No one question of so great national importance could be presented to the people of the United States as that embracing within itself the possibility of the relief to the people of the expenditure of $100,000,000 among foreign people for a product which is absolutely necessary and the supply of which they must keep up at all hazards and at all cost.

But the benefit to be derived is not only in the way of relief from the expenditure abroad of a large sum of money. The expenditure of this money at home will give profitable employment to labor. Much the larger portion of the expense attendant upon the production of sugar is the outlay for labor. As is shown by a very intelligent address delivered at a recent convention of the sorghum-makers of Kansas by Professor Swenson, this industry employs more labor, or as much labor certainly, in proportion to the gross product as any other.

The results are so divided that no considerable portion can go to large capital. The cane is produced, as experience shows, to the best advantage by small farmers, men who produce cane as they have heretofore produced corn, and men who in its production use their and family domestic labor, cultivating ten, fifteen, twenty, fifty, or a hundred acres of cane, the product of which they sell to the nearest manufacturer, and the capital employed in one factory will rarely exceed fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars.

The area within which sorghum cane can be raised with profit has not yet been determined; but it is safe to say that, if present results can in any wise be depended upon, it will extend from at least the southern line of Kansas to as far north as a line drawn east and west through the center of Nebraska and the State of Iowa. Undoubtedly Kansas and other States in the same latitude afford the best field for the profitable growth of sorghum; but the discovery that cane can be kept in proper condition some months after being cut, thus extending the season of manufacture, opens up possibilities for more northern latitudes.

I know it may be said that if this is such an inviting field private capital itself ought to explore it without Government help. This is true as a rule. But the Government has too great an interest in this subject to afford to take the chance that private capital may fail of success. The general interest is greater than the private or individual interest. And I unhesitatingly say that it is the part of the highest wisdom that the Government should, upon the threshold of this experiment and with a view to the great possible results to be derived, undertake a part at least of the expense of the introduction of new machinery and new methods which private capital will be slow to take hold of, especially in view of the fact that the industry now is in the depressed condition of which I have spoken, and the disposition of capital already engaged in it to let go rather than to continue, with the doubtful results which now seem likely to follow.

In moving to increase this sum from $20,000 to $50,000, it is, therefore, with a view of having the Government continue the experiments which it has already commenced in a small way, and to make them effective, besides entering upon others with the same object in various portions of the country so as to have the advantage of the co-operation of private skill and the advantage of different localities, in order that the experiment may be of the completest possible character. The experiments will be watched with interest, and if they show that success can be made reasonably certain then there will be ample enterprise and capital to enlarge and carry on the business.

With the present competition from abroad, stimulated by the bounty of the German Government, and with the defective machinery now used in this country, there is little hope for success. The germ of what is needed is probably found in the diffusion apparatus used for the manufacture of beet sugar, but it will have to be modified so as to be perfectly adapted for the extraction of juice from sorghum, and the expense of experiments for this purpose should be borne by the General Government.

Capital finds too many fruitful fields in this country on which to enter to warrant it in going where there is doubt and heretofore nothing but failure. The Government with small expenditure can demonstrate what is lacking and make secure what is now doubtful.

If, therefore, by putting into the hands of the Commissioner of Agriculture and his skilled assistants money sufficient to carry on the necessary experiments they will be able to point the way to the manufacturers of the United States, to those who are already engaged in the manufacture and those who are looking to this industry, we shall, I believe, have set in motion instrumentalities which will result in a very few years in relief from any further necessity of sending money abroad to buy this most necessary article, and one which is going into greater consumption every year.

I ask that the Chief Clerk may read a portion of the address of Professor Swenson which I have mentioned, and which sets out in a very intelligent and detailed manner not only the results heretofore obtained, but a very thorough exposition of what may be expected in the future if the proper encouragement is given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chief Clerk will read the paper referred to by the Senator from Kansas.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The past season's work has fully proven that a first-class sugar can be made from sorghum cane. The possibility of making as good an article of sugar from this source as from Southern cane or sugar-beets, may be considered a settled fact.

There are, however, many chances for improvement. Among the most important I will mention the improvement of the quality of the cane by careful selection of seed and by cross-fertilization so as to originate new and better varieties. Already considerable progress has been made in this direction, and we have every reason to believe that in this way the contents of cane sugar may be greatly increased. Another great step in advance would be the lengthening of our working season. One of the greatest difficulties in this business is that we have to do nearly all our work in the short space of three months. This you know is overcome to a great extent by the beet-sugar manufacturers by placing their beets underground, in which way the cane-sugar remains unchanged for several months. Experiments made at Washington and Sterling this year show conclusively that the same is true of sorghum cane. At Sterling the experiment was made by Mr. Cowgill, and samples of Sink's Hybrid cane which he sent me December 6 contained 88.25 per cent. of juice, and the juice contained 15.25 per cent. cane sugar, 1.10 per cent. glucose, and 3.94 per cent. of other valuable solids. The large amount of juice present shows conclusively that the great richness of the juice was not due to the evaporation of water and the consequent concentration of juice. It shows that cane put down in this way not only keeps well but actually improves, for the amount of cane sugar, according to Mr. Cowgill, was considerably less when it was harvested. I consider this matter of immense importance, and I hope that a number will try the experiment next season in such a manner as to work up enough cane into sugar and sirup so that we can know just what to expect.

But the place where improvement is not only most needed, but where it is absolutely necessary to our future existence, is in the extraction of the sugar from the cane. Of 88 per cent. of juice contained in the cane, we obtained but 37 per cent. as an average for the season; five-eighths of the sugar and sirup remained in the bagasse. This is in strange contrast with the yield obtained from sugar-beets, where from 90 to 94 per cent. of the sugar is extracted. The very fact, however, that we are able to so nearly hold our own in spite of such waste is an argument in favor of sorghum cane as a sugar-yielding plant, and it shows what we may do when supplied with more suitable machinery. I consider the whole process of trying to press the juice out of the cane as radically wrong in principle, and any and all attempts to obtain a fair yield in this way have so far failed. The beet-sugar factories underwent the same experience half a century ago; their methods of extracting the juice from beets were very similar to that employed by us. Pressure was employed either in the shape of rolls or hydraulic presses. For many years after they were fairly started they failed to make sugar for less than 20 cents per pound; but, due chiefly to the introduction of the diffusion process, they are now able to drive all other sugars from the European markets. The fact that they are able to do this is not due to the superiority of the beet, but to the superior process employed by them. Sorghum cane can be raised and delivered for $1.50 per ton.

This is what we can contract with the farmers in our vicinity to raise and deliver it for. The only beet-sugar factory in the United States, at Alvarado, Colo., pays $4.53 per ton for beets delivered at their factory. Sorghum cane and beets contain about the same amount of sugar—about two hundred pounds per ton. At this rate the sorghum-sugar manufacturer pays three-fourths of a cent per pound for the sugar, while it costs the beet-sugar manufacturer 2½ cents per pound. But our present method of extracting the juice is so imperfect and crude that we lose the very large advantage which we have in the beginning. This much is certain, that it costs less to grow the sugar in the sorghum cane than in any other plant known, and if we can improve our methods of working to the same extent that they have done in the beet-sugar factories we shall be able to supply this country with a pure sugar at a cheaper rate than it can be bought in foreign countries.

It is conceded by all who have tried diffusion that it works perfectly on a small scale; the only difficulty apprehended is in the reduction of the cane to chips, but it does not seem probable that a mechanical difficulty of this kind will long remain unsolved.

The question is frequently asked, "To what extent may the industry be developed, or what portion of the sugar consumed in the United States will we be able to supply?" With a yield of only 37 per cent. of juice we obtained about fifty pounds of sugar per ton. By the aid of implemental crushers this yield can be increased by one-half, or a total of seventy-five pounds per ton. With a yield of ten tons of cane per acre we would have seven hundred and fifty pounds of sugar per acre. This is certainly an inside estimate when everything is worked as it should be, with the very best of our present appliances. Taking that as a basis it would take 3,000,000 acres of land to produce the crop necessary for supplying the entire United States with sugar. The amount of land is about one-third the cultivated area or two-thirds of the land planted in corn in the State of Kansas in 1884, and every State in the Union having a mean temperature no lower than that of Kansas would probably be equally well adapted to cane growing. In fact where corn will grow cane will grow, so that the question of a sufficient production will depend entirely on whether it will pay sufficiently well to command the capital necessary for its development.

Every million pounds of sugar produced will require an investment of at least $50,000; so that this industry would open a new field for the investment of $100,000,000, and would turn a large amount of our lands into the production of cane that now grow crops that are produced largely in excess of the demand. This industry would give employment to a vast number of workmen and call into existence new industries for manufacturing the necessary machinery and other supplies. The hundred millions that go abroad every year to buy foreign sugar would be kept at home and be distributed among our own workmen. The great value of the product per acre as compared with other crops ought especially to commend this industry. The same number of acres grown to cane would give employment and support to at least five times as many people as the same amount of land growing corn or wheat.

So far this work has been carried on at a loss to the manufacturers. This has been largely due to the fact that the decline in the price of sugar has just about kept pace with the progress we have been able to make.

The time has come when a change must be made in the manner of operating our works. We must be equipped with better appliances for extracting the sugar from the cane, and must enlarge our works so as to be able to handle our crop more economically. To accomplish this will require time and money. It means new and expensive machinery and costly experiments.

It is to help us over this crisis that we have asked the State of Kansas to give some aid in the shape of a bounty on the sugar produced. There are very few if any industries that can add so much to the material wealth of a State, giving employment as it does to almost every kind of labor. The farmers find a ready market for a crop that is not only sure but very profitable. A new field is open to our laborers and mechanics, and the best talent from our institutions of learning will here find a work that will be worthy of their closest study and tax their utmost skill. It has been urged that the bounty might in the space of five years which it will cover grow to an enormous tax on the State.

The total sugar production in the State for the past season did not exceed 600,000 pounds. It is safe to say that any notable increase in the number of our factories will not take place until by improved methods we shall be able to make sugar at a less cost. We may, however, look for an increased production of sugars in the factories now in operation. If by improving our method so that we can double our present yield we will have practically reached our present limit, for it will take years to improve the cane. But such a result can not be reached in one or two years. So that it is safe to assume that the average production for the next five years will not exceed 1,000,000 pounds per year. This would tax the State to the amount of $15,000 per year for the five years. Kansas pays $1,000,000 per annum as tariff on foreign sugars and at least $3,500,000 goes out of the State every year to pay for the sugar consumed in the State. With a fair prospect of not only retaining this large amount of money at home, but of making the production of sugar one of the chief industries and sugar one of the staple exports of the State, we sincerely hope that the Legislature may see fit to give us the aid we have asked. What would have been the outcome of the beet-sugar industry of Europe had it not been fostered and cared for by the governments during the early part of its existence?

There were many then that assumed the same attitude toward it that many now do toward the sorghum-sugar industry, claiming that it never could become a commercial success. Fortunately these predictions come from persons who know the least about the matter, and I doubt if there can be found one who has fairly and intelligently studied the matter who does not believe that the problem of supplying our own sugar has been practically solved. I believe the time is not far distant when by improved cane and processes 2,000 pounds of pure sugar will be obtained from an acre of Kansas cane. But to attain to such a result will require renewed efforts on our part and a little timely aid by our State.

If by any reasoning based on facts it can be shown that this industry can not become self-supporting, the State will lose nothing by its downfall. If, on the other hand, facts clearly show that it contains every element needful for success, and that wherever failure or but partial success has been the result it has been due to the causes and circumstances that time and experience will remove, then I claim that nothing more disastrous than the downfall of this new industry could befall the commercial interests of this State.

Mr. PLUMB. The amount of money which will be necessary for this purpose so far as now known is very small. Fifty thousand dollars a year is nothing. I look over the agricultural appropriation bill and I find that we are appropriating $110,000 a year for seeds. Every one knows that if it were not for the fact that these are distributed largely by Senators and Members in a manner which brings to them some degree of favor from those who receive them that provision would not be in the bill, at least to this extent.

No such amount of money can be appropriated in any one year usefully for the purpose of disseminating new varieties of seeds of different kinds. I find also that under the head of "Gardens and grounds" we appropriate $18,450 for the little experimental gardens we have here, which practically result in nothing except a few nosegays which from time to time we receive at the hands of the gentleman who manages the establishment. Under the head of "Entomological division," for the purpose of investigating bugs, we give $27,900, and that has just been increased $10,000 more. I notice in the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for this year that while he devotes a page and a half under the head of "Gardens and grounds," only seven lines are devoted to the sugar industry. This I do not speak of for the purpose of making a complaint, because I know that we shall find in due time, when the volume comes to be printed, that the chemist has been doing a valuable work, a work in which he has had the considerate support of his chief; but it only indicates that after all this industry has been under that kind of a ban, has been side-tracked, so to speak, in such a way that it gets only that which is left over; that it does not get the direct attention and the careful nursing and the thorough consideration which any industry with such great possibilities ought to have.

That is because Congress itself has not manifested an interest in it. The chief of the bureau can not do more than he is bid. He can not spend more money than we give him; but we have been so engrossed in other matters, we have been ourselves so affected by the comparative failures heretofore, we have been so content to let well enough alone, that we have not given to this subject the thought nor the appropriation nor the stimulus in any degree which its importance demands.

I hope, Mr. President, that at least this small sum of money may be given, and I shall hope that next year when the result of that will come to be presented to Congress, I shall have the satisfaction of saying that it has not only done a great deal of good, but that we are much further along in the experiment which in time, as I believe, is to put the American people in a condition to produce all the sugar they use.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations last year went quite fully into this subject and was a good deal impressed with the importance of this industry, and the sum of $50,000 was given in the bill of last year. The House this year has put the amount down to $20,000, and the Committee on Appropriations did not increase it because there was no pressure upon it in that direction.

I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas because the reasons which operated last year and controlled me then, in charge of the bill, are the same now. I only wish to ask the Senator from Kansas if he is entirely satisfied that the appropriation which was made last year has been devoted to such purposes as have stimulated this industry; and further, whether he is entirely confident if the increased amount which he asks shall be given it will be so devoted to practical experimentation or assistance that this growing industry in his State and elsewhere will receive a real benefit in proportion to the money which we give?

Mr. PLUMB. The money that was appropriated last year was not all spent, but it will be spent between now and the close of this fiscal year. Unfortunately the diffusion apparatus which was designed to be sent to the West was not completed in time to be sent there, but is under contract to go now, so as to be there for the coming season.

I know, however, that many of the persons employed by the Department for the purpose of investigating this subject in the various States have rendered most valuable service. The experiment which I spoke of as having been carried on in Kansas with such favorable results, that of covering the cane and determining by experiment the time in which the cane could remain covered so as to keep it in a condition for manufacture, was carried on by a very intelligent agent of the Department, Mr. Cowgill, and that has done as much as anything else to stimulate the hopes of persons engaged in the manufacture there that the coming year will enable them to do better than they have done this year.

But back of it all is this question of machinery. It has been demonstrated that not more than one-half the juice is taken from the cane by any present process in use, that is, any process in use now in this country. Something ought to be done, therefore, to devise ways and means whereby all the juice can be extracted. It is believed now that the process of diffusion, substantially as used in France and Germany for the extraction of saccharine from the beet, can be so modified and adapted as to do the same work for sorghum. A firm in Wilmington, Del., the Pusey & Jones Manufacturing Company, I believe, have manufactured an apparatus of that character which they believe, and which is believed by intelligent people who have inspected it, comes near at least to answering this purpose, but the actual fact can only be determined by experiment.

Mr. HALE. Is it expected that this appropriation, or some portion of it, will be devoted to the end of securing an advanced method of machinery as applied to the sorghum in extracting the juice?

Mr. PLUMB. That certainly is the expectation. The present Commissioner of Agriculture has stated to me that he designed, if this appropriation was made (and no doubt his successor would feel similarly minded), to erect a machine of that kind in Louisiana to be used there in connection with the manufacture of sugar by private apparatus, which would demonstrate, if demonstrate it can, the ability of that machine to meet this great lack.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I can give the Senator from Maine some information in respect to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. The Commissioner of Agriculture, with the appropriation that was made last year of $50,000, has done much by scientific experiments and investigations to aid the manufacture of sugar, and has had constructed in Wilmington, Del., a diffusion machine for manufacturing sugar from sorghum cane. It is of American manufacture, and the first of its kind I believe. It has not yet been tested, but will be in readiness for the crop this autumn. The Commissioner desires to contract for a diffusion machine adapted to the ribbon cane that is produced in Louisiana, which is harder and of a tougher texture than sorghum cane. The machine will require certain modifications to suit this cane.

This diffusion process was early applied both in France and Germany to the manufacture of beet sugar, and, I may say, it has reached perfection in those countries. Everything that chemical or mechanical science or governmental favor could do to facilitate and stimulate the production of sugar from the beet has been done. And by our laws all machinery for the manufacture of sugar from beets is admitted into our country free of duty, while machinery for the manufacture of sugar from cane is taxed at a very high rate—over 60 per cent. ad valorem, if I remember correctly.

It is true, as the Senator from Kansas says, that the producers of sugar in this country are greatly embarrassed. But this embarrassment is not owing so much to natural as to artificial causes. It is owing chiefly to governmental interference—to the Bismarckian policy of Germany. A drawback or bounty is allowed by the German Government upon every pound of sugar exported, equal to the cost of its production. This policy has increased vastly the production of sugar in Germany, has enabled the Germans to drive the French sugars out of the English markets, to overwhelm the English refiners, and to gain an undisputed supremacy not only in the English markets but in the sugar markets of the world.

The producers of sugar in all countries have been overwhelmed in a common ruin. The planters in the British possessions in the West Indies, British Guiana, and Honduras have petitioned Parliament for relief and set forth by grand committees their grievances and distresses. Cuba is bankrupt. The Spanish bondholders are also crying out for relief. The producers of sugar are seeking our markets as the only remedy. Sugar is cheaper relatively than any other article of food.

Mr. McPHERSON. How much is the German export bounty?

Mr. GIBSON. About the cost of production in Germany—about 2 cents a pound. This action of the German Government about two years ago created intense excitement and resentment among the sugar-refiners of England, and threatened to produce a reaction against the free-trade principles which have prevailed since the repeal of the corn laws, and led to a re-examination of the theories of the school of Cobden. The English refiners cried out for fair trade.

But Mr. Gladstone took ground against the refiners and insisted that if the German people were willing to tax themselves in order that sugar might be produced in Germany and be sold to the consumers in England below the cost of production, for less than it could be bought in the tropics and refined in England, the English people ought not to complain; they ought rather to rejoice at the cheapness of an article so necessary to their comfort and well-being. This answer might be made on behalf of the people of the United States. I represent a community which is suffering from the cause I have assigned, and not as many persons imagine because sugar can not be profitably cultivated in Louisiana. I do not ask for bounties or for an increase of the tariff to counteract the effects of the action of the German Government, though on principles of international equity this might be done.

We already have a fair tariff upon foreign sugars, and I know that governmental action is powerless to maintain prices or to override the laws of supply and demand. During the Robert J. Walker tariff, from 1846 to 1860, the sugar industry of Louisiana was rapidly developed, enjoyed its greatest prosperity, and supplied over one-half of all the sugar consumed in this country. But what is the condition of this trade today? Why, the supply from domestic sources is only about 10 per cent. of the consumption, and we import one hundred millions' worth of foreign sugars a year. Germany is selling sugar to-day in New York for less than it costs to produce it in Cuba and Louisiana.

If she gain a monopoly of our markets and destroy the sugar culture in the West Indies and Louisiana, our dependence will become as absolute as that of England for an article of food which our people can not do without. By derangement of our foreign relations, any accident, any disturbance of our relations with Spain or England or any European nation would place it out of our power to obtain supplies unless we had a navy sufficient to command the seas and keep open the markets of the world and the sources of supply. Under those circumstances I am rejoiced to hear the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] give such ample assurances based upon facts well authenticated of the capacity of his and the neighboring States to produce sugar from sorghum, and surely the sample he has presented to the Senate is fit for any table and any taste however fastidious. I believe, sir, that with improved methods of cultivation and manufacture the crop of Louisiana can easily be increased so as to supply again one-half of the sugar consumed in this country.

It is believed by those who have the matter in hand that the diffusion process when successfully applied will increase the yield fully 25 per cent. We already begin to perceive the ill effects of the bounty system in Germany on the Germans themselves, for overstimulation has led to bankruptcy, and I do not believe that a policy originating in resentment against France and that imposes such a tremendous burden upon the German people can long be maintained.

At all events, sir, I feel assured that every Senator will admit the expediency of bringing the aid of scientific experiment to enable us to produce sugar on a larger scale at fair profit and at lower rates for the people of our own country.

I find that for the purposes indicated the sum of $20,000 has already been appropriated by the bill. The Commissioner told me this morning he would require $50,000.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Kansas may be adopted. Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Louisiana please permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am addressing myself to the Senator from Louisiana. I wish to know whether I correctly understood the Senator. If I understood him aright, he said that the German Government offered an export bounty of 2 cents per pound upon sugar exported from Germany, and that 2 cents per pound given by way of export duty repaid the cost of production. In the Senator's opinion is it not reasonable to suppose that if Germany can raise sugar at 3 cents a pound the United States upon its virgin soil, inexhaustible as it is in fertility, can raise it for even a less price than 2 cents a pound? If that be so, is it not the duty of the Government of the United States in every way it possibly can to encourage the production of sugar in order that the product may be cheapened to our own people and in order that our agricultural interests may be increased?

Therefore, is it not wise, inasmuch as Germany and France, upon soils comparatively barren as compared with our own, can produce beet sugar at 2 cents a pound, that this appropriation should also cover machinery for the preparation of beet sugar as well as sorghum and cane sugar? In other words, if an experiment is to be made, had it not better be made in the direction of experiments heretofore made in other countries which have produced success? If they can raise beets in Germany or France from which sugar can be profitably made at 2 cents per pound, I am quite sure that with the same diligence on the part of our Government sugar may be raised and manufactured here from like products (as to other products I know nothing, but certainly from like products) at a price even less.

If the amendment of the Senator from Kansas does not cover the point I wish to make, which is that it may include machinery for the manufacture of sugar from all products, cane, sorghum, and beets, I should like to have it so amended.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. The language of the clause contains nothing whatever about machinery. That is left to the discretion of the administrator of this Department. How this money shall be applied to the encouragement and development of the cultivation of sugar from one vegetable product or another Congress has not sought to settle or decide, but the fund is given. I do not, as I said before, rise to object to the amendment. I am willing the appropriation should be made $50,000, but I should not like to see any particularization as to how the money should be spent by the Department. If it is to be spent in improving machinery and developing tests, let that be done by the Commissioner of Agriculture and not by us.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; but if I understood the Senator from Louisiana correctly his statement was that it is the purpose of the Commissioner of Agriculture to prepare machinery by which economy may be practiced in the manufacture of the cane sugar of Louisiana. I take it that no very large portion of this country can profitably cultivate the cane sugar that is cultivated in Louisiana. I also believe that sorghum may be cultivated in almost every State of the Union, and profitably. It is profitably cultivated to-day in New Jersey under a bounty offered by the Legislature of that State. New Jersey pays, I believe, 1 cent per pound upon all the sugar manufactured from sorghum grown in the State. It pays also $1 per ton upon all the sorghum cane grown in the State and manufactured into sugar. Under that bounty the sorghum industry has grown to quite large proportions, and it has forcibly demonstrated the fact that sorghum sugar can be cultivated and profitably cultivated in this country. Certainly upon the great Western plains and in the valley of the Mississippi, where the soil is rich and inexhaustible in its fertility, both sorghum and beet sugar can be grown and profitably grown, thus opening another wide field for agriculture.

Relying entirely upon the statement of the Senator from Louisiana that the purpose of this amendment is in order that machinery may be constructed or improved entirely and simply for the manufacture of cane sugar, I think it would be unwise to restrict it to that, if the amendment proposes to do so.

Mr. HALE. I misunderstood the Senator from Louisiana if he said that the object of this appropriation was exclusively what he referred to, in the direction of experimentation on the sugar-cane of Louisiana. It is only one of the things that the Commissioner of Agriculture will consider, and I do not think the Senator from Louisiana believes that the appropriation is for that purpose alone.

Mr. GIBSON. By no means. The presumption of the bill itself would exclude that idea, for it says in lines 93 and 94, "including experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and other vegetable plants," which would include beets.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understood the Senator from Louisiana, one at least of the objects of the amendment is to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to purchase machinery to experiment upon a new method of manufacturing sugar from cane. I am sorry that the Senator has left his seat, because I am anxious to know whether the policy is to be adopted whenever an industry may be depressed of having the Government of the United States purchase machinery for the purpose of experimenting upon new methods of manufacture. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks me why not? I should be glad to have him answer the question he asks. But if it is to apply to the manufacture of cane, why not apply it to all kinds of manufacture? For instance, when the woolen industry happens to be depressed, why should not the Government buy up machinery and establish a woolen manufactory for the purpose of experimenting upon some new methods of manufacturing woolen goods?

I do not mean to oppose the amendment, but I want to understand exactly what the gentlemen who are favoring it desire and intend by it. I want to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he thinks it is within the legitimate province of the Government to expend the public money in the purchase of machinery to promote an experiment on new methods of manufacture?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to make a speech, but it does strike me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to add $30,000 to this appropriation is a mere bagatelle at which the Senate should not hesitate an instant.

What are the facts in this case? All the industry that we have in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and beets has received whatever encouragement it has received at the hands of Congress through the Agricultural Department. Before appropriations were made to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to experiment with the different kinds of cane and the machinery and methods of extracting the saccharine matter from the cane, not a pound of sugar had ever been extracted from sorghum in the United States; but year after year Congress has made small appropriations and experiments have been made by that Department.

It has now an organized corps of able chemists and experimenters and machinists; it has a laboratory upon the grounds, and from time to time we have encouraged the Commissioner of Agriculture in his experiments. The information which he has collected has been disseminated among our people from one end of the country to the other. He first demonstrated that sugar could be extracted from sorghum, produced in almost every State of this Union, and that information has been sent out to our people until there is now a belief among the farmers of the West that with proper and improved machinery the day is just at hand when we shall manufacture from cane, sorghum, and beets every pound of sugar that the millions of people upon this continent will consume.

Why shall the Senate of the United States hesitate a moment upon an appropriation of $30,000 additional to continue these experiments which promise results so great, which will save us a hundred million dollars a year? I believe fully in it. We have now a beet-sugar manufactory in the State of California which promises immense results. We all know that the sugar-cane in Louisiana will never produce sugar enough for the consumption of our own people. Louisiana now furnishes but 8 per cent. of that which is consumed in this country. Nobody ever hesitates in protecting Louisiana sugar, because it is always an important question of revenue. Only $3,000,000 or $9,000,000 worth are manufactured there as compared to the hundred million dollars' worth that we import from abroad.

In order to still further encourage these experiments let us give the Commissioner of Agriculture $50,000 or $100,000, if he wants it, so that he may bring from abroad or have manufactured in our own country such machinery as science may indicate would be necessary to provide better methods of extracting the saccharine matter from the beet or the sugar-cane or from sorghum.

I see nothing wrong in this policy. I do not want to have the appropriation applied specifically to beets or to sugar-cane or to sorghum. Let it, as in the language of the bill, apply to sugar-producing "plants," including all, and leave it in the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture, for I have confidence in him.

The results heretofore have shown us that the policy is a wise one. Before this matter was intrusted to the Agricultural Department sorghum had been known only to produce a sour sort of molasses scarcely fit for the table, but under the investigations of science conducted by that Department better methods of extracting the juice have been discovered which have led to the manufacture to-day of the very best molasses and sirup extracted from sorghum found upon the tables of the best hotels and families in the whole United States. There is a sample of sugar extracted from sorghum upon the desk of my friend from Kansas which is as good as any sugar ever made from the beet on the face of the earth.

We have a country which produces to some extent sugar-cane, but we have a country which produces in a universal degree the sorghum; and in large sections of it we find lands proper for the production of beets. Let us give every encouragement in our power to develop the industry and furnish our own people all the sugar they want.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas, and I think the Committee on Appropriations would have reported the increased appropriation if it had been suggested to the committee from any source that it was necessary.

That is about all I wish to say upon this subject, except that last year we appropriated $50,000 for this purpose, a very small portion of which has yet been expended, and it can not very well be profitably expended until during a portion of the next fiscal year, as these experiments of course can only be made during the summer and fall season. But I am in favor, and I think the Committee on Appropriations are in favor, of liberal appropriations for the purpose of making these experiments with sorghum.

With respect to the experiments proposed as to the production of sugar from cane, I did not suppose, and do not now suppose, that any considerable portion of this money will be expended for that purpose. The success of this experiment I think will prove that in the end we can profitably manufacture sugar from sorghum, and I hope it will so prove, in order that we may in our own country manufacture sugar from these plants.

Mr. INGALLS. Succulent roots?

Mr. ALLISON. That we may manufacture sugar from succulent roots, as my friend on my right suggests, by which of course he means the production of sugar from beets. I trust that we may be able to produce our own sugar, and in that way save the large sums that we annually expend in foreign countries for this purpose, amounting on the average to $100,000,000 per annum, of which about $48,000,000 is paid in the shape of duties upon foreign imports.

Mr. HALE. Everybody seems to be in favor of the amendment. I hope we shall have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the heading in line 96, after "seed," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" and in line 97, after the word "seed," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" so as to read:

SEED DIVISION.

For compensation of chief of seed division, $1,800; one superintendent of seed-room, $1,600; four clerks at $1,000 each; one clerk, at $840; for the purchase and propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of putting up the same, to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000; in all, $108,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 106, to insert:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all plants, seeds, trees, cuttings, vines, and shrubs shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents; and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, from whom purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, plants, cuttings, and vines: But provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the heading in line 132, before the word "of," to strike out "bureau" and insert "division;" before the word "thousand," in line 144, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred;" and before the word "thousand," in line 145, to strike out "nine" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

DIVISION OF AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

For compensation of one statistician, $2,500; two clerks of class 4, $3,600; three clerks of class 3, $4,800; four clerks of class 2, $5,600; five clerks of class 1, $6,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each; four clerks, at $840 each; two clerks, at $720 each; for collecting foreign and domestic agricultural statistics, and compiling, writing, and illustrating matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $100,000; in all, $134,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 149, after the word "annex," to strike out "six thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

FURNITURE, CASES, AND REPAIRS.

For repairing buildings, heating apparatus, furniture, carpeting, matting, water and gas pipes, and other necessary articles, and painting Department building and annex, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 169, to increase the appropriation "to establish and maintain quarantine stations, and to provide proper shelter for and care of neat cattle imported, at such ports as may be deemed necessary," from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "contingent expenses," before the word "traveling," in line 196, to insert the word "actual," so as to make the clause read:

For stationery, freight, express charges, fuel, lights, subsistence and care of horses, repairs of harness, paper, twine, and gum for folding-room, and for miscellaneous items, namely, for advertising, telegraphing, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, purchasing supplies, and necessary items, including actual traveling expenses while on the business of the Department, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "hereafter," to strike out "to be;" so as to read:

That no part of the money herein or hereafter appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person, as additional salary or compensation, receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employee of the Government, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have one amendment to offer on page 7. At the end of line 145, I move to insert the following limitation:

Provided, That all illustrations for the Agricultural Department shall be made by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The committee has nothing further.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 70) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 441) for the completion of a public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8138, being the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BAYARD. That, I presume, will be done with the understanding that it does not displace the trade-dollar bill.

Mr. BECK. That was displaced before.

Mr. BAYARD. I meant to say that the present motion should not further postpone the silver bill, which was taken up by a vote this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that by the action of the Senate this morning the silver bill has gone back to its place on the Calendar. There was a motion to proceed to its consideration, which was determined in the affirmative, immediately after which a motion to proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill was made and adopted; which returned the silver bill to its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. I was constrained to say what I did in the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who may be considered in charge of the silver measure, which I rank among the measures of chief importance at the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that under the ruling of the President pro tempore of the Senate, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate at this time the only remaining special order, after which the Senator's motion will be in order. The Secretary will read the title of Order of Business 113, Senate bill 60.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 60) to declare certain lands subject to taxation."

Mr. PLUMB. Now I renew the motion which I made before.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that, in order to avoid displacing the special order, my colleague ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the special order be informally laid aside.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I move to take up House bill 8138 at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jessie V. Harold;

An act (S. 150) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley;

An act (S. 1416) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Hackett;

An act (S. 1546) granting a pension to Orin R. McDaniel;

An act (S. 2231) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate A. Drummond;

An act (S. 2398) granting a pension to Cyrus Reeser; and Joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government at Wilmington, N. C.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 441) for the completion of a public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WIDOW OF MAJ. THOMAS T. THORNBURGH.

The bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that that bill be placed on the Calendar. The Senate Committee on Pensions has reported a bill in the same case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 194) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1321) for the erection of a public building at Reading, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 1618) to provide for the construction of a court-house and post-office at Clarksburg, W. Va.; and

A bill (H. R. 4067) to change the limit of appropriations for the public building at Louisville, Ky.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Kansas asks the consent of the Senate that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 1, line 28, to reduce the item of appropriation "for compensation to clerks in post-offices" from $5,300,000 to $5,150,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to this amendment. I have not before me at this moment the estimates. There is a deficiency bill appropriating $75,000 for compensation to clerks in post-offices for the current year. I have been informed, and I believe that the Postmaster-General in estimating for the compensation to clerks for the coming fiscal year estimates what he really wanted and did not overestimate with the expectation of having a discount made, but believed that the public service required actually the full amount he asked for. I ask for information as to whether the appropriation as the committee would have it is up to the estimate.

Mr. PLUMB. The appropriation as made by the House was exactly the estimate, $5,300,000. The Senate Committee on Appropriations believed that that might be, and ought to be, reduced. I do not mean by that that the Postmaster-General had not some warrant for his estimate, but the estimate is not by any means conclusive and has never been so regarded. Last year the appropriation was $4,900,000 and that led to a deficiency of $75,000. Four million nine hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, therefore, was the full measure of the expense and the necessary expense for that service last year. The committee did not think that it was proper to add to that amount $325,000. That was a larger increase than had been made in any year heretofore, and we believe it was in excess of the needs of the Department, which would be of course in excess of those of last year, but there is manifestly some error in the distribution of this money, and we think that a little pressure on the Department would correct these errors and that the addition of the amount we allow will amply provide for this service.

Mr. HAWLEY. I concur with the Senator in believing that there has been some error of judgment in the distribution of this money. I am satisfied that there has been a lack of sufficient funds. I have had occasion several times within a year or two to beg for additional clerical force under circumstances where I knew it was absolutely required, and in one case where I knew that the postmaster himself sacrificed a portion of his revenue that the public work might be done. I will instance the post-office in my own town of Hartford. The net profits to the Government of the United States of the post-office in the town of Hartford were $90,000 last year, and the postmaster paid a portion of his salary of $3,000 towards additional clerk-hire in one case, and he is begging that there be another clerk allowed him. One clerk at $1,200 a year is allowed him now.

This increase is not according to the increase of the population of the United States, which is in the neighborhood of 3 per cent. per year. If the appropriation for this kind of service should increase 1 or 2 per cent. a year, I should not be at all surprised. It would be in accordance with the natural growth of the business of the country, the establishment of new post-offices and the natural increase of the business at the old offices. I shall vote against any reduction of the Postmaster-General's estimate in this respect, for I should like once to see enough appropriated to do the business of the Government decently.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee certainly believe we have given enough for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am afraid the committee is wrong.

I ask the sense of the Senate on this amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and hope the Senate shall disagree to it, for I sincerely believe that the Postmaster-General did not overestimate the necessities of the Department. Every year we have been obliged to appropriate for a deficiency. The estimate in this case was $5,325,000.

The House struck off $25,000. The Senate committee, on general principles, struck off $150,000 more. I do not care how strictly the Department shall be held to account in this matter, but I should like to have it once able to say in response to an urgent demand for a little more help that it had the money but did not think the thing ought to be done, and not be obliged to say, as it does for the last six months of every year, "We know you need it, but we have not the money."

I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Connecticut made one mistake. He stated that the Department's estimate was $5,325,000, and that the House had cut it down $25,000. That is an error. The estimate was $5,300,000, exactly what the House appropriated. The Senator made another mistake, and that was that the Senate committee had cut it down on general principles. I think that would be in a great many cases ample justification for reducing the appropriations called for by estimates, because in a great many cases estimates are made very much larger than are necessary for carrying on the service; and I do not speak of the Post-Office service particularly; but in all branches of the service the Departments estimate for more than they expect Congress will give them or than they deem absolutely necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator pardon me a word?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator can take it for what it is worth, but the Postmaster-General assured me that he told Congress the truth in this case, that he wanted and believed he absolutely needed $5,300,000. Whether they all say that or not I do not know. I have known Departments to say that, in order to meet a cutting down which committees would inevitably make in order to show economy, they sometimes overestimated. In this case the Postmaster-General declared that he did not—and I believe him—overestimate a dollar.

Mr. PLUMB. I was coming to that. I was proceeding to say that I think it safe, as a general rule, to cut down the estimates, which are generally from 25 to 50 per cent. more than is appropriated, and I think the Government has been able to get along fairly with the moneys appropriated. While I am about it I will say that I believe if the expenses of this Government were reduced several millions it would be a better machine than it is now; but in regard to this particular item it is not safe to disregard the expenditures heretofore made. Last year we added $125,000 to the amount appropriated for the year before. That was not enough, but it was all that the Department estimated for. That is to say, the House last year, in the bill which came over, gave precisely the amount that had been appropriated the year before, the Senate added enough to put it up to the estimate, $125,000 additional, and that was appropriated, and the result was a deficiency of $75,000. In other words, if we had appropriated last year $4,975,000 we should have had enough for the service. Now this year the House, repenting of its contracted views of the year before apparently, went to the other extreme and gave an addition of $400,000 beyond the amount appropriated the year before.

Mr. HAWLEY. Remember that it is really only $325,000 more, because they put $75,000 into the deficiency bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I will stick to my statement. It is exactly true. They appropriated $400,000 more than was appropriated the year before. That is what I said, and I repeat it. Now, the Senate Committee on Appropriations did not think that $400,000 more than the appropriation of last year, being $325,000 more than the actual and necessary expenses of the year, was needed. They believed that amount might be contracted. This is to be considered, that if you appropriate $10,000,000 it will be spent; if you appropriate $6,000,000 it will be spent. Any sum you appropriate will be spent; and the only control Congress has over this matter at all is in the making of the appropriations, because there is not and can not be in the nature of things any special designation by law of the sum of money to be received by a particular postmaster or at a particular post-office for clerk-hire. It must be left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

The committee believe—not on general principles, but after investigation—that there are many post-offices which are getting too much; that there is a discrimination in favor of certain post-offices which if remedied would reduce the expenditure for this purpose very largely.

The Senator speaks of the poor, pitiful pittance of $1,200 for a clerk at Hartford. There is not a clerk in a post-office in the State of Kansas that gets $1,200; there are not, probably, half a dozen who get $1,000. There is no complaint at all from Hartford by comparison with the complaint that legitimately exists in the Western country.

Our complaint, however, is not so much that Congress does not give enough money as that it is not properly distributed. Of the $125,000 we added last year to what was appropriated the year before the Postmaster-General gave $76,000 to four or five large offices, and offices at places where clerks now are getting salaries that more than double the salaries in any place west of the Mississippi River. We believe that extravagances of that kind are not necessarily put upon this appropriation, and that if we would have a proper distribution and an economical distribution of this fund the only way to do it is to put the amount as small as we think the Department can properly get along with. If we are to add $150,000 on the theory that it can be spent and that every demand which is to come in for clerk-hire is to be satisfied, then of course we must keep adding and adding and adding every year, because there will never be any cessation of demand. The committee believed that the amount appropriated by their amendment would be sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Senator from Kansas has made a charge against the Post-Office Department of the improper distribution of this fund. I am not able to say about that, but I know that in the State which I in part represent there is great complaint that there have not been clerks enough in the post-offices. There has been no complaint about the salaries that I know of, although the salaries are very small; but in that part of our country in our post-offices we have not had a sufficient number of clerks to properly perform the service, and that is a matter of public notoriety in that State. I do not know whose fault it is, but to be on the safe side I shall vote with the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations?

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 36, section 1, to reduce the appropriation "for payment to letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system" from $4,535,000 to $4,485,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 49 of section 1, after the word "that," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to read:

For rent, light, and fuel, $490,000. That the Postmaster-General may lease premises for use for post-offices of the first and second classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding five years; and whenever any building or part of a building under lease becomes unfit for use as a post-office, no rent shall be paid until the same shall be put in a satisfactory condition by the owner thereof for occupation as a post-office, or the lease may be canceled, at the option of the Postmaster-General; and a lease shall cease and terminate whenever a post-office can be moved into a Government building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 60, section 1, before the word "office," to insert "safes and other;" and in the same line, after the word "furniture," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For safes and other office furniture, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 68 of section 1, to increase the appropriation "for transportation on railroad routes" from $14,010,000 to $14,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Before the next amendment, beginning on line 106 and extending to line 138, is read, I desire to ask Senators to listen to the reading of it carefully. I speak of it now before it is read so that they may listen to it to prevent its being read two or three times, as it may have to be unless attention is called to it now. That provision was stricken out by the committee in obedience to what we understand to be the rule of the Senate and the requirement of the Senate. The committee obeyed what they understood to be the desire of the Senate and its rule, and have reported accordingly; but a number of members of the committee—I will not say all—desire to retain this provision and as individual members of the Senate expect to vote against the amendment that they have reported in obedience to what they understand to be the rule of the Senate. I mention that now so that the matter may be understood. It is the clause reducing the rate of newspaper postage and increasing the weight of a letter at the single rate from half an ounce to an ounce. That is stricken out pro forma, and I call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that the committee have stricken out the lines indicated in obedience to a rule of the Senate?

Mr. BECK. We so understand. It is legislation, and we can not insert any legislation ourselves, and so we feel instructed to strike out what is positive legislation inserted by the House, and submit the question to the Senate whether they will have it in the bill or not.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understood the Senator to say that it was stricken out in obedience to a rule of the Senate. I know of no rule which requires a committee of the Senate to strike out any matter put into a bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps I have not been felicitous in the form of my expression, but we have been instructed that legislation should not go upon appropriation bills until we have felt constrained to present the question to the Senate, reserving our own individual right as Senators to vote as we please. We know that if the clause is stricken out here it can be inserted in a conference committee and will be inserted by the conference committee if the House conferees can convince the Senate conferees that the legislation is good. For myself, believing this to be good legislation, I reserved the right to vote for it here, and so did other members of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, which has not been read. The part of the bill proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 106 of section 1, it is proposed to strike out:

That upon all matter of the first class, as defined by chapter 180 of the laws of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," and by that act declared subject to postage at the rate of 2 cents for each half-ounce or fraction thereof, postage shall be charged, on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof; and drop-letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established. That all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereof, or to other news agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1885, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound or a fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law: Provided, however, That publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of 1 cent for each four ounces or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto; and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter, are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885. Any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I trust that this amendment will not be agreed to. The clause proposed to be stricken out contains several separate provisions, as will be seen. The first and most important one is that which increases the weight of letters allowed by law from a half-ounce to an ounce, leaving the rate of postage the same upon the full ounce as it heretofore has been upon the half-ounce. I trust that that will become a law. I presume before taking the question upon agreeing to this amendment it will be in order to perfect the clause by moving amendments to it. I desire to strike out several lines in this section before the vote is taken on striking out the whole clause. The proviso in line 129 is:

Provided, however, That publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of 1 cent for each four ounces or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto.

I desire to strike out those words for the express purpose of having only one rate of postage on second-class matter. I believe that to be in the interest of the public, and certainly it is in the interest of an economical management of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York repeat what he proposes to strike out?

Mr. HALE. What I am trying to find out is what the Senator is seeking to reach. Does he seek to leave the lines 129, 130, 131, and part of 133 in the bill as the House has left them, thereby exempting them from the striking-out process of the Committee on Appropriations as reported?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee except as to those lines and one or two others which I shall indicate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator desires to leave in those lines?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to leave those lines out of the bill; I desire the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee to strike out all the lines which have been read. That will restore them to the bill. Then, I desire to have these few lines stricken out. The Senator from Kansas suggests that it would be better to act on these important questions separately, taking one step at a time; for instance, act separately on the first part, which increases the weight of letters from a half-ounce to an ounce; but I do not see how parliamentarily we are to do that.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the things I want to find out. Here are several propositions sent us by the House in this bill, and the Committee on Appropriations strikes a line through all of them. They are separate and distinct, raising different kinds of questions. Now, in what way can the Senate, hampered as it is by its rule, modify this clause so that it may strike out a portion and leave the rest remaining in the bill?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Allow me to suggest—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may be allowed to suggest that the Chair sees no reason why the question may not be divided so far as different parts of the clause refer to different and distinct objects.

Mr. HALE. Can we take a distinct vote on each proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sees no reason why it may not be done.

Mr. HALE. That would reach it, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are here six different substantive propositions that have no necessary connection with each other. I ask for a division of the question upon each of these. The first will extend down to line 117; that is the one which increases the maximum weight, allowed for a letter paying single postage, from a half-ounce to an ounce. Then the next is down to line 121, relating to drop-letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio proposes that the first question shall be on striking out down to line 117, ending with the word "thereof."

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Would it be in order to vote now to disagree—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will please suspend a single moment. The Chair desires to understand from the Senator from Ohio at what line he begins the striking out of the first proposition he asks for a division upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a separate vote upon the proposition to strike out from line 106, beginning "that upon all matter of the first class," down to and including "ounce or fraction thereof," on line 117.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The entire amendment of the committee down to the word "thereof," in line 117?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. I ask for a separate vote on that question.

Mr. BECK. I desire to know why the proposition made by the Senator from New York is not perfectly in order. We now have the text of the House bill before us. The proposition of the committee is to strike it out. Pending that motion of the Senate committee to strike out the paragraph, the Senator from New York seeks to amend it by striking out from line 129 to the word "thereto," in line 132, in order to perfect the text of the House bill before the motion to strike out is considered. Why is not that perfectly in order now?

Mr. SHERMAN. When we reach that point in the paragraph, as a matter of course that will be proper enough; but as I have asked for a separate vote on each different proposition, the first question will be on striking out the part I have already indicated.

Mr. BECK. So that this will amount to the same thing. The Senator from New York will still have his right when we reach that part?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly when we reach that; I agree with him there.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division of the question is on the first branch of the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Let us have that read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the first branch of the amendment on which the vote is to be taken separately.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following words, beginning in line 106 and ending with the word "thereof," in line 117:

That upon all matter of the first class, as defined by chapter 180 of the laws of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled, "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," and by that act declared subject to postage at the rate of 2 cents for each half-ounce or fraction thereof, postage shall be charged, on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out these words.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, or whoever has charge of the bill, how these various provisions are to affect the postal revenues? Before I vote I want to know something about the effect of the proposed legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state the conclusion of the committee on that point. The first provision is not estimated to affect the revenues at all. That increases the weight which may be sent at 2 cents from a half-ounce to an ounce. It is believed that will not diminish the revenues, and possibly may even increase them, because certain matter which now goes as printed matter unsealed by reason of the fact that it weighs more than half an ounce will be sent sealed, and therefore more matter will be sent sealed because it can go with more security and will be more attractive to the person receiving it—that is, he will be more likely to read it if it comes sealed at 2 cents postage.

The next item, proposing a reduction on second-class matter, will nominally reduce the revenue of the Government a million dollars, the gross amount received from that service now being about $2,000,000. There has been a suggestion that to some extent that will be compensated for by reason of the fact that more of this class of matter will go by mail than now, a considerable portion now going by express, and to that extent some portion of the deficiency of a million dollars will be made up; but that of course is speculation.

The third clause, commencing with line 129, if adopted, would undoubtedly increase the revenue somewhat. That matter now—sample copies of second-class publications—goes at the pound rate.

Under the law of 1879, being the Post-Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1880, publications of the second class were entitled to be transmitted through the mails at 2 cents a pound, the postage being prepaid. That included sample copies. By this provision sample copies are required to pay a cent for four ounces, which is 4 cents a pound—double the rate now charged.

Mr. BECK. I wish to state with regard to the provision relative to sample copies that unless I change my mind on the argument of the Senator from New York I am disposed to adhere to the provisions of the House bill. It is said that these so-called sample copies are used for many other purposes than as sample copies; that the lotteries use them to a great extent, the patent-medicine people, and everybody who wants to get his advertisements in at the pound rate, and they are generally not legitimate newspapers nor used by newspaper publishers. They are being sent all over the country at the low rate, not as legitimate publications for use but as advertisements for private speculation. If that is cut off by increasing the rate from 2 cents per pound to 4 cents as this proposes, and the express companies lose a portion of their business, as they will by the lower rate on second-class matter, instead of losing a million the loss will be less than half a million, and perhaps a good deal less even than that. But the sample business has been abused enormously, according to the information we have had.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The discussion seems to be going on upon the whole subject rather than upon the point made by the Senator from Ohio in regard to my proposition to strike out from line 129 to and including line 138. Under this provision all regular publications of the country will be compelled to pay two rates of postage upon the same matter, one rate to their regular subscribers, 1 cent per pound, and upon all sample copies which are sent out by all weekly publications, particularly at the close and the beginning of the year, in large numbers, they will be compelled if this provision is left in to pay postage at the rate of 4 cents per pound.

I do not care to argue the question as to what the rate ought to be, whether it shall be 1 cent or 4 cents, or any other sum; but the ground I take is that there should be one rate of postage for the same class of matter, whether it is going to a regular and permanent subscriber who gets his paper or his magazine by the year, or whether it is sent out as a sample copy for the purpose of inducing subscriptions. I do not believe it wise to make any such distinction.

Now as to the objection raised by the Senator from Kentucky, that if this provision be stricken out it will allow all sorts of matter to go through the mails as second-class, including advertisements, I have only to say that under the present regulations of the Post-Office Department no publication is permitted to be taken in the mails as second-class matter unless it is shown to the Post-Office Department that it is a regular publication; that it is issued regularly weekly, monthly, or quarterly. The publisher must give sufficient and proper evidence to the Post-Office Department to allow it to be mailed as second-class matter.

Undoubtedly under the law as it now stands, and under the law as it will stand if this provision is stricken out, many journals which are called trade journals will circulate large numbers, not only to regular subscribers, but to persons engaged in the trade which the particular journal represents. Those journals contain a great deal of advertising matter, but I imagine that one of the chief duties of the Post-Office Department is to carry advertisements for the commercial community. All of our daily papers, all of our weekly and semi-weekly journals, and all of our quarterlies and magazines contain large numbers of pages of advertisements, and they are carried at these regular rates.

It certainly is a very great convenience to the business community, to all commercial men, and I can imagine no rule which should be applied to the Post-Office Department that will make two rates of postage upon identically the same class of matter. That is what this proposes to do. Therefore, after that section of the amendment designated by the Senator from Ohio has been voted upon, I shall, in some parliamentary way, ask that the remainder of the amendment be disagreed to, with the exception which I have named; and if that is done, then there will be the one rate of postage on all second-class matter, whether it goes to an individual subscriber or whether it is sent out as a sample copy for the purpose of soliciting other subscribers.

I believe it to be unwise to make so many different rates of postage. I venture the assertion that there is not a Senator on this floor to-day who can sit down and write out the different rates of postage which are imposed by the United States laws, not even the members of the Post-Office Committee. I served upon that committee for two years, and I am very sure I could not tell the rates of postage on many kinds of matter without looking at the Post-Office regulations. We ought to have one rate on letters (2 cents), no matter whether the weight is half an ounce or an ounce. Let us have one rate on all publications.

Mr. PLUMB. In striking out this legislation from line 106 to line 151, inclusive, the committee acted more upon the idea of striking out legislation than of furnishing information as to its own opinion as to the character of the legislation proposed. I think I may safely say that with reference to the first two provisions, the committee as individuals were all of them in favor of them—that is to say, they believed the propositions were wise. I have been running back over the appropriation bills for a number of years, and I find that all the amendments to the rates of postage for the last twenty years have been made in appropriation bills. I find also that in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1880 there are twenty-two sections of general legislation regulating the classification of mail matter, and that is the law as it stands to-day except as it was modified in an appropriation bill two years ago when letter postage was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents. If, therefore, the Senate shall see fit to disagree to the proposition of the committee so far as it relates to the first two subjects down to and including line 128, certainly the committee itself will have no occasion for any feeling at being overruled. In regard to other matters something will remain to be said when they shall be reached.

Mr. SHERMAN. I find that members of the Committee on Appropriations who propose to strike out this clause, substantially agree with me, and other Senators who have spoken think that on the whole, although this legislation is in a bad place, it is legislation that probably is justified by public opinion and by good reason. I therefore feel disposed to gratify them by refusing to vote for their amendment. I presume that is what they want us to do, and I am rather inclined to oblige them in that particular.

Mr. President, the first clause of this provision of the bill I think is a very good one, because we know that by the custom of using envelopes, especially envelopes of a large and official character, many letters are of a weight that just goes beyond the half-ounce, and sometimes they are sent without being weighed, as most persons send them, not having the means of weighing them, and they are detained because of an insufficiency of postage.

Then again, we know—every Senator I presume has had that experience, I have had it—that we have been called upon every month for little contributions to the Post-Office Department to pay the deficiency of postage on letters sent to us from our constituents. I presume all Senators have had the same kind of bills presented to them that I have had. It is rather inconvenient to pay for letters that we do not care about receiving, especially when the bills for postage come in monthly installments in this way. The people really have not the means of telling whether a letter weighs half an ounce or a little more, and it creates embarrassment without any use.

I do not believe that the adoption of the provision will in any way lessen the revenue of the Government, but it may make simplicity, and probably to that extent it will do good, and therefore I am in favor of it. In respect to drop-letters, that is clearly a provision in the right direction. Under the present postal law the Government charges the same postage for a letter dropped in the town in which I live to go to my neighbor a few squares off that it does to carry a letter across to California. It seems to me that it is an unwise and unjust provision to require two cents postage on a drop-letter.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not changed by this provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought it was.

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be. I see, beginning in line 119, the provision:

And 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the law now.

Mr. SHERMAN. In that particular Senators think I am mistaken. If so, it ought to be changed.

Mr. PLUMB. The only effect of the clause on that point is to accommodate that to the rate established by the preceding paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. To the extent it goes it is very well; but I should like to go further. I see no reason why this charge should be made of 2 cents for a drop-letter, while only 2 cents is charged for a letter across the continent; and therefore in this particular I should be very glad if we had the power under our rules to change that, and make that rate 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Now in regard to the third clause of this paragraph, the reduction of the rate of postage on publications, reducing it one-half, in my judgment that will tend to throw into the mails a great mass of matter that is now carried by express, and therefore it will tend to swell the mails and tend to make good any deficiency that may occur by the reduction of the rate. Then, besides, the rate of transportation now on all mail matter, especially by railroads, is greatly less than it was when the present scale of postage was adopted. It was adopted a number of years ago, and I have no doubt the rate of transportation of all matter over railroads throughout the country has decreased since the passage of the existing law as much as it is proposed to reduce the rate of postage now upon these publications, and it seems to me, therefore, that if the rate prescribed by the existing law was right when it was fixed, this rate would conform to the proper standard now. So it seems to me there is no objection to that provision which reduces the rate one-half.

Then besides the increase of the number of publications the very great increase, I believe said to be threefold what it used to be, will probably tend still further to make good any deficiency that may be caused by this provision.

Now in respect to the proviso I never could see any reason why a discrimination should be made against a publisher sending a single copy of his paper to a particular person. It is no doubt intended by the man who is the publisher as an advertisement, to advertise his paper; but if it tends to induce a subscriber to take the paper we are reimbursed; and to the extent that the number of papers carried in the mails is increased by this provision it will tend to increase the revenues of the Government. If a newspaper by this means gets a new subscriber, we also get some benefit from that new subscription by an increased revenue. So I can see no objection to that.

I do see objection decidedly to the provision made in lines 129, 130, and 131, which discriminates between papers sent as samples and papers sent to subscribers. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] gives the only reason I know of, that the motive in the one case is that the publisher may gain a new subscriber, but I do not think we have any—thing to do with the motive that induces a man to write a letter or send a paper.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio did not quite catch the objection I had to the provision as to sample copies, which was that a sample copy was not used legitimately for that purpose, but was marked as a sample copy when nine-tenths of it was an advertisement of a lottery or an advertisement of a patent medicine, and not sent out with a view of getting subscribers, but as a cheap mode of advertising a lottery or a patent medicine, and sent all over the country at lower rates than the Government could afford to carry it—not to aid a newspaper but to aid a private individual in making sale of his goods or getting his lottery tickets sold.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we should discriminate and make different rates of postage according to the character of the communications sent, we should be involved in a labyrinth. We have no right to inquire into the motive of the man sending a paper or the motive of a lottery dealer sending an advertisement. We ought not to charge any more for carrying a lottery advertisement than an advertisement of a sermon or any other good production. We might exclude such things on the ground that they tend to immorality, but we must not make a distinction in the rates.

As a matter of course we ought to make love-letters from young men to young women free. That would be right, and I should be glad to do it, but we can not very well discriminate in their favor. We might make a thousand discriminations for good reasons, but we can not do it; and therefore I think this proviso ought to be stricken out. The same rate should be applied to all newspapers or matters of that kind. With that exception I am prepared to overrule, no doubt to their satisfaction, the Committee on Appropriations, even if it does not exactly conform to our rule, and keep the provision in.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations examined these provisions with some care, as I have examined them. If they were here as a separate measure from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I should be glad to give most of them my assent. I think the latter clause is utterly unnecessary, because I believe it is practically the law now. But we are endeavoring to establish a rule here with reference to legislation on appropriation bills, and I think the honorable Senator from Ohio has been disposed to be quite as vigilant in that regard as the rest of us. Now, if we agree to this legislation upon this bill, I do not see but that we place ourselves in the attitude hereafter of legislating on appropriation bills whenever we think the legislation is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend from Iowa upon what ground, if that was the view to be taken in all cases, did the committee allow that important legislation on page 3 to be left which authorizes the Postmaster-General to rent premises for the use of post-offices?

Mr. ALLISON. We did not regard that as legislation in any sense. The Postmaster-General now leases a building for a post-office for ten years. It is not worth while for me to say on the authority of the Committee on Appropriations, but it is the judgment of the committee that the provision here on that subject is not in the nature of legislation.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question if he will yield to me.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. After the concession that he and I and all of us make on this floor that this is good legislation and that if it were in a separate bill we would support it, how are we going to get the House conferees to yield it in the face of such confessions as we are making? Is it not better to meet it here than to meet it there, when we know we shall have to yield it, and our own record will convict us if we insist on resisting it.

Mr. ALLISON. My answer to the Senator from Kentucky is the usual answer with a conference committee, "Sufficient unto the day." When we meet the conferees of the House, if the Senate shall conclude that this provision should go out, we shall meet those gentlemen the best way we can. We have met them upon other propositions in a similar way, and the House has receded from its propositions from time to time at other sessions of Congress.

Mr. President, we have a Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads whose duty and business it is to propose changes in our postal laws in the first instance where they are needed, and make such recommendations to the Senate. We are now within twelve days of the close of this Congress, and so far as I have any information this Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads up to this hour have not given us any advice upon this subject. They have presented no bill to the Senate which we could vote and act upon on this matter.

It seems to me that if we are to have any rule at all with regard to legislation upon appropriation bills, here is a good place to show our virtue with respect to it, because if we place upon these bills legislation where we are in favor of such legislation, very soon we shall be confronted with the idea that most of the legislation in this Senate as well as elsewhere will be in the first instance presented by the Committee on Appropriations.

For one I do not desire to argue this question, but only to say that if this Senate desires that the Committee on Appropriations shall take into its control and under its direction all the legislation or practically all the important legislation from session to session let it say so by its vote, and the committee will do the best they can with these subjects; but in the nature of things we can not consider these legislative provisions with the care and scrutiny that a committee charged with the particular subject can do, having leisure and time and opportunity for investigation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he understands the rule of the Senate to make it incumbent upon the Appropriations Committee to strike out from the House bill this legislation put there by the House? My understanding of our rule is that we can not amend it, but I do not know that there is any obligation on the Committee on Appropriations to strike out legislation put on by the House which the committee itself deems important legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Committee on Appropriations can not strike out this legislation; it can only be done by a vote of the Senate. All the Committee on Appropriations can do is to make its recommendation.

Mr. DAWES. I have been an interested observer of this discussion this afternoon. If there is anything to me which is interesting it is to have some gauge by which I can determine what is the wish of the Senate touching its own rules and its own methods of legislation.

The Committee on Appropriations seem to be the subject of a good deal of discussion from time to time. The Senate will not forget the manner in which they were instructed long before the appropriation bills reached this body. They were told in plain English that they were doing what the Senate has been insisting upon doing itself now that the Committee on Appropriations have determined that they will not do it. I stood up here two days within a week resisting the insertion of independent legislation in an appropriation bill, which legislation itself met my hearty approval. I was compelled to do so by the rules of the Senate and by my own record for consistency, and by a belief that in the end it was wise and would produce the best and healthiest legislation to adhere to the rule that cut out by the vitals most important legislation from an appropriation bill.

The Senate followed the Appropriations Committee in that respect, although I had reason to believe from the sentiment about the Senate that they agreed with me that in the abstract that was excellent legislation; yet in the concrete it was wise to adhere to the rule of the Senate. If now after that appropriation bill has been treated by the Senate under the wisdom and requirement of its rules and stripped of everything but naked appropriations, as it ought to have been, the Senate turns around to-day and forgetful of the rule and looking only at the character of the legislation itself, shall vote to keep it in, I do not know why I should not consider that as instruction to a conference committee to recede altogether. Let the Senate determine what will be its course and make that its rule, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I give you my word, will hold the Committee on Appropriations to the rule.

Mr. President, it is pretty hard to be called upon to vote against this measure in an appropriation bill; and if it were in a bill by itself I would not vote against it on any account; but I will vote to strike it out of this appropriation bill, because our rules require that appropriation bills shall be free and stripped of independent legislation; and if I do not vote to strike this out, I have no answer to make for the course I pursued here a few days ago. And those who know that heretofore I had advocated strongly legislation which crept into an appropriation bill, and know that two or three days ago I urged the Senate to strike it out, can well call upon me to explain whether I am honest in this position or not.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand from the Senator and every member of the committee who has expressed himself on this subject, they believe that this legislation is right and proper separate from an appropriation bill, and the only reason why they are not for keeping it here is because of the rule. Now I should like to ask the Senator whether he has any idea that if it is not kept in, this good legislation that we are talking about will be had at all during this session of Congress?

Mr. DAWES. On whom will the responsibility rest if there is no such legislation? There is time enough to-day for the Post-Office Committees of the two branches to awake from their lethargy. There is time enough for the Senate, independent of its Post-Office Committee, to rally to its own duty. It is not necessary for the Senate to save itself through its Appropriations Committee and by violation of its rules. If the Senate or any other branch of this Government has got apprehensive within ten days of the end of the session that it has slept too long, and that its salvation lies only in a violation of all parliamentary law by its Committee on Appropriations, let it settle that with its constituents. I say that I have been ready and I have been anxious that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads should not lag behind and only wake up when they see an opportunity to turn over into somebody else's bill that which the rules of the Senate and some other branch of this Government require that they should do.

Am I called upon to abandon all the rules of the Senate and of other parliamentary bodies because everybody else in the Senate has got to that pitch that you can put a pertinent question to me that this is the only way—

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will allow me to suggest that he will only be following the rules of the Senate as adopted, as I understand, for the last twenty years, because during that time there has been no important legislation in reference to post-office matters that has not been incorporated upon appropriation bills.

Mr. DAWES. Not by the Senate. The Senate had a rule till within six or eight years allowing this very thing to be done, and they found it worked so that they made a rule that they would do so no longer; and the moment they made that rule some other branch of this Government turned around and made a rule that they would do that very thing which they had never done before. The Senate and some other branch of this Government have changed sides in this matter. It is but a few years ago that this could not be done anywhere but in the Senate; and now it can not be done in the Senate and must be done somewhere else, and all the evils pertaining to it are crowding upon our attention every moment. Why do not our friends, so anxious to wake up in the last days of the session, propose to amend the rules so that they can do it according to the rules, or make a rule that they can suspend the rules?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to ask the Senator a question. He talks about the rules of the Senate preventing this legislation. I have no knowledge of any rule of the Senate that prevents this body from acting upon general legislation fixed in an appropriation bill by the House of Representatives. If he does, I should like to know what it is. Why this harangue about the Post-Office Committee and the other committee being called upon to wake up and do their duty, on the ground that there is no power in this body under its rules to act on general legislation in an appropriation bill when placed there by the House of Representatives? I do not understand that there is any such rule. I hold that in adopting this legislation we are not violating the rules of the Senate at all. The only rule, as I understand it, is that we can not of our own original action put it in.

I understood the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the committee had stricken out of this bill everything which was general legislation. I desire to ask the chairman and also the Senator from Massachusetts what sort of legislation is found in this clause, beginning on line 80:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than two hundred miles distance from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service.

Is not that new legislation and general legislation?

Mr. PLUMB. According to the instruction the committee have had on this question, that is not general legislation. That is only a direction in regard to the manner in which a particular item of appropriation made for this fiscal year may be spent, and is not a continuous direction at all. Therefore is not general legislation. Its purpose and function is continuous only during the coming fiscal year, and it is not, as I think, obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am very glad to have the opinion of the Appropriations Committee on this most important subject, and I hope that the presiding officer of the Senate will concur in the interpretation which they have given to this legislation, because if that is to hold then we can turn over any amount of the money which is appropriated for inland service to the carrying of our foreign mails; we can begin to encourage the establishment of steamship lines to the South American and Mexican ports and to any other foreign ports; and we shall be able under that decision, if it holds, to put any amendment on this bill to that effect that a majority of the Senate may desire to do. I agree fully with the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. I only want to put this on the proper ground. It is not an invention of anybody, certainly not of the committee. The committee only accept the rule as given to them by the presiding officer of the body. That we understand to have been the ruling in a number of cases, and especially in one which was raised on the Army appropriation bill two years ago, the presiding officer then holding that any direction in regard to the expenditure of the money appropriated by the bill which did not continue longer than the appropriation itself continued, and which was for a service authorized by law, was not general legislation, and was competent.

Mr. HILL. I wish to say, Mr. President, in regard to the reflection of the Senator from Massachusetts upon the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that there is no foundation in fact for the statement which has been made. That committee has disposed of every bill of any importance that has been before it one way or another, I believe. It has acted upon several of the measures which are proposed in this bill. It has voted in some cases not to report bills embodying the same features. We have repeatedly passed bills in this body and sent them to the other House which they have made part of an appropriation bill. That the Post-Office Committee of the Senate has no control over, but I think the Post-Office Committee has done its duty fully in regard to every measure that has been before it.

Mr. CONGER. If, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, we have any rule which prevents a vote on these propositions and prevents their being considered by the Senate, the President of the Senate should have applied that rule and ruled them out without the report of the committee at all. If it is subject to the action of the committee, and they may report to have the legislation stricken out and the Senate may vote to strike it out or to keep it, we violate no rule in keeping it in or in striking it out. It must be so.

Now, sir, we find in the bill coming from the House this legislation, which even the committee that moves to strike it out (not being required to do it by any rule of the Senate, except by the general feeling of the Senate that legislation is bad on an appropriation bill) concedes to be good. We have no rule by which the President of the Senate can on a point of order refuse to permit it to remain in the bill. We have no rule which requires the Committee on Appropriations to strike it out or to move to strike it out, or to report to the Senate that it should be stricken out. There is nothing to regulate their conduct either way except the general feeling which the Senate may have against legislation in appropriation bills.

When the Committee on Appropriations report any amendment to this or any other bill, if they have done it in the discharge of their duty, and the Senate may vote upon it, then they are free from any rule except their own judgment. So I feel free when such a proposition is made to vote for retaining the legislation which the House put in, or to vote to strike it out. I know of no rule that can control me in that. I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we are compelled by some rule to vote contrary to our own judgment when the matter is properly before the Senate and not subject to be ruled out on a point of order.

That is my view of the condition of this question. I am in favor of these propositions which are by the division of the question to be voted upon separately—every one of them. I shall vote in favor, in whatever form the question comes, of retaining them as a part of the bill. I have received petitions, as every Senator has, not only from the publishers of papers in my own State, but from other States all over the country, asking this kind of legislation; and when I have in the strict performance of my duty, and violating no rule of the Senate, the opportunity to vote as my constituents desire me to do, I shall vote that way. I am not to be deterred from expressing my judgment on the propriety of legislation when it is in a bill and can not be ruled out on a point of order; when it is in a bill, and is submitted to me to say whether I approve of that legislation, I am not to be prevented by a mere sentiment that the Senate does not desire to have upon appropriation bills any legislation from giving my vote, if I am free to vote as I choose under the rules, in favor of the legislation, and to keep it in the bill.

Sir, I believe this legislation that is proposed to be stricken out is all good, unless it be the proviso that has been referred to. I am in favor of increasing the weight of the letter under the same postage; especially I am in favor of decreasing the postage on second-class mail matter. I have received from my State scores and scores of letters requesting me as their representative to use my best influence and my votes in favor of that measure. If the rules of the Senate forbid me voting upon that proposition at all, if they forbid me expressing my preference, I am bound by the rules. I regret it, but I shall be bound by them if that is the necessity of the case. But when I am free to say yea or nay on keeping in or striking out legislation which the President of the Senate can not rule out on a point of order, and upon which I am to express my sentiments, I will vote as my judgment and the wishes and interests of my constituents require me to do.

Now one word in regard to the parliamentary situation of these propositions. I understand that while the President of the Senate was not occupying the chair it was proposed to divide these different propositions and vote upon them separately. The motion made by the Senator from New York in regard to one of them was to strike out of this section one of these propositions before we vote upon it all.

In my judgment the motion to strike that out is one way of leaving it in, to be adopted contrary perhaps to what the Senator desires. It seems to me, and I ask therefore the opinion of the President whether the question put in a proper parliamentary way would not be on these several clauses, Will the Senate concur in the recommendation of the committee as to striking out this paragraph? If the Senate non-concurs, that remains then as part of the bill, and so of each of the others.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator will understand me. As I understand the situation by unanimous consent we agreed to do just that thing, to take a vote on each proposition separately.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, but that does not touch the point I am speaking of. We agreed to vote on each of these propositions separately; but if there be a motion to strike out of the section one proposition and it is voted to strike out of the section that one and the others are not stricken out, then only those that are not stricken out can be subject to a motion to agree or disagree. I think that the proper way, and I wish the Chair would state that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Although the question is not now presented for action, the Chair has no hesitation in saying that as these phrases are in the body of the bill and the Committee on Appropriations have reported an amendment to strike them all out, so far as they are susceptible of division the question may be taken piecemeal, so to speak, on the separate divisions that are capable of being made. If the Senate refuses to strike them out, they stand as part of the bill and will be before the Senate accordingly. Whatever the Senate does strike out as in Committee of the Whole will have then been stricken out, and the question will be, when the bill is reported to the Senate, on agreeing to the action of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole striking out such and such parts of the text of the bill. It is in these respects exactly like any other bill.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, Mr. President, but there seems to be a motion to strike out upon a motion to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Michigan will allow me to say that the occupant of the Chair at the time the question was raised ruled that the amendment reported by the committee was susceptible of division, and that the question could be taken and should be taken, if demanded by any Senator, upon each substantive and distinct proposition contained in the amendment. That was the ruling of the Chair, and the ruling went no further.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that to be the ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the ruling the present occupant of the Chair would have made.

Mr. CONGER. There is pending a motion to strike out one of these propositions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is pending a recommendation of the committee to strike them all out. The question on striking them all out has been divided under the rules of the Senate so as to take the question on the particular, separate, and independent parts of the propositions proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair does not quite understand me. The recommendation of the committee, and therefore the question to be acted on, is the striking out of the whole. The motion of the Senator from New York is to amend that recommendation by striking out a part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand any such motion to have been made. The Senator from New York simply demanded a division of the question on striking all out.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair probably did not understand. The motion was to strike out one clause—

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Michigan will again allow me a single word, the Senator from New York indicated his disposition to make the motion that the Senator from Michigan refers to, when the Chair suggested to him that the question was divisible so far as the amendment reported by the committee contained distinct and substantive propositions, and the then occupant of the chair understood the Senator from New York to acquiesce in that suggestion, and the Senator from Ohio demanded a vote upon each substantive provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair could not have entertained a motion, in the present state of the bill, to strike out a part of that which the committee recommend the striking out of, because that would be a repetition in substance of precisely the same thing. Therefore the matter stands on the recommendation of the committee to strike all out and the demand by the Senator from New York that the question be divided.

Mr. CONGER. That report was made subsequently. Now, may I ask this question: On each of these propositions those who desire it to stand in the bill will vote against striking out, as I understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so supposes.

Mr. CONGER. That is all I wish to get at, because the other motion would have made it difficult to tell what the result would be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to understand this subject a little better than I do. It strikes me that it is bad policy usually to ingraft general legislation or permanent laws upon an appropriation bill, and we have a rule of the Senate on that subject which governs us and can not govern the House. I do not think it is competent for us to offer amendments to a House bill which embrace permanent legislation upon an appropriation bill.

But if the House, which is independent as we are, sends us an appropriation bill with general legislation pertinent to the subject, germane to it, I do not think it is in violation of our rule for us to vote for that legislation just as it comes from the House. Our rules govern us, but they do not govern the House. Nothing but a joint rule of the two Houses is obligatory on both; and when general legislation comes from the House upon an appropriation bill, which is proper and right and germane to the subject of the bill, I intend to vote for it, feeling that I have not violated any rule of the Senate.

I can not see for my life why we are bound to object to the legislation that comes from the House even if that legislation is ingrafted upon an appropriation bill, for there are exceptions even to the general rule of its being bad policy to put general legislation on appropriation bills. A vast amount of the most important legislation of this country has been upon such bills; and when an appropriation bill comes with proper legislation, germane to the subject for which the appropriation is made, I am prepared to vote for it, our rules to the contrary notwithstanding. They bind us but do not bind the House. Nothing but a joint rule can bind both.

LAND TITLES IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HILL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to be allowed to offer a resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to be allowed to offer a resolution at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the portion of the resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish to the Senate copies of the reports of F. D. Hobbs and A. R. Green, &c., which passed the Senate February 4, 1885, embracing the following words, "and also copies of all papers on file in the Interior Department relating to this subject," is hereby rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this resolution being now received?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it go over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the reception of the resolution. It can not be received.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I do not object to its reception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being received? The Chair hears none. Objection is made to its present consideration. It will be printed and go over.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me one word of explanation? It is a matter of some importance that the resolution should be adopted at once to save expense. I am informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that a compliance with the resolution of the 4th instant will involve the necessity of copying 1,500 pages of papers which I do not deem material, and to save that expense this resolution is offered.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It appears very probable that the Senate is about to reverse itself on the question of adopting general legislation on appropriation bills. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of this bill, or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, whether the committee have given sufficient attention and consideration to the clause which proposes to raise the weight of letters to one ounce to be able to state whether a loss to the revenue derived from letters will be incurred or not?

Mr. PLUMB. We had before us the Postmaster-General and we gave this subject all the consideration we had within the limited time allowed us and arrived at the conclusion, which I stated some time ago to the Senate, that there will be no loss of revenue by reason of the adoption of that provision.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I understand the Senator, then, to state—

Mr. PLUMB. No appreciable loss; probably none at all.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I understood the Senator, then, to state that the expert officers of the Post-Office Department, the Postmaster-General, and the committee are of opinion that there will be no substantial loss in the revenue derived from letter postage by the adoption of this clause. I desire to have that assurance before voting upon this matter. There seems to be a disposition now to retain this legislation in this bill.

A few days ago the Senate could not bear the proposition to do justice to a few obscure individuals for whose benefit there were certain provisions in the Indian appropriation bill; but the case now seems to be very different. Other parties are interested in these provisions who are of higher and greater consideration, and I suppose that the rule will be abandoned in this case. It looks like it. To be consistent I should not object, because the other day I contended very strenuously that certain just and equitable and proper legislation should be retained in an appropriation bill. But it is a little interesting to see the performances of the Senate on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is on the first branch of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, proposing to strike out the words from line 106 to and including the word "thereof," in line 117.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not sure that I understand the purpose of this discussion. I thought we were about to say what we liked in this proposed legislation, and then to raise the point of order upon it and strike it all out; and that the Committee on Appropriations would meet the House conferees with the point of order striking it all out, but nevertheless would have the opinion of the Senate as to such legislation as it might yield to. I shall not give up the point of order against legislation.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. What is the point of order? I think the Senator has entirely misconceived the object of this debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator please explain to me whether we are to raise the point of order on this legislation and strike it all out?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not understand that there is any point of order that lies against it. It is impossible to raise any point of order. We must decide by a vote affirmatively or negatively whether this shall stay in or go out. In other words, we are to vote now whether to concur in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking this out. If we disagree, this provision remains in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see what the Senator is aiming at, but the Committee on Appropriations very properly brings in a bill with blacklines drawn across certain portions of it because it is obnoxious to the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill. I shall raise the point of order if nobody else does that this is a change of existing law, and that these paragraphs have no right here under the rule of the Senate. At the same time I am perfectly willing to express my opinion on these different points made here, because I know very well what the result will be, that in cases like this, where the Appropriations Committee and the Senate really believe in the justice of certain legislation, they will not precipitate an extra session on the country for the sake of adherence to our rules. That is just all there is of it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator under what rule he can raise any point of order against this?

Mr. HAWLEY. That it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any Senate rule on that point? The rule is only as to amendments moved in the Senate, not as to a bill that comes from the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. For what reason, then, does the Appropriations Committee report this bill with certain clauses in it marked out that they believe in and would like to have go into the statutes if it were not for the objection to legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CONGER. Because there is a kind of sentiment in the Senate that we are trying to govern the House in accordance with Senate rules, which we have never been able to do yet.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have sufficiently made my point, and now I will express my opinion on these different propositions. I would have confined it to the proposition which the Senator from Ohio desired to, have first acted upon except for the fact that everybody talking on this subject has talked on the whole matter. I like that. I like the second except the words in lines 123 and 124, which qualify the reduction of postage on newspapers. It reads now:

That all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereof.

I do not like the words "bona fide subscribers," for the reason that I fear they will compel publishers to assort their mails in different bags and different lots. A considerable percentage of the mail sent out from every newspaper office is composed of papers sent to exchanges. I think it possible that under this clause it might be required of the publishers to make separate bags of the papers sent to the exchanges, but if it should be held that the paper sent to a neighboring publisher with whom you exchange is one which is paid for by his paper to you, then that might be considered as a bona fide subscription. But I would just as lief strike that out and make certain of that construction. I should like to know what the Senator from Kansas thinks of that point.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say, in the first place, that I hope the Senate will, in justice to itself and in justice to the committee, vote its own sentiments on this bill, and not leave to the Committee on Appropriations or the committee of conference to be held on this bill in all probability the determination of this question. It is not fair to the committee and it is not fair to the Senate that the committee of conference should have the responsibility thrust upon it of saying there shall be an extra session or we will yield to various influences that may be brought to bear upon us by the House conferees in regard to the merits of this proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to ask the Senator from Kansas how much general legislation have we put on appropriation bills this year?

Mr. PLUMB. Practically none.

Mr. HOAR. Have we not left some?

Mr. PLUMB. We have left one lonesome, solitary provision on the pension appropriation bill, which is the only one I know of of any moment. That was about the presumption of soundness at the time of enlistment.

Mr. HOAR. We legislated last year in that bill about the fees of attorneys.

Mr. PLUMB. That was stricken off this year's bill and that bill is in conference.

Mr. HOAR. I am very desirous for one to vote for the provision reducing the postage on newspapers, and I do not want to be put in the position of opposing that if the Senate is going to leave on these bills other legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly the Senate itself had better exercise the discretion of what shall go on the bill than a committee of conference. If there is an overwhelming desire here to put it on, they ought to put it on; or if they do not have it on, let them say they will proceed in the exhibition of this Roman virtue even to standing to the extent of having it an instruction to the committee of conference that they are to resist even at the cost of an extra session of Congress if necessary. The reports of conference committees will come into the Senate when the Senate will not have a quorum probably; it will never be fuller than it is now, and the vote of a handful of the Senate, even if the question were submitted by a conference committee, will not amount to that expression on the part of the Senate which it ought to have on a question which has been the subject of so much discussion and so much decision on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. On the third page of this bill there is a change of the law in regard to leasing premises for post-offices.

Mr. PLUMB. That might be called legislation by some, and there is a good deal of doubt in regard to it, but the Postmaster-General is doing that thing now, and we only regulate the manner in which he shall exercise the discretion he is now exercising.

Mr. FRYE. That is, you make that law which hitherto was not law.

Mr. PLUMB. No, I am not certain that it is not law now; but at the same time there is no law that directs him to attach certain conditions to these leases, which we here provide that he may. The merit or demerit of that proposition is not in the fact that he may make leases for five years, because he makes them for ten, but it is in the fact that we provide that a certain equipment shall be put into the particular buildings he leases and that he was not in a condition perhaps to insist upon before.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see any prospect of finishing this bill to-night. ["Oh, yes!"]

Several SENATORS. We are ready to vote.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan make that motion?

Mr. CONGER. If Senators do not expect to finish the bill to-night, it is important that we should have an executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not make that motion until we get through with this amendment. It has been thoroughly discussed and we are ready to vote.

Mr. CONGER. Just about the time we are ready to go into executive session Senators will have gone. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 13, noes 33.

Mr. CONGER. I think it so important that I shall call for the yeas and nays unless there is some understanding that after disposing of this amendment we shall have an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us have it after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CONGER. With the understanding that at half past 5, as some Senator suggests, I shall move to go into executive session, I shall not press the motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first branch of the amendment, to strike out from line 106 to 117.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care anything now about the division, finding from the debate that there is a general concurrence in the whole of this clause except the proviso. It will properly expedite matters if I withdraw my demand for a division. ["No!" "No!"] Very well, let us vote separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out from the words "that upon," in line 106, to the word, "thereof," in line 117.

Mr. VAN WYCK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the vote we are now about to take is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. Is that the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is right, but the question has been divided. The first vote is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the committee from line 106 to line 117?

Mr. WILLIAMS. On that point I wish to state the principle which will govern my vote. The House has sent up a bill which proposes to reduce the postage on all second-class matter. I believe that the Senate is really in favor of that, but it is said we have a rule of the Senate that interferes with our agreeing to the bill of the House. I have been here nearly six years, and I have never known the Senate to have any rule except the rule of courtesy, that rule which governs gentlemen in their intercourse with each other, and I want it distinctly understood that I shall vote against the amendment of our own committee based upon the alleged rule, because they keep the postage as high as it is, and I am in favor of a lower postage.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire simply to say that while I am in favor of the proposition contained in the bill I shall vote against it because I do not believe in legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the question now is on the recommendation of the committee to strike out from line 106 down to line

117—in other words, to strike out the provision which increases the weight of letters to an ounce instead of a half ounce. ["That is it."] I hope and trust the Senate will vote down the proposed amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, and not strike out this legitimate and proper legislation upon this bill, and for the striking out of which there is no rule of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not know whether this proposed legislation is good or bad. There are two sides to that. As I am charged the next ten days with executing the rules of the Senate I wish to recall to the attention of the Senate the fact that, on two or three recent occasions in respect of important and apparently necessary legislation on appropriation bills, the Senate has held, in harmony with its own rules in respect of its own bills, that it would not accede to legislation proposed by the House on an appropriation bill that was purely legislation, as everybody agrees that this is, and upon the broad ground that I need not restate, for we all understand it now.

I should be glad, as one Senator, to have the Senate preserve a reasonable degree of consistency, and not refuse to amend the pension laws, for instance, the other day where on a former appropriation bill a gross error to say the least of it had been committed, and then on a Post-Office appropriation bill to reverse its action and decide that, because it liked that legislation a little better than it did the other, it would allow it to stay on. We ought to be consistent, and we ought, therefore, to be just, because justice and consistency usually go together.

If the Senate has not courage enough to adhere to one principle, then we ought to know it long enough in advance, so that it may become in every case a question of whether the Senate likes the legislation on an appropriation bill or not. If it thinks it is good legislation, and is, therefore, willing to have it on an appropriation bill, it ought to apply universally and fairly, so that on the legislative and executive and judicial appropriation bill the Committee on the Judiciary can report many amendments that they have presented in the form of separate bills, necessary to the good order and administration of justice as the country goes on, and yet we do not do it for that reason.

Now, why can we not be consistent and either repeal our rules and our practice altogether and say that we will put on to every appropriation bill everything that we think is good and strike off, as we do on all other bills, everything that we think is bad; or adhere consistently to the idea that a general appropriation bill for carrying out the existing laws of the Government and carrying on its operations shall be that thing and nothing more.

I only recall this matter to the attention of the Senate in order that if possible we may preserve our consistency for at least a week at a time.

Mr. BECK. While the Senator from Vermont is on the floor I desire to suggest to him the same difficulty that I did to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I shall be very glad to hear how we can get out of this difficulty.

I shall be one of the conferees, perhaps, on this bill—I may be at least, having been on the subcommittee in charge of it. I am looking to that possibility. The President of the Senate knows that the House has a right to insert anything that it chooses. It has inserted this. We can not strike it out so as to keep it out. It will come before us again in conference.

Most of the members of the Committee on Appropriations have already confessed that it is legislation which they would be willing to vote for as a separate measure. That is part of the record. That the House knows. That the House conferees understand. Then, with that admission staring us in the face, when we meet in conference, knowing it is good legislation, and admitting that it is, how can we refuse to pass necessary appropriations for the Government and force an extra session, which nearly all of us deplore, by standing up to a rule that we can not control, because we can not prevent the House from inserting legislation there, nor can we prevent their conferees from adhering to it after we admit that the legislation is good? That is the difficulty I have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That to my unsophisticated mind is no difficulty at all practically. I was once a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I do not know but that I should have been there since, but for the fact that at that time the river and harbor bills went to the Committee on Appropriations, and I committed the gross sin of being opposed to a certain appropriation in it, and I discovered the next Congress that I was no longer a member of the Committee on Appropriations. But on other bills than those for rivers and harbors the Committee on Appropriations then found when the Senate was unwilling to put on an appropriation bill any piece of legislation, either because it thought it was not good, or because it thought that it was better to have it in a separate bill even if good, and the Senate conferees said to the House conferees, "You have a right to put all your bills into an appropriation bill if you want to; we have nothing to do with your rules; you are an absolutely independent body of us; we have no right to criticize your rules—they belong to yourselves—any more than Her Majesty's Government of Great Britain has any right to criticize our rules about the public lands, or anything else; it is none of our business; we are equally independent," and when we told the House conferees, "The Senate is of opinion that this sort of thing ought not to be on this bill" for either reason, because it was not good of itself as far as we could see, or because we did not wish to have it in an appropriation bill, good or bad, and said to them, "If you wish to take the responsibility of saying that you will not have any appropriations at all to carry on the Government under existing laws, because the Senate is unwilling to agree to something additional that you believe in and we do not—for whatever reason; you take your responsibility; it is your right," they never took it and they never will, because they are patriotic and upright and independent as we are, and they know that they stand in exactly the same attitude that we would stand if our rules authorized us to put separate and independent legislation on an appropriation bill and the House rules did not, and we sent over an amendment of our own and said to the House of Representatives, "We will not have any appropriations unless you will agree to this legislation; your conferees admit that it is probably good legislation, but you will not have it on this bill; if you will not, then we will not have any appropriations at all."

We have always thought that such a position was totally untenable, as it is, and it never was maintained. So that there is no practical difficulty about it at all. If the Senate of the United States is really sincere in saying that it will not put on appropriation bills general legislation that changes permanently the permanent laws of the United States, but will keep them free, so that they can be sent to the President of the United States for his approval of the items within the laws, and not embarrass him by a thousand questions that may be presented if you present one, then there is no difficulty in carrying on your Government without the slightest trouble or friction even between the two Houses of Congress. They are equally independent, and I repeat, if the Senate is sincere in believing that it is vicious to legislate on appropriation bills, and will not give way to the temptation, when something that appears to be good is presented, of agreeing to it, and then stultifying itself, there is no difficulty at all in having an appropriation bill go through in due time and in good order.

The only trouble is that two years have gone by since this Congress assembled, and these various matters of useful legislation that are germane to every appropriation bill, or some one of those bills have not been brought forward as separate measures and brought to their passage, and when we run down to the end of the session and appropriation bills come in then, as they always do at that time, then we are tempted to say, "why here is something good that is germane to this one; let us put it on; and here is something that a majority of us think is good, let us put that on," so as to vitiate the security and safety of legislation that we all, I believe, agree in the Senate ought to be had in respect of keeping bills entirely separate from each other, and having appropriation bills what they purport to be, bills providing for the payment of money out of the Treasury to carry on the regular objects of the various Departments of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired upon this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired on questions generally with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. Understanding that he would vote against this amendment I feel privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is called out from the Senate for a couple of hours, and I think he understands I am paired with him.

Mr. MAXEY. My colleague [Mr. COKE] would vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. FRYE. I think he understands that I am paired with him, and therefore I refrain from voting.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

The result was announced—YEAS 18, NAYS 33; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. Now I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 26.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw their several motions for a little while so that we may go on for a time with this bill. We can have no legislation to-morrow, and it seems to me we ought to finish this bill, or very nearly so, to-night.

Mr. CONGER. I can not state the reasons why we should go into executive session for a few moments to-night, because the rules forbid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order on either motion. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion to adjourn?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the motion to go into executive session shall be withdrawn I am willing to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to go into executive session the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. And also on the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion? If not, the question is, Will the Senate adjourn?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The roll will be called.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Unless the motion to go into executive session can be withdrawn, I shall renew my motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I thought the first name had been called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There had been no response. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The result was announced—yeas 12; nays 38; as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator will allow me to make a motion as to the order of business. I move that when—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir, I do not withdraw it.

Mr. SHERMAN. For a moment.

Mr. CONGER. For what purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 1 o'clock to-morrow in order to have as much of the day as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 1 o'clock in the afternoon to-morrow. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senate will not adjourn until we dispose of these amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please resume their seats and cease conversation. If the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his motion for a moment the Chair will receive a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

[A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.]

Mr. CONGER. Has intervening business occurred so that I may renew the motion to go into executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. S. LINDSAY, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know what is meant by an entry in the Journal which says that a certain statement in the RECORD shall be made to conform to a statement in the Journal. As I understood the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] it was to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed not to consider the pension bill (S. 2511), and there was nothing said about having the bill withdrawn from the House Calendar. And I understand that it so appeared in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the Journal to which reference has been made; the Journal of the previous day's proceedings has been sent for.

The Chair understands the House by a yea-and-nay vote refused to consider a bill which came from the Senate and that it went to the House Calendar. Afterward the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House had refused to consider the bill and it so stands.

Mr. STEELE. But that does not take the bill from the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is now on the House Calendar, and will remain there unless the vote of the House is reconsidered.

Mr. HORR. I wish to say to the Chair that the House did not by any vote refer the bill to the House Calendar. It was sent there by the Chair. The vote was on the question whether the House would consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan claim that the bill was on the Speaker's table?

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; it was reported by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

Mr. HORR. The bill having been reported, a motion was made by myself raising the question of consideration. That question was decided in my favor by the House on a yea-and-nay vote; whereupon the Chair sent the bill to the Calendar. There was no motion made about it. It went there by direction of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Of course a report from a committee, unless some other disposition be made of it, goes to one of the Calendars under the rules of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to say a word about this matter, which is of some importance. The point I make with reference to it is this: that there was no motion, as appears on the Journal, entered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the House Calendar. No such motion was made. But that gentleman did enter a motion, and the RECORD of yesterday morning shows it, that the House should reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the bill when it was reported. It was a privileged report. The Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay was authorized by order of the House to report that bill back at any time, which made it privileged, and privileged for consideration. But the House refused to consider it, and the gentleman from Kentucky entered a motion late in the evening to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the bill. I ask, in order that we may get into no confusion hereafter about this matter, that the Clerk shall read exactly what took place and I am authorized to say that the reporter's notes agree with the RECORD and show exactly what did take place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call on the Clerk to read what the Journal shows upon this subject, because that is the question now under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHN H. ROGERS, as a privileged question, under authority to report at any time thereon, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, to which was referred the bill of the Senate No. 2511, relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report in writing thereon.

Mr. KEIFER made the point of order that the said bill, under clause 3 of Rule XXIII, must receive its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore overruled the said point of order; that it did not appear that any provision in the said bill either appropriated money out of the Treasury or required such appropriation to be hereafter made; and when

Mr. HORR raised the question of consideration; and the same being put, namely, Will the House now consider the said bill? When the yeas and nays were demanded thereon and the same were refused.

Mr. WILLIAM H. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused; which motion was agreed to.

The question recurring on ordering the yeas and nays, and being put, the same were ordered. The question being again put, to wit, Will the House now consider the said bill? It was decided in the negative—yeas 116, nays 136, not voting 72.

So the House refused to consider the said bill at the present time.

Ordered, That the said bill and report be referred to the House Calendar and printed.

Mr. KEIFER. There has never been any controversy about that part of it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Later in the Journal of that day a further entry appears, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMPSON, as a privileged question, entered a motion to reconsider the votes by which the House refused to consider the bill of the Senate No. 2511, relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases, and referred the same to the House Calendar; which said motion was passed for the present.

Mr. HORR. That last part did not occur here.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the portion of the RECORD which contains the proceedings as they occurred, in exact accordance with the reporter's notes and with the recollection of gentlemen all around me, shall be read in order to show what did actually take place.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the portion of the RECORD indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn, pending which the gentleman from Kentucky states that he rises to a question of the highest privilege, which he will state.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to enter a motion to reconsider a vote taken to-day, which is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the motion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider Senate bill No. 2511.

Mr. KEIFER. That would not avail anything if it was done now.

Mr. THOMPSON. I enter the motion, at any rate.

Mr. KEIFER. A motion to reconsider would not bring it up for consideration this evening.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. KEIFER. It would not bring it up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is hardly called upon to decide what would be the effect of the motion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I enter the motion to reconsider the vote on the bill the number of which I have stated. I refer to the bill of the Senate in relation to claim agents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and will state that if this is done I will move an adjournment before 11 o'clock.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, that includes everything that took place, and you will notice from what was said on each side that there was nothing, and could have been nothing said that related to a reconsideration of the vote, or of the order of the Speaker, by which the bill was referred to the House Calendar. We had some controversy as to what would be the effect of a reconsideration of the vote by which the House had refused to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the latter part of the entry upon the Journal really amounts to nothing, because the House had not, by any vote, sent the bill to the House Calendar; and that the parliamentary effect of the motion is simply to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. With that we are satisfied.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But, Mr. Speaker, I ask where does that leave the bill?

Mr. THOMPSON (to Mr. WARNER, of Ohio). That question will come up later. When the question of reconsideration is passed upon, if the House reconsiders the vote, then the whole case will be laid before the Speaker as to the condition of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply gives his interpretation as to the parliamentary effect of the motion made yesterday afternoon.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But I wish to say that my understanding of the motion to reconsider as entered by the gentleman from Kentucky corresponds exactly with the Journal, and it was talked of before the entry was made.

The SPEAKER. Still there was no motion referring the bill to the House Calendar.

Mr. HORR. It could not have occurred.

Mr. VALENTINE. No such words were spoken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to approving the Journal? If not, it will be approved as read.

Mr. KEIFER. Before passing from this matter, pardon me a minute. What I object to is not the Journal of this morning but the RECORD of this morning, which undertakes to correct the RECORD of yesterday morning. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] would make it appear there were two motions made, one a motion to reconsider the vote of the House refusing to consider the House bill 2511, and the other a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the House Calendar. We think that should be corrected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I asked unanimous consent to correct the RECORD so as to make it correspond exactly with the Journal and exactly with what I think took place.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The correction was ordered yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there can be no motion to reconsider anything except a vote taken by the House.

Mr. HORR and Mr. VALENTINE. That is right.

HOURLY MEETING FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow upon the call of the Speaker on the arrival of the procession at the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this motion would have to be made by unanimous consent, as it fixes no particular hour at which the House will meet. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will be so ordered.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to make a privileged report, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$48,890;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And provided further, That no allowance shall be made for the keeping or feeding of any prisoner who is able to pay or does pay the above sum of 75 cents per day; and the consular officer shall certify to the fact of inability in every case;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAS. N. BURNES,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
W. D. WASHBURN,

Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very little information is furnished by the conference report. I ask that the accompanying statement of the House conferees be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report herewith presented.

Aside from certain verbal changes in the text of the bill and the manner of its arrangement, the bill as agreed upon by the conferees compared with the bill as it passed the House presents the following changes:

The salary of the minister to Turkey is increased from $7,500 to $10,000.

A minister-resident and consul-general is provided for at $6,500 to Roumania, Servia, and Greece.

Five thousand dollars are provided for extending the commerce of the United States in the Congo Valley.

The salary of the secretary of legation in Turkey is increased from $1,500 to $1,800.

An interpreter at $1,000 is provided for to the legation in Corea.

Five thousand dollars are appropriated for the expenses that may occur in complying with the act regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases.

For rent of buildings for legation and other purposes in China $3,100 are given.

The salaries of the consuls-general at Constantinople and Rome are increased from $2,000 to $3,000 each.

The salary of the consul at Hankow is increased from $1,500 to $3,500.

The salary of the consul at Jerusalem is increased from $1,500 to $2,000.

For salaries of interpreters to consulates in China and Japan $12,000, instead of $10,000, are given.

One thousand dollars are given for interpreters and guards at the consulate in Constantinople.

The allowance for a steam-launch for the official use of the legation at Constantinople is increased from $500 to $1,000, and $500 are given for hire of a boat for use of the consul at Osaka and Hiogo.

For the expense of a prison and prison-keeper at the consulate in Bangkok, Siam, $1,000 are given.

For relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries an increase of $10,000 is given.

Five thousand dollars are appropriated for a preliminary search of the records of the French prize courts for evidences touching the French spoliation claims.

Twenty-five thousand dollars are appropriated to enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States.

The entire bill as agreed upon appropriates in all $1,242,925, being $73,340 more than the amount of the bill as it passed the House; $23,535 more than the law for the current year; $48,100 less than as it passed the Senate; and $390,251.75 less than the estimates submitted by the State Department for the year ending June 30, 1896.

JAMES N. BURNES,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
W. D. WASHBURN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURNES. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF MAJ. THOMAS T. THORNBURGH.

Mr. WOLFORD. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 7655, to increase the pension of the widow of Major Thornburgh, was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD], as a privileged matter, calls up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will inquire whether that is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, there were—ayes 54, noes 93.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It was agreed unanimously—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not announced the result of the vote.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order. When this bill was considered in the House last Friday evening it was agreed unanimously that there should be a vote upon it by yeas and nays. I think the RECORD will show that.

The SPEAKER. Was that agreement made in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In the House.

The SPEAKER. An agreement among members may bind them individually, but unless there was an order of the House the Chair can not recognize any agreement.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. An order to that effect was entered, I understand. It was to be entered, and I ask whether it was not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman claims that an order was made that the yeas and nays should be taken—on what?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. On the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the result of the vote just taken. The yeas are 54, the noes 93. So the motion to reconsider is not laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. What is now the condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. What is the present condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The House by a vote has refused to pass the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky entered a motion to reconsider that vote. This morning he called that up.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is now subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing now pending except the motion to reconsider the vote.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me correct the Chair. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who voted with the majority moved to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Kentucky made the motion. The gentleman from Kentucky calls it up, as he has a right to do under the rule. The question now recurs on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill. The House will be in order, as it is impossible for the Chair to hear what gentlemen are saying on the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to debate— [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the question of reconsideration is not debatable. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WOLFORD. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 42.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There being no debate before the previous question, is it not debatable under the new rule for thirty minutes?

Mr. RANDALL. It was debated in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and therefore does not come under the special rule.

Mr. WOLFORD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also move the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, rose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me have five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that debate is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a point of order. This bill was discussed at some length in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar on Friday night last. Under that state of facts I submit to the House it does not come under the special rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question having been ordered on that evening, it does not come under the special rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read from page 1660 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what occurred in Committee of the Whole House in reference to this bill, which, perhaps, will amount to an agreement among members as to the proceedings of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio has made a suggestion that the friends of this measure will agree to, that the previous question prevail in the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and that there be allowed on each side five minutes for debate.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PERKINS. And that the vote shall not be taken until a quorum is present.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the understanding.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Can the House be bound by any agreement made in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RANDALL. This agreement can be made after the committee rises to-night in the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. And made a matter of record on the Journal.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask if any agreement made in this manner in Committee of the Whole will have any binding effect upon the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has just made the same inquiry. It is suggested that the agreement be made in the House when it comes before the House after the committee rises.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is satisfactory to me.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass and with the understanding above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. That takes it out of the special rule.

Mr. KEIFER. That agreement should be carried out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that agreement should be adhered to.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I thought I was recognized. The bill comes from my committee.

The SPEAKER. There will be five minutes on each side for debate.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. There will be five minutes for and against the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I made the point in the House and it was agreed I should have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio because the agreement in regard to the debate seems from the RECORD to have been made by that gentleman.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This is a bill to increase the pension of the widow of Major Thornburgh from $25, to which she is entitled under the law and which she now draws, to $50 a month. If the House passes this bill, then I hold it should increase the pension of the widow of every major, of every lieutenant-colonel, of every colonel, of every brigadier-general, and of every major-general who was killed in battle in any war, to $50 a month.

Further still, why draw the line at the rank of major? Why give their widows $50, while the widows of captains and lieutenants are allowed but $22 or $17? Or why stop there? There are 75,000 widows of private soldiers, who were killed in battle or died from disease or wounds incurred in the service, who are receiving but $8 a month. There are 75,000 more claims of widows on file waiting adjudication, asking even for $8 per month, which has not yet been allowed them. Passing these all by, it is proposed in this bill to make an exception in one case out of a large number of cases probably just as worthy, just as meritorious as this. In my notion of things this is not right, it is not equitable, it is unjust to all who are equally deserving and equally entitled to the beneficence of the Government.

And I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that we can do this without breaking down all principles upon which pensions are granted. It is establishing a new and unwarranted precedent. Can this Government say to the widow of one officer who was killed in some battle, "You shall have a pension of $50 a month," and to the widow of another officer of the same rank who was killed in another battle or perhaps in the same battle, "You shall have a pension of but $25 a month?" I do not think, sir, that we can afford to do that. But if this bill passes we do that very thing, unless all widows of officers are granted like pensions. By the passage of this bill, I say the House will be taking that position. It becomes, therefore, a precedent entirely new, and one which will vex Congress in future.

There are some 7,500 pensioners on the rolls drawing $25 a month. I do not know how many are the widows of officers who would be as justly entitled to $50 as the widow of Major Thornburgh. Is it possible that because an officer was educated at West Point his widow becomes entitled to more than the widow of a volunteer officer? That Major Thornburgh was a brave and gallant officer none will dispute. But there were other officers who lost their lives on battlefields who were just as true and worthy as he, and whose widows are as needy and are as much entitled to the consideration of this Government as is the widow of Major Thornburgh.

I appeal to the House to do equal justice to all; not to take up one case from the top of the pension-roll and raise that higher, while we leave the great majority of pensioners—the 75,000 widows of private soldiers, many of them killed in battle while bravely doing their part—to draw but $8 a month, out of which they must support and educate their families. The average pension to disabled soldiers is but about $4 a month. The place to begin to raise pensions is from the bottom ranks, not from the top. Begin with the widows who get but $8 a month, not with those who get $25; and then treat all alike. The essence of justice is equality. I have entered my protest against the passage of all bills of this kind. I would not, with my view of pensions, be consistent if I did not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Very good.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman if the House has not refused to increase the pension of Mrs. Cushing?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and it did very wrong in so refusing.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And it has refused to grant pensions to other widows of officers of like rank in the Army and Navy.

I yield now the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], if he desires to occupy it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is simply establishing a precedent never established before. Hundreds of officers of the rank of major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel fell while leading their regiments in battle, but their widows are allowed only from $25 to $30 a month. Here was a man who was educated at the expense of the Government, who for thirteen years was drawing a liberal salary, and, happening to be killed on an Indian raid, they now propose to increase his widow's pension from $25 to $50, and all the time the widows of the hundred thousand soldiers who perished on the battlefields or in the hospitals are receiving but $8 a month.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And let me add in this connection that this is a report adversely from the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. The committees of the House and the Senate both report adversely upon it.

Mr. WOLFORD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The House committee did not report adversely upon the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The House committee did.

Mr. WOLFORD. I will not yield to you now. I state facts, and I want my own time in this discussion. I repeat they did not report adversely but favorably upon the bill. The only change was that the amount was reduced from $50 to $30. That was the exact report of the House committee.

Everybody admits, as has been admitted by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], that this is an exceptional case.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, very exceptional, it seems you are trying to make it.

Mr. WOLFORD. Everybody admits who has read the history of the gallant Thornburgh, a man who was sent out on a dangerous expedition with fewer men than were requisite for protection, and who gave up his life in the discharge of his duty—I repeat everybody admits that this pension should be granted to his widow. There is no man who has read the history of his gallant efforts in behalf of his country who will doubt that he made one of the most daring, chivalrous, and gallant charges that has ever been made on this earth, and no person who has examined into this case with proper care will doubt that it is one demanding consideration at our hands.

But the gentleman from Ohio comes up here and says that this man who went as a mere boy into the Army of the United States, who went out on the plains to fight the Indians, who fell beneath his glorious colors distinguished for his gallantry, who won faster than any other man in the United States service distinction and rank, who at his own request went into the line of the regular Army instead of into the Quartermaster's Department—I say that everybody who has read that history, who has read Sherman's report or read Schofield's report or the reports of General Crook, must see that this man has accomplished more great things, brave, noble, manly, ambitious as he was, and that he had a prominent future before him, with rank and honors waiting him at no distant day. But what do you see here? The gentleman from Ohio says that you do injustice to the private soldiers because you recognize the gallantry of this man. Does anybody believe that our fathers thought the time would ever come, or will it ever come in this country's history, when the widow of a private soldier expects to receive the same pension that a gallant officer's widow does?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope so. Why not?

Mr. WOLFORD. They did not do as much. The order of God Almighty is that he who has done much shall receive much. [Applause.] That is the rule which will be observed at the great day of accounts when we shall all stand before the great White Throne. Then those who have done much good shall receive much. Major Thornburgh did much. He did more than any other man could have done unless he was placed in the same situation. God Almighty placed him in that situation, and he died a martyr for his country. I say you will spend millions of dollars to educate the children of the Indians who murdered him, but you will not educate the great Thornburgh's children. You will give money to educate the children of the red man, the man who scalped him and murdered him, but you will not give money to educate Thornburgh's children.

And I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that no one of these special pleaders has ever introduced a bill to increase the pension of the widows of the privates.

Mr. MATSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he is mistaken. I have myself introduced and reported a bill to increase the pensions of the widows of private soldiers from $8 to $12 a month.

Mr. WOLFORD. I can not yield for interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD] has expired.

Mr. MATSON. I move to recommit the bill with the instructions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill to the Committee on Pensions, with instructions to inquire into the question whether a general bill to increase the pensions of the widows of all officers and soldiers killed in battle to $50 a month shall be reported by said committee.

Mr. VALENTINE. I make the point of order that that is an instruction to convert a private bill into a general bill, which is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. Mr. MATSON. Then I move to recommit the bill without instructions.

The question being taken on the motion to recommit, there were—ayes 80, noes 104.

Mr. MATSON and Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 52 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 126, not voting 79; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. PAYSON objected, but subsequently withdrew the objection, and it was then renewed by Mr. WELLER.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. THEOCKMORTON with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. HURD with Mr. RICE.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. REESE with Mr. LACY.

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. HANBACK with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. CONNOLLY with Mr. BREWER, of New York.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. STREUBLE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. JONES, of Alabama.

The following members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. REESE, is detained at his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Considering the vote already taken as a test vote I shall not insist myself on the execution of the order of the House requiring a ye-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. There was no order of the House as to a ye-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill. It was an agreement simply as to debate, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WOLFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the same arrangement as in the last case, I now call up the bill (S. 1228) to increase the pension of Mrs. Marie Louise Craven.

The SPEAKER. Is there a motion to reconsider?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On Friday night last, at the same time when the agreement as to the Thornburgh bill was made, it was arranged that the House should at its next regular session for private bills consider the bill for increasing the pension of Mrs. Marie Louise Craven, and that a ye-and-nay vote should be taken upon it if required.

The SPEAKER. Was the bill reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It was, by the same agreement and at the same time as the Thornburgh bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have it read by title.

The Clerk read the bill by title, as follows:

A bill (S. 1228) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the agreement that was made in relation to debate—that there should be five minutes on each side.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That was the understanding. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] desire to occupy the five minutes in opposition to the bill?

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] is, I presume, entitled to the time, as the bill comes from his committee. [After a pause.] I will undertake to control the time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] desire to be heard upon this bill?

Mr. MATSON. I suppose that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] desires to be heard in its favor.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the practice of the House I suppose that the first five minutes belongs to the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to increase the pension of the widow of Commander Craven, and is very similar in character to the bill which has just passed the House. This is the case of an officer of the rank of commander, below the rank of a general officer. The precedent has been made in this House, and well established, of increasing the pensions of the widows of general officers to $50 a month. There have been some exceptions to that rule; among the number the bill that has just passed the House; but the general practice has been to limit these increased pensions of $50 a month to the widows of general officers, and whenever you go beyond that the question is, Can this Government afford to give $50 a month to the widows of all its soldiers? That is the question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the question.

Mr. MATSON. It is a very plain practical question, Mr. Speaker, and I ask any gentleman who favors this bill to consider how he could resist an application from the widow of a soldier to have her pension increased to $50 a month when he is willing to increase the pension of the widow of this officer to that amount. How could he refuse? Our pension laws have been made in such a way as to discriminate in relation to rank. That may have been right, or it may have been wrong; but the laws are fixed, and without some precedent the law itself ought to control in regard to the rate of pension to be allowed to the widows of officers and soldiers. If this House embarks upon this new policy of increasing pensions indiscriminately, there is no telling where it will end.

The effect of it is to legislate for favorites; that is the proposition, to do that for some which you refuse to do for all. Now, if that is right, if gentlemen representing their constituencies here can afford to vote for the constituents of others what they know they can not get for the widows in the communities they represent, let them go ahead. I can not afford to do it; nor do I believe that any gentleman who represents a soldier constituency upon this floor can afford to vote for a bill that will give larger pensions to the constituents of others than he could possibly get for his own.

The SPEAKER. There are two minutes remaining of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. MATSON. I reserve the remaining time.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is that the law grants pensions in accordance with rank, and that no exceptions should ever be made except by a change in the general law; in other words, that no circumstances can occur to take a pensioner out of the general category fixed by law. But this House has been in the habit of making such exceptions. It made one only the other day in the case of the widow of General George H. Thomas; it made one only two weeks ago in the case of the widow of Lieutenant Greene, a lady who was entitled under the law to a pension of $25 a month, which was raised to $50 a month. There are therefore exceptions to the gentleman's rule, and on this very day this House has made, and justly made, an exception in the case of the widow of Lieutenant Thornburgh.

The practice of the House, then, having been established, it only remains for me to bring the case of Mrs. Craven within the rules under which the House acts.

Lieutenant Craven was a commander in the Navy of the United States. At the time of his death he was in command of the ship Tecumseh. Admiral Farragut was about to enter the harbor of Mobile with that fleet whose achievements have made his name glorious—Farragut, to whose widow Congress voted a pension of $2,000 a year. He waited for the Tecumseh to arrive from New York before he would attempt to enter the bay of Mobile, and he announces her arrival in this language:

The Tecumseh, Commander Craven, arrived on the evening of August 4, and everything being propitious I proceeded to the attack on the following morning, the Tecumseh having been given the leading position.

Again Admiral Farragut says:

The attacking fleet steamed steadily up the main ship-channel, the Tecumseh firing the first shot at forty-seven minutes past 6 o'clock a. m.

The Tecumseh was struck by a torpedo and sunk, carrying down with her nearly all the crew and her gallant commander. This is how he died.

When the monitor Tecumseh was sunk at the battle of Mobile Bay her gallant captain, Commander T. A. M. Craven, of the Navy, went down in her. At the moment of the explosion Craven and the pilot, Mr. John Collins, were in the iron tower, or pilot-house, directly over the turret, steering the ship to attack the confederate iron-clad Tennessee. Seeing the inevitable fate of the vessel, Craven and the pilot scrambled down into the turret and met at the foot of the iron ladder leading to the top of the turret through a narrow scuttle, the only exit now left for escape from the doomed vessel. At that point Craven drew back in a characteristic way and said, "After you, pilot!" "There was nothing after me," relates Mr. Collins, who fortunately escaped to tell the tale of heroism. "When I reached the topmost round of the ladder the vessel seemed to drop from under me."

Finally, when Admiral Farragut announced to the Department that the Tecumseh had been lost and that her brave commander had met death like a hero, as he was, the Admiral received the following reply from the Secretary of the Navy:

Great results in war are seldom attained without great risks, and it was not expected that the harbor of Mobile would be secured without disaster. The loss of the gallant Craven and his brave companions, with the Tecumseh, by a concealed torpedo, was a casualty which no human foresight could guard.

Now listen! The Secretary continues:

While the nation awards cheerful honors to the living, she will ever hold in grateful remembrance the memory of the gallant dead who periled their lives for their country and died in her cause.

That was the pledge given by the Secretary of the Navy to the gallant Craven who lost his life in the cause of his country—the pledge that that country would provide for his widow and his children. They are now in poverty, and they come here to ask that their pittance of $30 a month shall be increased to $50, in accordance with the repeated action of this House in dealing with the families of men by whom heroic deeds have been performed. I appeal to the House to redeem the pledge made by Secretary Welles in the hour of victory when death deprived Mrs. Craven of her heroic husband. Death under such circumstances ought to be equivalent to promotion of the single grade which would have entitled her to the pension proposed in this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the words "grateful remembrance" recalled to my mind a law in regard to soldiers passed some years ago by Congress. I ask the Clerk to read from the fifteenth volume of the Statutes at Large a portion of an act approved March 3, 1865.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further resolved, That in grateful recognition of the services, sacrifices, and sufferings of persons honorably discharged from the military and naval service of the country, by reason of wounds, disease, or the expiration of terms of enlistment, it is respectfully recommended to bankers, merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, farmers, and persons engaged in industrial pursuits to give them the preference for appointments to remunerative situations and employments.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Craven is dead.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have had this provision of the law read for the purpose merely of showing how absolutely ridiculous Congress makes itself on the subject of the soldier. There is an advertisement such as is inserted in the daily papers at so much a line. And Congress is making itself quite as ridiculous in granting pensions every day in "exceptional" cases. Every case is "exceptional" because these gentlemen fear to vote against the soldier.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is the bill now open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has been ordered. [Having taken the vote.] The ayes are 60, the noes 92. The noes have it, and the bill is rejected.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 305) for the relief of Thomas T. Stratton, assignee of W. B. Waldran;

A bill (S. 1347) for the relief of the sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron;

A bill (S. 1412) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States; and

A bill (S. 1839) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1031) for the relief of W. C. Marsh.

CORRECTION.

The SPEAKER. A mistake having been made in the engrossment of an amendment to a Senate bill, the Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the House for consideration a resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill of the Senate No. 229, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., to correct an error of engrossment of the House amendment.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for withdrawal of papers in the case of Phoebe A. Ross.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a motion that all private business for to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. VALENTINE. Will that affect the hour under the new rule?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. PETERS. Will it dispense with the session this evening for pension business?

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand that session has already been dispensed with and a session on Monday night substituted.

Mr. PETERS. If it does not interfere with the Friday night session for pension business, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it would not affect that session. An order of this kind has not been so construed heretofore.

Mr. McMILLIN. The public business is now in such a condition that I think the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is entirely proper, and I shall not oppose it in the interest of private business.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the adoption of this motion interfere with the hour under the new rule?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to appeal to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] to have the unfinished private business which would come up to-day disposed of before making the order which he suggests.

Mr. RANDALL. That might take the whole day.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; the previous question has been ordered.

A MEMBER. What is the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill for the relief of Captain Bigley.

Mr. KEIFER. That can be taken up some other time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that private business for to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will that interfere with the evening session for pension business?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that the House has now dispensed with all private business for to-day except at the evening session.

The SPEAKER. That has been done.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I move that at 10 o'clock to-night the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10.

Mr. MORRILL. Say half past 10 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. An order was made this morning, upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER], that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet upon the call of the Speaker to-morrow. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] would not interfere with that at all, because it does not contemplate an adjournment.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the House this evening at 10 o'clock will take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. VALENTINE. That ought not to be done.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, the employes of the House will be busy taking out the desks to-night, and it will be impossible to have an evening session if we are to carry out the proceedings which have been arranged by the joint committee of the two Houses. I venture to suggest instead of a session this evening a session be held some evening next week.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Say Monday.

Mr. DUNN. I think that order has been made.

The SPEAKER. It was suggested yesterday evening, but was not agreed to.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. If the employes of the House can have possession of this Hall to remove the desks this evening there will be then no inconvenience in taking a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock; but the members at that time will not have their desks.

Mr. MATSON. The proposition made by the gentleman from New York will not be objected to by anybody, if it were certain a session could be held Monday evening or any other evening next week. There is but one more night necessary, but that night is absolutely necessary to the passage of a number of Senate bills which ought not to be allowed to die and would die unless another night session is given. I apprehend the employes of the House can begin after adjournment and have his work completed before midnight.

A MEMBER. Let them have a sufficient force.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether in the event that a session were held to-night the employes of the House could not have time enough to remove the desks to-morrow morning? So the question would come between a pension session to-night and a session for rivers and harbors to-morrow.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I will say in response to the gentleman that the Architect of the Capitol has informed us it is necessary for him to have the entire evening, not only for the purpose of removing the desks, but arranging the platform and rearranging the seats for to-morrow, if this Hall is to be rearranged to give seats for eight hundred people on the floor to-morrow. And the time will not be too long the Architect of the Capitol will have if he can work here at once.

Mr. ANDERSON. Can not we do that to-morrow if we are not to have any session?

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest this is the condition of things: Under the rule of the House we have to-night a session for pensions. That rule can not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent. Unanimous consent has been refused, and the motion I make is not in conflict with any suggestion as to the convenience of the officers for to-night. You can not dispense with the night session, it being the order of the House, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. In answer to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky I have to say that the arrangement by which to-morrow's proceedings are to be had is in pursuance of a law of Congress, and those arrangements, under full authority from both Houses of Congress made by the joint commission, require this room shall be in possession of the employes of the House this evening.

Mr. MATSON. Unless we have our session for pensions to-night there is probability no session can be had to-night, and therefore I shall be obliged to insist.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. If we have an evening session at 7 and get through at 9, then the employes can have the benefit of an hour or two we should otherwise occupy by taking a recess until 8, as usual.

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House, at 10 o'clock this evening, will take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I ask by unanimous consent the evening session shall commence at 7 and close at 9.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The House, by a concurrent resolution, has agreed with the Senate to give up the use of this Hall to-night.

The SPEAKER. There is no order of the House heretofore made in reference to any proceeding to-day; it is only for to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does not the agreement of the Senate provide for removing the seats on this floor?

The SPEAKER. It does; but it does not provide when it shall be done.

Mr. McMILLIN. The motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire will meet every necessity of the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent the session this evening shall begin at 7 and close at 9. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILLIS. I now, Mr. Speaker, modify my motion to the effect that the House shall take a recess at 9 o'clock to-night to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then if that prevails the House will be in session during the ceremonies at the monument?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. VALENTINE. I trust the motion will not prevail.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS, on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 91.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate of July 14, 1884, to print the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the relations between labor and capital, with accompanying testimony.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare forfeited land granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN OFFICIAL-ENVELOPE CONTRACTS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to make a privileged report. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report back a resolution of inquiry referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas sundry newspapers in the country published notices during the summer of 1884 concerning alleged great frauds in the supply of official envelopes to the Post-Office Department, whereby many thousands of dollars were lost to the Government:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, requested to communicate to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads all the facts, with papers or copies thereof, connected with the annulment in August, 1884, of the contract with P. P. Kellogg & Co., of Springfield, Mass., for the supply of official envelopes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; also how the cost of envelopes under the said contract compared with the cost of the same in the contract subsequently made; also whether envelopes inferior to contract requirements were furnished under any other contract than the said one of P. P. Kellogg & Co.; also whether any officer or employe of the Government was at fault in connection with the supply of any such inferior envelopes; and also what action has been taken by the Postmaster-General to protect the interests of the Government in connection with the supply of such inferior envelopes.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think this resolution is scarcely privileged in its present form. If information is sought by the House it would be proper, but this is a request that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be informed of these facts.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will change that at the suggestion of the gentleman. This is unanimously requested by the committee.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the information come to the House and not to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House requires all communications from heads of Departments to be addressed to the House itself.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will change that, so it will read:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the House of Representatives, &c.

Mr. VALENTINE. This should be done. I noticed a day or two ago that a resolution of that kind appeared by the RECORD to have been passed; but I think in all cases they should be made to conform to the rule.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour under the special rule begins at nine minutes past 2 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to ask what is probably in the nature of a parliamentary question. Under the order of the House is there not a session required to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. There is; but it will not begin until the House shall be called to order by the Speaker after the procession has arrived at the Capitol.

CUSTOM-HOUSE LOT, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take up, under the special rule, from the Speaker's table Senate bill 194, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to convey to the city of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, for highway purposes, such portion of the old custom-house lot, so called, owned by the United States, situated on the southwest corner of South Main street and Custom avenue, in said city, as may be required for the widening of said South Main street upon the application for such widening now pending in the supreme court of Rhode Island.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to agree with the city of Providence upon the amount of compensation to be paid the United States for said land and damages to the building on said lot, and to receive such amount in full payment therefor.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to move an amendment to the Senate bill by striking out the word "southwest," in the seventh line of the printed bill, and inserting in place thereof "northwesterly." This is to correct a misdescription of the location of the lot in question.

Mr. MILLS. Is the Government to be paid for this land?

Mr. SPOONER. The Government is to be paid.

Mr. MILLS. How is the value to be arrived at?

Mr. SPOONER. By agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS. What does he know of the value of lands in Rhode Island? Would it not be better that there should be some commissioner appointed to ascertain and report the value of the land?

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury could easily ascertain through inquiry of the officers of the United States the value of the property.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me it would be better to have it ascertained by some person familiar with the value of property in that city.

Mr. WELLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Rhode Island if these lands are not required for the use of the public buildings there now?

Mr. SPOONER. No; not more than this, as stated very fully in the report of the committee: The lot in question is the old custom-house lot, upon which an ancient building now stands about 40 by 40 feet in extent, which building is used now for store-house purposes, the custom-house business being transacted in the new custom-house building erected some twenty or more years ago.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to inquire further of the gentleman if the sale of this lot will not necessitate the buying of other lands to accommodate the public buildings in that locality; and I would like to add also to the question if that is not the purpose of the parties who have this property in hand?

Mr. SPOONER. That is not at all the purpose of this bill, nor of those moving in it. As is well understood, probably, in our Eastern cities, and peculiarly so in Providence, the streets laid out in early days were many of them very crooked and narrow. With the extension of business and the increase of population it has been necessary to widen and straighten a great many of our streets, and the project of widening and straightening this particular street, which is one of the principal streets in the city, has been a consideration for many years.

Proceedings are pending in the supreme court of Rhode Island under the Rhode Island law for the appointment of commissioners and to provide for the straightening and widening of this street. Under the law all of those who are injured or damaged by reason of what is being done, or whose property is damaged by reason of widening or straightening the streets, are compensated by the city, and the amount of such compensation is arrived at in the first instance by commissioners appointed by the supreme court, and if their decision is deemed insufficient or unsatisfactory, by an appeal to the court itself.

It seems to me that the bill is perfectly guarded, and there is no design or intent on the part of the city of Providence to do otherwise than to pay a fair value for the land taken and the damages occasioned. If it is thought better by the House the amount of damages should be ascertained in the same manner as damages to private property by proceedings in court, I will offer a section to that effect; but I do not think it necessary.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate in support of the bill has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I call for the reading of the report in my time in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa rises to oppose the bill, and asks for the reading of the report in his time.

Mr. SPOONER. I send to the desk the report made by the House committee on identically the same bill which they have reported to the House.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds), as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2703) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes, respectfully report:

That said city of Providence has an application pending in the supreme court of the State of Rhode Island, under the laws of said State, to enable said city to widen and straighten South Main street, in said city, and thereby to make an improvement demanded by the business interests of that locality.

The "old custom-house lot," so called, belonging to the United States, is situated on the northwesterly corner of said South Main street and Custom avenue, measuring about forty feet on South Main street and about sixty-four feet in depth. The "old custom-house," an ancient brick building, about forty by forty feet in width and depth, and two and one-half stories in height, and now used as a storehouse, stands upon the front portion of said lot, and on the present westerly line of South Main street.

For the purpose of said proposed widening and straightening, a small portion of the front part of said lot is required.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill sufficiently protects the Government interests involved; and, as the payment of damages to said lot and to the building thereon is provided for in said bill, they recommend the passage thereof.

Mr. WELLER. I am of the opinion there should be objection offered to the consideration of this bill, with the suggestion that it be referred back to the committee, with instructions to make an amendment, creating a commission to appraise this property instead of leaving it to the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope that will not be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Further objections being called for, only three members rose—not a sufficient number.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] will be adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLER. I now move the bill be recommitted with instructions to report an amendment that a commission be instructed to appraise the property in question.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WELLER, it was not agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT READING, PA.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 1321) for the erection of a public building at Reading, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices, at the city of Reading, in the State of Pennsylvania. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $60,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It has never been my good fortune to have an opportunity to present any claim from the district I have the honor to represent until now; and I therefore beseech a patient hearing while I make a brief statement of the merits of this bill. The city of Reading is in point of population the fortieth city in the United States, and it is the fourth city in Pennsylvania, having a population now of between 55,000 and 60,000 people. During the last four years the average number of buildings constructed annually has been over four hundred. In 1880 there was a registration of 10,000 voters; in 1884 there was a registration of 13,000 voters, which, under the ordinary rules, indicates a population of 60,000.

The city is situated fifty-eight miles from Philadelphia, thirty-six miles from Pottsville, fifty-four miles from Harrisburg, and is the center of a rich manufacturing and agricultural region. It has at its door the anthracite-coal regions of the Schuylkill and of the Lehigh. There are two systems of railroad now running through it, the Pennsylvania Central and the Philadelphia and Reading. Its public business is large. The postal money-order business amounted in the last year at Reading to over $100,000. The gross income of the post-office was over $42,000; the net income over $21,000; the total business of the office to over $250,000. There is much more to be said in favor of the measure, but in case there are any objections to the measure, I will reserve the balance of my time to answer them.

The SPEAKER. Five minutes are allowed for debate in opposition if any gentleman desires to occupy that time. [After a pause.] Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 441) for the completion of a public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the additional sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to erect a post-office, court-room, and internal-revenue building at Council Bluffs, Iowa, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the requirements of an act for that purpose approved May 25, 1892, and the limit of cost prescribed in said act is hereby extended.

Mr. STORM. I ask if this bill has not been offered once before?

Mr. ANDERSON. That makes no difference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It has not been offered since the rule was amended so as to admit of explanations.

The SPEAKER. This bill was called up by another gentleman from Iowa who was recognized on the first day of the operation of the new rule when all these motions were objected to. Afterward the rule was changed.

Mr. STORM. I make the point that no gentleman should be recognized to call up a bill once objected to until all other members have the privilege of calling up bills.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not make any provision as to that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I yield to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. PUSEY].

Mr. PUSEY. I desire to make a brief statement in reference to this measure. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury that this additional appropriation be made. The Forty-sixth Congress appropriated a sum of money out of which the site was purchased and the excavation was commenced last fall. The superintendent struck quicksand and there was great difficulty in getting a foundation for the building.

We have sunk some $18,000 in building a proper foundation. We have built the wall up to the grade line of the street, and the Secretary of the Treasury asks this additional appropriation in order to complete this fire-proof building. We have to bring our material for the construction of this building five hundred miles. I settled in that town when we had but two mails a week, brought to us on buckboards, and I think there is something due to the people that go out on our frontiers and build up towns and cities, and thus change the postal service from a burden upon the Government into a source of revenue. The revenue of the post office there is now between $35,000 and $40,000; we have a circuit court and a district court; the town is an important business center, and I do not think there is a single gentleman on this floor who will object to the additional appropriation that is asked. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman what amount has already been appropriated for that building.

Mr. PUSEY. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And this is $100,000 more?

Mr. PUSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will offer an amendment to reduce the sum. I will not make objection to the consideration of the bill, but I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PUSEY] to accept the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"And no plan shall be approved which will involve the expenditure for site and building complete, including the approaches, of any sum greater than the limits herein fixed."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This amendment expressly prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from accepting or approving any plan for this building which will involve a larger expenditure than the amount fixed in the bill.

Mr. PUSEY. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PUSEY] states that he will accept the amendment. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] If not, the amendment will be adopted and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been ordered to its third reading.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the rule a bill is open to amendment after debate.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been ordered to its third reading. The gentleman may move to reconsider, if he desires.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think the amount ought to be reduced.

Several MEMBERS. No, no!

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 70) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts, late copartners in the business of commission merchants and bonded warehousemen in the city of New York, be permitted to sue in the Court of Claims; which court shall pass upon the law and facts as to the liability of the United States for the acts of its officer, Joshua F. Bailey, by reason of the seizure, detention, and closing up of the commission houses and bonded warehouses of said copartners, for the breaking up and interruption of their said business, and for the seizure and detention of the property, books, and papers in and connected with said business, by Joshua F. Bailey, collector of internal revenue for the fourth internal-revenue district of said State, or by said Bailey and other internal-revenue officers. The United States shall appear to defend against said suit, and either party may appeal to the Supreme Court as in ordinary cases statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. TILLMAN. The House Committee on Claims approve this bill, which has passed the Senate. In the last Congress the Committee on Claims in each House reported favorably upon a bill similar to this; but there was no opportunity to take it up in either body. As a member of the Committee on Claims, after thoroughly investigating the facts connected with this case, I have, in the exercise of my privilege as a member under the rule lately established by the House, called up this bill and asked that it be passed, in order to correct one of the greatest wrongs ever committed, within my knowledge, by any officer or agent of the Government. The parties who suffered this wrong were the members of a firm of merchants in New York city.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What was the date of the transaction?

Mr. TILLMAN. The transaction occurred in the latter part of 1897 and the forepart of 1898.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What was the nature of it?

Mr. TILLMAN. Joseph Cummings & Co. were commission merchants and exporters and importers in the city of New York, engaged in a large whisky and wine business, their sales amounting to over $1,000,000 a year. It was perhaps on account of the large extent and success of their business operations that they were selected for a "raid" made by an internal-revenue collector named Bailey, in order that he might levy "blackmail." He shut up their warehouse, took charge of their books and papers, and would not permit them to carry on any business whatever.

Mr. PAYSON. Under what pretext?

Mr. TILLMAN. Upon a general charge of fraud without ever making any specification. After a couple of months these partners in trade, finding they could get no relief from Bailey, came to the Treasury Department here and asked whether there were any charges against their firm. They were told there were none. They then asked for an investigation. The Secretary of the Treasury sent an officer of his Department to New York, who, in company with two deputy collectors, made an investigation, and found the books, papers, and goods all right. Yet this man Bailey, persisting in his general charge of fraud, refused to surrender control of the books, papers, and goods belonging to the firm.

After three or four months more these merchants demanded a second investigation, which was had; and every package of goods, whether in the store or bonded warehouse, in either bottles or in wooden vessels, was examined and found to correspond precisely with the books. A report to this effect was made to the Treasury Department. When the goods were finally given up to the merchants six months had elapsed; the business season was over; the price of their goods had fallen, and the firm was ruined. The evidence is convincing that if they had been permitted to export to fill contracts—

A MEMBER. What became of Bailey?

Mr. TILLMAN. Bailey in the mean time took "leg bail."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I rise to oppose the bill, and yield my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I desire that he may complete his explanation.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thank the gentleman. The counsel of this business firm advised them that they should first institute proceedings against Bailey, and after getting judgment against him appeal to the Government, from which they hoped to get redress by having recourse to the sureties of Bailey. But Bailey fled. They then waited, by advice of their counsel (Mr. Allen, of the New York bar), in the hope that Bailey would return, and upon a solemn assurance of Bailey's counsel (Mr. Runkle, another member of the New York bar) that he would return. Thus time went on until their right of action was barred by the statute.

This bill merely provides that these parties may go to the Court of Claims and that the Government or the claimant may appeal to the Supreme Court. No appropriation of money is provided in the bill, and if the case should go to the Supreme Court and should there be decided against the Government the case would have to come here for an appropriation, and all the facts and circumstances could then be re-examined here. I assure the House, after a thorough and extensive investigation, that I think the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman state why Bailey fled the country?

Mr. TILLMAN. He fled the country because he was a defaulter to the Government to the amount of about $180,000; and although the Government officers had notice of the monstrous wrong done to these merchants—one of whom died in the poor-house a year or two ago, the other of whom, a man ruined in fortune, is now on a sick bed—although the Government officers had notice of the monstrous wrong done to these merchants and of the rascally conduct of this man toward the Government, they compromised with his sureties for $50,000. The point of law involved is merely the question of notice.

Mr. PAYSON. Has this matter ever been investigated by any committee of either branch of Congress?

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been examined by committees of both branches, and favorable reports made.

Mr. PAYSON. I mean has the proposed plaintiff ever made any application to Congress for direct relief in the form of an appropriation?

Mr. TILLMAN. Never.

Mr. McMILLIN. He never has; and this bill simply gives the right to bring a suit in the Court of Claims.

Mr. PAYSON. I understand that. I did not know but perhaps there might have been some previous application and some adverse report.

Mr. TILLMAN. There has never been any adverse report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. RAY, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who object to the consideration of this bill will rise. [After a pause.] Only one gentleman rises; and the bill is before the House for consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CLARKSBURG, W. VA.

Mr. GOFF. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1618) to provide for the construction of a court-house and post-office at Clarksburg, W. Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at Clarksburg, in the State of West Virginia, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts and post-office and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $50,000; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of West Virginia shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House for any length of time in discussing this matter. For a great many years the courts of the United States have been held at this place, and during all these years they have used the county court-house, the county furnishing the building free to the Government of the United States, and all the necessary expenses connected with heating and lighting the same. The rapid increase of the population of that county, the extension of business, and increase of litigation have been such as to occupy it all the time by the courts of the county until it has become virtually no place where United States courts can be held. Over 300,000 people in the surrounding counties transact their business there. There is no safety to the records. Over fifty years of records, of decrees, of titles to property are kept in a frame building, without security at all. I practice in that court, and my attention has been called to this matter by citizens of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland to the insecurity of these records. This bill has been considered by the committee and unanimously reported, and I do not desire to detain the House further.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make two suggestions to the gentleman from West Virginia. One is that the whole sum should be appropriated by this bill. The provision of the statute which imposes a duty upon the Supervising Architect of the Treasury touching the construction of public buildings does not operate effectually until the whole sum is appropriated.

Mr. GOFF. There is only $50,000 for the whole amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the whole amount is appropriated by this bill?

Mr. GOFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I misunderstood the bill from the reading. Then it is all right.

The other matter is this: Will the gentleman have objection to the limitation imposed in some of the other bills being put upon this—that the site shall first be purchased?

Mr. GOFF. It is there now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman consent to the provision being inserted that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve the plan if it involves a larger expenditure than the appropriation?

Mr. GOFF. It says the cost of the lot and building shall not exceed the sum of $50,000 all told.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House having declined to adopt this provision on one bill, I do not wish to press it now, but I think my friend will find it to his advantage to have this limitation included.

Mr. GOFF. I think it is there already, and I claim nothing more.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will come in the way of a proviso which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury after the site for said building shall have been purchased to cause plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and purchase thereof exceeding the portion of said $50,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that I do not insist on this, but I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia to accept it.

Mr. GOFF. Very well; let it be adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How far is the location of this building to the nearest point where a United States court is held?

Mr. GOFF. One hundred and twenty-five miles.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. At Parkersburg?

Mr. GOFF. I thought you said district court. It is about one hundred miles.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the population of this town?

Mr. GOFF. I do not know, and for this reason: The corporate limits of this town, like those of others, do not include the whole population.

Mr. McMILLIN. What about is the population?

Mr. GOFF. Five thousand.

Mr. McMILLIN. Quite small.

Mr. GOFF. The courts are held there.

There was no objection, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOFF moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. WILLIS. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 4067) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Louisville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Louisville, Ky.," approved May 25, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $1,000,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof.

Sec. 2. That the Supervising Architect and the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making contracts for the erection of said building.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I have already personally explained this bill to nearly all the members of this House, and I respectfully call their further attention to the facts connected with it. Three years ago Congress passed an act to construct a public building at Louisville, Ky. The site was bought, but the architect declined to go ahead because the amount fixed in the act was as the limit of cost inadequate to the public business of that city. The Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication which I hold in my hand, recommends $1,500,000, and we are only asking $1,000,000, which is the amount recommended by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. As introductory to some facts which I wish to present I will read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and the report of the committee:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect of this Department, recommending that the limit of cost of the proposed public building at Louisville, Ky., be extended to $1,500,000, and to state that I concur in the recommendation.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH, Secretary.

To the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
February 2, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that the limit of cost fixed for the proposed public building at Louisville, Ky., is $500,000. This amount is totally insufficient to provide accommodations for the proper transaction of the public business at this time. In view of the fact that the post-office business has more than doubled in the last ten years, and as the collections for internal revenue for the year ending December 31, 1883, and the quarter ending March 31, 1884, are more than $10,000,000, and for corresponding dates for 1884 and 1885, will, according to the estimate of the collector, exceed $15,000,000, I respectfully recommend that to provide for present needs, and to make proper provision for the future growth of the public business in Louisville, the limit of cost for the building be increased to $1,500,000.

Very respectfully,

M. E. BELL,
Supervising Architect.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4067) to increase the limit of appropriation for the public building at Louisville, Ky., respectfully report:

Upon a full presentation of the facts, the last Congress recognized the propriety and necessity for additional accommodations for the Federal offices at Louisville by the passage of an act for that purpose, which was approved May 25, 1862. With the appropriation already made a site for the building has been secured, but no further steps have been taken. The Supervising Architect, being of the opinion that no building adapted to the increased and increasing wants of the Government service at that point can be erected within the present limit, declines from a sense of public duty to make out the plans until Congress has had further opportunity to express its judgment.

Louisville, the metropolis of Kentucky, occupies an area of eighteen square miles. Its population at the census of 1870 was 100,733; its population according to the last census was 123,758. The rapidity of its increase may be seen from the fact that since 1830 its population has trebled, and it now ranks as the sixteenth city of the Union.

But while the size and prospective growth of a city should receive due consideration, the amount of public business should, in the opinion of your committee, be the chief factor in determining the necessity and character of Government buildings to be established.

The ordinary revenues of the United States from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1883, were $398,287,561. Of this sum $359,426,965 were received from customs and internal revenue. In other words, over nine-tenths of all the revenues which are paid to the Government at cities where public buildings are located come from these two sources. The amount of these, therefore (customs and internal revenue), affords a criterion, at least so far as the receipts of public money are concerned, for determining the size and value of the public building to be erected.

THE INTERNAL-REVENUE OFFICE.

The collections of internal revenue at Louisville for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1883, were $7,550,481. The amount collected for the fiscal year 1881 was $3,489,672. In two years the receipts from this source have more than doubled, and every year hereafter they will continue to increase. By the law of 1878, whiskies are permitted to remain in bond three years before paying the tax. In districts like that of Louisville, where fine whiskies that require age to make them valuable are chiefly manufactured, a large per cent. of the product, since the passage of the law, has been left in bond, and the amount of revenue from this source has thus temporarily been diminished. The last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that 28,107,473 taxable gallons of whisky were in bond at Louisville on the 30th June, 1883, which is 23,132,374 gallons more than any district in the country, or more than all the remaining eighty-two districts combined, excluding the Kentucky districts. During the seasons of 1881-'82, comprising one year, over 20,000,000 taxable gallons of spirits were produced in that district, the tax upon which would amount to $18,000,000 per annum. The amount of internal revenue collectible at Louisville will, therefore, hereafter average over $12,000,000 per annum.

Upon the last official report of the Department, Louisville, as compared with the other 84 collectors' offices in the United States, ranks fourth in importance, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Peoria being the only cities which exceed it. One-twentieth of all the revenues from this source is collected at Louisville.

There are employed in this district 1 collector, 25 deputy collectors and clerks, 48 gaugers, and 184 storekeepers, making a total of 258 officers. Of these, 140 are on duty at Louisville.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS.

In the custom-house at Louisville there are permanently enrolled 56 vessels, of 17,664.61 tons.

The rapid increase of customs duties may be seen from the following statement, covering a period of five years:

Amount of duties collected—
During year 1878	$36,651
During year 1879	44,034
During year 1880	58,788
During year 1881	75,053
During year 1882
During year 1883	95,119

The increase of business as will be seen, has been more than 100 per cent. The transportation of foreign goods to inland ports without appraisement is destined to revolutionize the methods of collecting revenue in the United States, and the extension of the system renders it necessary for the Government to materially enlarge her interior custom-houses, as the examination and appraisement of imported goods are now performed at the interior ports instead of being made at the seaboard.

POSTAL RECEIPTS.

Next in importance to customs and internal revenue is the postal business. The postal receipts at the Louisville office for year ended June 30, 1881, were $200,000. Of the 50,000 post-offices in the United States, Louisville is the thirteenth city in amount of business and sixteenth in receipts. Of the one hundred and nine free-delivery offices, eighty-two of them do not return one-half as much and sixty-seven of them do not return one-third as much in receipts as the Louisville office, and yet in all of them the buildings in which their business is transacted are, upon an average, fifty times larger and more expensive than the one in Louisville. It has forty carriers and thirty-five postal clerks and route agents. The total employees are ninety-four. The clerical force has more than trebled in twenty-five years.

PENSION OFFICE.

The public business of the country embraces not only receipts, but expenditures; of these the pension claims are the largest which affect this question. The pension business, at first transacted by fifty-eight officers, has since been limited to seventeen, and one of these is at Louisville. The following statement shows the amount of business in this direction:

Statement showing amount of business transacted at United States pension agency, Louisville, Ky., for the calendar years ending December 31, 1882, and December 31, 1883.

Year.	Number of payments.	Amount paid.
1882.
Army pensions	24,526	$1,365,555 30
Examining surgeons	101	7,377 15
1883.
Army pensions	26,684	1,623,902 22
Examining surgeons	208	6,965 95

* No surgeons paid since July, 1883, owing to exhaustion of appropriation for that purpose.

A correct statement according to records of this agency.

R. M. KELLY,
Pension Agent.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

The whole State of Kentucky constitutes one judicial district, in which the district and circuit courts, located at Louisville, transact four-fifths of the business. The offices of district attorney and his assistants, of the judges of the district and circuit courts and their clerks, together with the rooms for petit and grand juries, should all be located in the same building, a result which is not now possible.

SUMMARY.

The aggregate amount of public business, besides that of the United States circuit and district courts, attended to at Louisville, Ky., would be therefore as follows:

Internal revenue	receipts	$7,550,481
Customs	do	95,119
Post-office	do	300,000
Pension business	expenditures	1,630,886
Total		9,476,468

In view of these facts, it is the opinion of your committee that the sum of $600,000 is not sufficient for the erection of a suitable Government building at Louisville. The estimate of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury is the sum of $1,500,000. But inasmuch as an eligible site has been secured at the extremely low price of $140,000, your committee recommend that the limit be raised to $1,000,000. This will leave about $860,000 available for the erection of the building.

Your committee therefore beg leave to report in favor of the passage of the bill, with the following amendment, namely: Strike out the words "five hundred thousand," in lines 6 and 7 of the first section, so that the limit of cost shall be $1,000,000.

I might, Mr. Speaker, content myself with the case as presented in these two official reports, but to do so would be less than justice to the city whose claims I am now urging. What I mean to say is that, accepting the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, the public business of Louisville the present year instead of being $9,476,468, as stated in the report of the committee, will be $16,925,987, or, deducting the pension disbursements and confining the public business to the three items, namely, the customs receipts, the internal-revenue receipts, and the post-office receipts, the aggregate amount would be $15,295,120. How does this city compare with others of equal or greater size and population? I will give the public business of a few of the leading cities of the country. I give as to these cities the three items which constitute nine-tenths of the public business that is transacted:

Philadelphia:
Post-office receipts	$1,581,791
Internal-revenue receipts	2,955,174
Customs receipts	12,900,078
Total	17,437,043
Cost of public building at Philadelphia, $6,072,391.
Chicago:
Post-office receipts	$1,949,180
Internal-revenue receipts	8,447,053
Customs receipts	3,850,343
Total	14,246,576
Cost of public building at Chicago, $5,873,746.
Cincinnati:
Post-office receipts	$638,634
Internal-revenue receipts	9,826,123
Customs receipts	815,956
Total	11,280,703
Cost of public building at Cincinnati, $5,800,000.
Saint Louis:
Post-office receipts	$843,730
Internal-revenue receipts	4,995,427
Customs receipts	1,530,902
Total	7,370,059
Cost of public building at Saint Louis, $6,055,000.
Baltimore:
Post-office receipts	$540,566
Internal-revenue receipts	3,155,000
Customs receipts	2,306,287
Total	6,001,793
Limit to cost of public building and site, $2,555,000.
Pittsburgh:
Post-office receipts	$344,850
Internal-revenue receipts	1,923,035
Customs receipts	488,508
Total	2,762,393
Limit of cost of public building at Pittsburgh fixed by present Congress at $1,500,000.
Detroit:
Post-office receipts	$314,549
Internal-revenue receipts	1,207,549
Customs receipts	148,535
Total	1,670,595
Limit of cost of public building at Detroit fixed by present Congress, $900,000.

The public business of Louisville for last year (the year which the preceding calculations cover) is as follows:

Louisville:
Post-office receipts.....	$250, 377
Internal-revenue receipts.....	8, 626, 352
Customs receipts.....	119, 829
Total.....	8, 996, 558

But for the present and future years (as the Secretary of Treasury shows in his letter) the internal-revenue receipts will be $15,000,000. Hence the public business of Louisville will be, as I first stated, for the current year, over fifteen millions. Upon either of these estimates it will be seen that the limit of $1,000,000 is far, very far, within what the judgment of either this or preceding Congresses has fixed as a proper limit for a public building.

Taking the first and smaller estimate, it will be seen that the port business of Louisville was last year over three times as great as Pittsburgh and over five times as great as Detroit, and yet the pending bill asks you to give it only $100,000 more than you have given Detroit and $500,000 less than you have given Pittsburgh. I voted with pleasure for both of these cities, and I refer to them now not in any complaining spirit, but simply to show the very reasonable request that my own district is now making. If this Congress applies the same rule to Louisville as to Detroit and Pittsburgh, it will fix a limit of $4,500,000 instead of $1,000,000.

So much for the leading cities of the Union. If time permitted I could show from a tabular statement before me that if the same ratio were observed at Louisville as at six-sevenths of the cities of the United States it would now, averaging the whole list upon the same basis, be entitled to an appropriation of $125,000,000. This is a startling but an easily demonstrated statement. Can any city in the United States, Mr. Speaker, make out a stronger case than this? The mere statement of the figures is, I submit, a conclusive argument in favor of the bill now before the House.

It should be remembered also that the whole State of Kentucky constitutes but one judicial district, and four-fifths of the business of the Federal courts is transacted at Louisville. Connected with this are the offices of United States district attorney and his assistant, United States marshal and deputies, clerk of circuit and district court, commissioner for the court, &c. One of the seventeen pension agencies of the United States, an agency disbursing many millions of dollars, is also located there. This is not included in the total estimate of public business which I have stated.

The collector's office is there—an office which during the last year collected over $10,000,000.

Mr. COOK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. COOK. Is this amount, $500,000, to be appropriated in addition to what has been heretofore appropriated?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; this bill passed the committee in the Forty-sixth Congress when no limit was prescribed. Afterward, after the bill had been acted on in committee, the general clause as to limit was adopted, and without further consideration $500,000 was inserted as the limit. This is in addition to that amount.

Mr. COOK. That makes $1,000,000 in all?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; $100,000 more than at Detroit. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends $1,500,000.

Mr. COOK. You spoke of the amount of revenue collected there; how much would that be reduced if the tax was taken off tobacco and whisky?

Mr. WILLIS. We would still be among the leading cities in the Union in point of public business. The gentleman knows that that tax constitutes in Louisville, as it does in Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and other large cities, the greater part of the public revenues.

All these matters have been fully considered by the committee and by their unanimous vote this has been recommended. I therefore respectfully ask the vote of the House for it. I will append several statements in further support of this request.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky how much has been expended for the site of this building.

Mr. WILLIS. One hundred and forty thousand dollars.

RATE OF GROWTH.

Cities.	1870.	1880.	Increase per cent.
Saint Louis.....	310, 864	350, 518	12.75
Cincinnati.....	216, 239	255, 139	17.98
Louisville.....	100, 753	123, 758	22.83

The growth of Louisville as a city dates substantially from the close of the war. The decade from 1870 to 1880 is the first decade in which Louisville can be said to have fairly embarked in her career as a live and progressive city, and though her great transportation facilities have nearly all been attained since 1880, and her manufacturing development has been more than twice as rapid since that date as it was before, yet the progress from 1870 to 1880 is quite gratifying, and is an earnest of what may be expected during the present decade, with her vastly increased opportunities and abilities.

The growth in population of the three principal cities of the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys from 1870 to 1880, as shown by the United States Census Reports, is as follows:

Louisville leads in growth of population in the race of three cities whose competition is most direct for the trade of the Southern and Southwestern States. Could an enumeration be had to-day it would show this city in a much more favorable light, relatively, than does the census of 1880, for the increase rate of growth since 1880 has been very marked. Persons acquainted with the city's history, and not over sanguine, but practical business men, believe, from experience and observation, that the increase of population for this decade will be fully double that of the last.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE.

COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, FIFTH DISTRICT, KENTUCKY, April 11, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request of this date, I give below statement of collections of internal revenue in this district from all sources for the year 1883 and for the first quarter of 1884:

Total collections for year ended December 31, 1883..... $8, 249, 809 36
Total collections for quarter ended March 31, 1884..... 2, 019, 948 39

Unless the withdrawals for export are very excessive, I think the collections for corresponding dates for 1884 and 1885 will far exceed the figures given above, and will amount probably to $15,000,000.

Respectfully,

LEWIS BUCKNER, Collector.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That will leave about $850,000 to be applied to the building.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; $860,000 exactly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The question being taken on the amendment of the committee to strike out the words "five hundred thousand," in lines 6 and 7 of the first section of the bill, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS, MORRISTOWN, N. J.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to take up House joint resolution 197, authorizing the Secretary of War to assist in canceling the debt and in enlarging and improving the grounds and collections of Washington's headquarters in Morristown, N. J., and in securing suitable ground in which to gather the remains of Revolutionary soldiers there buried, and in erecting a monument over the same, and put it upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Morristown was occupied for two winters by the Continental Army, and its headquarters was for this long period the home of General Washington, and from time to time the home of many of his most famous generals; and Whereas the Washington Association of New Jersey has from private funds bought, and the State of New Jersey, by annual appropriation of $2,500, has assisted the association to adorn and keep these headquarters for the use and enjoyment of the people of the United States; and

Whereas a wise patriotism suggests that additional grounds should be added to this national memorial, and that certain desirable additions and improvements should be made to this property; and

Whereas it is especially becoming and proper that the soldiers who died in the great cause, and who lie in scattered and unnoted graves in the vicinity, should be gathered into a common and designated resting-place: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay for the purposes named the sum of $25,000, to be paid to the treasurer of the Washington Association of New Jersey, for the purpose of enlarging and improving the grounds, collections, and buildings of Washington's headquarters at Morristown, N. J., and for the purchase of ground in which to place the remains of Continental soldiers, and to mark the spot with a suitable monument.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, as the resolution sets out fully and clearly all of the facts, and the object of the appropriation of $25,000 which is asked, I will not occupy the time of the House by explaining it further, but will reserve my time to answer any questions that may be made in opposition.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did I correctly hear the bill—there was some confusion here when it was read—that it provides that the Government shall make an appropriation of $25,000, which is to be paid to some private association in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. KEAN. Yes, sir. This association, I will say, has been chartered by the State for the purpose of keeping up these grounds.

Mr. STORM. Is there a report accompanying this?

Mr. KEAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. KEAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 197) authorizing the Secretary of War to assist in canceling the debt, and in enlarging and improving the grounds and collections of Washington's headquarters in Morristown, N. J., and in securing suitable ground in which to gather the remains of Revolutionary soldiers there buried, and in erecting a monument over the same, beg leave to report it favorably and to recommend its passage.

The resolution gives to a patriotic association which has for years had the premises in charge $25,000, with which to improve and enlarge the famous Washington's headquarters at Morristown, N. J.

Morristown is the last, though its merits would entitle it to be first, of those spots sacred to Revolutionary memories which have asked the aid of the National Government in the patriotic task of commemoration. Spots memorable as the theater of a single heroic act, or of a single dramatic scene, have all received aid from the national Treasury. Groton has received $5,000; De Kalb, $10,000; The Cowpens, $20,000; Monmouth, $30,000; Newburg, $25,000; Saratoga, $30,000; Bennington, $40,000; Yorktown, $100,000; but Morristown, where Washington and his army spent the two long winters of 1778-'79 and 1779-'80, now ask aid for the first time. It asks it under circumstances which entitle the request to special favor. Congress is asked to complete a work which private munificence and State aid have fostered. Ten years ago citizens of New Jersey contributed $17,000 and bought the headquarters and the plot of land appurtenant. They repaired the house, filled it with furniture and relics of the times that were past, and gave it to the public of all the States. To assist in its maintenance the State of New Jersey annually contributes $2,500.

It is now the wish of the association, into which the gentlemen who bought these headquarters have incorporated themselves, to secure $10,000 with which to pay a mortgage debt now on the property; $2,000 with which to purchase and add to the collection certain valuable relics and mementoes; $4,000 with which to buy additional land about the old homestead fitting and necessary for the security and dignity of the place; $2,000 with which to inclose the grounds with a substantial wall; $2,000 with which to recover the bodies of officers and soldiers who died during two winters of sickness and exposure, which now lie scattered in the neighborhood, and to reinter them in one cemetery, and $5,000 to erect in this cemetery a suitable monument or other memorial to mark the graves of those who died one hundred years ago for their country.

These are all proper objects, and the sums appropriated for each, based upon careful estimate, seem to your committee to be fixed with that economy which is more generally displayed when improvements are made with private rather than with public funds.

The committee believe there is no need of argument to induce their fellow-members of Congress to take the committee's view of this matter. Were anything necessary, they would think it would be nothing more than the statement that this roof has sheltered more of the famous men of the Revolution than any other in our land. Generals, statesmen, foreign envoys, and members of the Continental Congress all gathered here to meet the great rebel chief. Here came Hamilton, and Greene, and Knox, and Steuben, and Kosciuszko, and Schuyler, and "Light-Horse Harry" Lee, and "Mad" Anthony Wayne, and Israel Putnam, and Benedict Arnold. Such a spot belongs to the whole country, and should be cherished by it.

Mr. KEAN. I yield now such time as I may have to my colleague.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to give $25,000 to inclose Washington's headquarters at Morristown, in the State of New Jersey, to be expended mainly for two objects.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me the time has expired for debate.

Mr. PHELPS. I understood the report was read in opposition to the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania controlling five minutes in opposition asked for the reading of the report. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PHELPS. This bill asks $25,000 with which to free from debt and to improve Washington's headquarters at Morristown, and to buy a piece of ground, into which may be gathered from neighboring and unmarked graves hundreds of Revolutionary soldiers who now sleep about it. Yorktown, Bennington, Saratoga, Newburg, and many other spots have properly received aid from the national Treasury. But Morristown has this special merit: It was the scene not of one, but of many incidents. Here Washington's army spent two winters, and under the roof of the old mansion came to visit their great commander nearly all the heroes of the Revolution.

But aside from its national historical value New Jersey asks aid because she as a State and her citizens have already done much.

More than twelve years ago private citizens bought and refitted these headquarters. They contributed over $20,000, and ever since the association, which was formed for the purpose, has kept them open as a source of pleasure and instruction to all their countrymen. The State now aids them by contributing annually to the cost of maintenance $2,500. And this application is now made to the National Government because the citizens and the State of New Jersey have done their part in buying and keeping for the nation this great memorial.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The hour under the special rule has expired.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 341) providing for printing the second annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1885; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1885.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, from the Committee on Agriculture, also reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 342) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move to dispense with the morning hour, my object being to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. STORM. I ask for a division, because that cuts out the hour assigned for reports of private bills.

Mr. RANDALL. It cuts out private bills but promotes the public business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] that the consideration of private business has already been dispensed with for this day.

Mr. STORM. By what action?

The SPEAKER. By the vote of the House.

The motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. That is not a privileged report.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. WELLSBORN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. At the last sitting of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in the consideration of the pending bill section 2 was reached. By unanimous consent general debate was postponed until this section should be reached, and by like consent debate was limited to four hours, two in favor of and two against the section. The Clerk will now report the section, after which the general debate will be in order.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the committee will be disposed to dispense with the formal reading of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the section?

Mr. TALBOTT. I understand it is still open to amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The first formal reading of the bill has been dispensed with, and it is now being read for amendments. Does the gentleman from Maryland insist on the reading of the second section?

Mr. TALBOTT. I do not.

Mr. THOMAS. I reserved the point of order on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood.

Mr. THOMAS. And before amendments are offered I want that point of order disposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the point of order has been reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation. The general debate was postponed till this section should be reached. Had it taken place before the reading of the bill for amendments of course the point of order would have been determined when the section was reached, and the postponement does not interfere with what otherwise would be the regular order. The point of order is reserved, and will be determined after the conclusion of the general debate.

Mr. THOMAS. That is all I want.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair is informed by the Clerk there was an amendment pending to the preceding section, which was not disposed of yesterday.

Mr. HUTCHINS. That was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] in relation to the eight-hour law, and I made a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, which is an amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 415 insert the following:

"Allowance for reduction of wages under the eight-hour law such sum as may be required in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics heretofore or at present employed by or on behalf of the Government at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., between the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics under the eight-hour law, and the date of the passage and approval of this act, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor, as contemplated by the spirit of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, commonly known as the eight-hour law. And the money hereby appropriated and necessary to pay such claims shall be made immediately available, and be disbursed by the Navy paymaster stationed at said Naval Academy under the direction and supervision of the superintendent thereof.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I am compelled to insist on my point of order. This amendment is new legislation, and makes an indefinite appropriation. It may be very meritorious, but it should be in a separate bill.

Mr. FINDLAY. Of course it is only proper to discuss the question which arises on the point of order. It is not proper now to go into the merits of the case, and I shall not depart from the rules of propriety in this discussion.

The point of order, of course, arises upon this much-quoted paragraph 3 of Rule XXI, and, I suppose, arises under the first clause of that paragraph, which reads:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Now, of course if this amendment provides for an expenditure which has not been previously authorized by law, it is amenable to the point of order. If it does not, it is not so amenable. We must then see what the law is.

If you will refer, Mr. Chairman, to section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, which codified the act of the 25th of June, 1868, you will find as to all laborers, mechanics, and employes in the employ of the United States, when they do a day's work, which is a day of eight hours and no more, this section prescribes in terms that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for the class of persons I have described. The law was dormant until the 19th of May, 1869, when the President of the United States undertook to give it effect by executive proclamation. In that proclamation President Grant, referring to the act and citing the terms of the act I have quoted, said:

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby direct that from and after this date—

The 19th day of May, 1869—

no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of such reduction of the hours of labor.

Well, sir, on May 18, 1872, there was ingrafted on an appropriation bill an amendment precisely similar in terms, almost in totidem verbis, to the one I have sent to the desk. That amendment was adopted, and it required the auditing officers of the Treasury Department of the United States to ascertain the balances due the workmen, mechanics, and laborers of the United States by reason of the fact that they had been working more than the legal day prescribed by the statute, which was eight hours. Under that act of the 15th of May, 1872, the laborers in the employ of the United States received the difference to which they were entitled for a period measured from the date of the original act, the 25th of June, 1868, down to the date of the proclamation of the President, the 19th of May, 1869.

Now, sir, if that is true, with all deference to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] who has raised this point of order, "the boot is on the other leg." It is not my amendment that seeks to change existing law. My amendment simply seeks to carry out the law as it is. But if his point of order should be successful he would defeat the law as it is. Now, sir, I have offered this amendment in good faith, believing that it does not change existing law within the meaning of this rule. With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a hazy notion about the effect of this Rule XXI. It seems to be taken for granted that if an amendment makes any change of law whatever the rule becomes operative. Not so. The rule becomes operative only by reason of the fact that there is not merely a change of law, but that that change carries with it some appropriation which is not provided for by existing law, or carries with it some increase in expenditures. If these conditions do not concur the rule is not operative. Now, I humbly submit that, in this case, these conditions do not concur, for, while there will be an increase of expenditure there will be no change in existing law—this being an amendment offered in good faith for the purpose of carrying out the law as it is.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have grave doubts whether this proposition is germane to the bill, and certainly there is no law now existing in relation to the object sought to be reached, because if there were this amendment would not appear here. In addition to that, the amendment is retroactive in its character. It proposes to provide upon this bill a mode of adjusting claims against the Government under the eight-hour law. I clearly, in my own mind, adjudge this proposition to be subject to the point of order that it is new legislation, and that it does not propose to reduce any expenditure. The proposition in itself may be just and right, and, as a separate measure standing alone, I am free to say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] that I would be in favor of making provision for adjusting these claims, but not here, and not in the manner proposed by his amendment to this bill.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, that is always the way when anything is to be done to which gentlemen object—it is not to be done in this way or at this time, but in some other way and at some other time—

Mr. RANDALL. Well—

Mr. FINDLAY. And that other time is never; and the consequence is that it is never done. Now, what if this is retroactive? Is there anything in the rule against an amendment being retroactive?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman surely admits that the retroactive feature of the amendment must be in the nature of new legislation.

Mr. FINDLAY. But is there anything in the rule which provides that an amendment shall not be retroactive?

Mr. RANDALL. The rule says that no new legislation shall be permitted upon an appropriation bill unless it retrenches expenditures.

Mr. FINDLAY. The rule provides that any amendment is legitimate unless it changes existing law, and at the same time—

Mr. RANDALL. Read the rule.

Mr. FINDLAY. Oh, I have read the rule, and heard it discussed a thousand times.

Mr. RANDALL. You had better read it once more.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally. A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had returned, in compliance with the request of the House, the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building at the city of Key West, Fla.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8030) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, there is a very narrow point involved here, a point that does not permit of any varied or extended discussion. I have already said, and can only repeat, that the vital, essential, fundamental question in this case is: Does this amendment change existing law? For if it does not, it is not within the operation of the rule. Now I say that this amendment does not change existing law, because we already have a law upon our statute-book which provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work—a law which lay dormant from 1868 until it was revived for a short time by the act of 1872, but which is as much law as any other act upon the statute-book. The object of this amendment is simply to carry out that law and to carry it out now—to do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says ought to be done, but which he is not willing to have done at this time and in this place.

Mr. RANDALL. On this bill—

Mr. FINDLAY. At this time and on this bill, but on some other impossible bill.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. FINDLAY. On some other occasion that will never arise, then according to the gentleman this ought to be done; and I suppose if possible it will be done.

Mr. RANDALL. Existing law can not be changed on an appropriation bill, unless the provision retrenches expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maryland to hold that this does not change existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. I consider that it does.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to hear an argument on that—not a judgment.

Mr. RANDALL. If a provision of this kind was not necessary to make the law as the amendment proposes, it would not be offered.

Mr. FINDLAY. The argument seems to be that if this did not change existing law it would not be offered. Do we not constantly pass declaratory laws? In this amendment we propose simply to declare what the law is, and provide means of carrying it out. It is not a change of existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment, in my judgment, is not germane to this bill. If there be any appropriation bill to which it is germane, it is the deficiency bill.

Mr. FINDLAY. Oh, of course; it must be some other bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I submit that this amendment proposes a change in the law as to the manner of adjusting these claims. Besides, I wish the Chair to make inquiry whether there is not already pending in this House in a separate bill a proposition of substantially the same nature as this amendment. If there is, I submit that as an additional point.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me quite important that we should not vary the practice of this House and the character of this bill by permitting this amendment to go upon it. This is the naval appropriation bill, providing for the pay of officers and men of the Navy, for the construction of ships, &c. I have never before known a proposition made to pay by a provision in the naval appropriation bill a debt of any kind. Such provisions have uniformly been confined to the sundry civil bill and the deficiency bill; and even with respect to those bills the provisions admitted have, I believe, related solely to the auditing of accounts. But this amendment, if anything, is a claim, and does not belong to any of these appropriation bills. The Committee on Appropriations would have no jurisdiction of it under the rules. It should properly have gone to the Committee on Claims. I trust we are not going to convert each of these appropriation bills into a vehicle for carrying through every possible claim that any gentleman may see fit to bring before the House.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to have read at the Clerk's desk a provision of the law of May 18, 1872.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to direct the attention of the gentleman from Maryland to the provision of that act, which the gentleman says is identical with this. Does not this amendment propose a change as to the method of adjusting these accounts? Does it not in that respect change what has been the law heretofore?

Mr. FINDLAY. It makes no change, Mr. Chairman, so far as concerns the mode of adjustment—

The CHAIRMAN. Then what is the necessity—the Chair is asking for information—what is the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. FINDLAY. I say that it makes no change so far as concerns the mode of adjustment provided in the act which I was about to ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it make any change whatever in existing law?

Mr. FINDLAY. It simply makes provision—

Mr. BUDD. I would like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. FINDLAY. One at a time! I will first answer the question of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the amendment in the view of the gentleman from Maryland change existing law in any particular?

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not see that it does—that is to say, it does not change existing law in the sense contemplated by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it in any sense?

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir; because it makes a new provision—

Mr. RANDALL. That is it.

Mr. FINDLAY. But it does not change existing law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It merely makes a new provision for payment.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to suggest to the Chair that this amendment merely makes provision for payment; and that is what an appropriation bill is for. If there is existing law under which this amendment proposes to make appropriation the amendment would seem to be proper. A bill of this kind is the proper place to make an appropriation in accordance with existing law; and in making the appropriation it is competent for the House to accompany the appropriation with such limitations as it may choose to make.

The CHAIRMAN. And those additional conditions, to which the gentleman from Maine refers, would not, in the judgment of the gentleman, change to that extent the law as it now exists?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Not within the sense of the rule.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have lost sight of the main point in this case. We may admit that an amendment changes existing law, and still it is not amenable to the rule if it does nothing more.

Mr. RANDALL. It must retrench.

Mr. FINDLAY. An amendment is not amenable to the rule unless it does something more than change existing law. If it simply asks a change in the existing law and does not in any way increase expenditure, then it is not amenable to criticism. Now we have the eight-hour law, and those men who have worked one minute beyond eight hours a day are entitled pro rata for that moment which they have worked. We are making provisions to give them that to which they are entitled under existing law.

It does not in point of fact change existing law; it is simply addition to the law as it now is for the purpose of carrying out that law.

Mr. BUDD. While there is a law known as the eight-hour law providing simply for eight hours of labor, is there any law providing for the payment of any labor in excess of eight hours?

Mr. FINDLAY. Beyond a doubt no. That question is answered easily. The law does not fix the price.

Mr. LONG. I understand the gentleman to say they are entitled now by law to this money.

Mr. FINDLAY. I think so.

Mr. LONG. Are they entitled to sue in the Court of Claims?

Mr. FINDLAY. No.

Mr. LONG. If they are entitled by existing law why can not they go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. FINDLAY. There was a suit brought in the Court of Claims by a man by the name of Martin.

Mr. LONG. Have they brought suit in the Court of Claims?

Mr. FINDLAY. No, sir. There was a suit, I will answer my friend from Massachusetts, brought by a man of the name of Martin. You will find it in 94 United States.

Mr. LONG. What was the result?

Mr. FINDLAY. The result was that the claimant in that case got, under the act of 1872, all the award to which he was entitled between the date of the passage of the act and the proclamation of the President. As to all after the proclamation of the President down to the date of his discharge he lost the action.

Mr. LONG. Then under existing law he is not entitled.

Mr. FINDLAY. He is entitled under existing law if you admit the existing law is that eight hours constitutes a day's work. I say there is an ample assumption there that he is entitled to be paid for every minute beyond eight hours.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question, but we can say most emphatically in reference to it, there are millions in it. [Laughter.] The principle to be settled by this amendment was discussed in a bill pending here in the House at the last session. As I remember the statutes (and, Mr. Chairman, I hope you have them before you and will correct me if I misstate them) under the eight-hour law it is still competent for the Government to employ men at so much an hour or something of that kind. Special contracts can be made. Under contracts men have been employed and have been paid. My recollection is there has been a judgment of some court holding they had no claim against the Government.

Mr. HAMMOND. There was a decision by the Supreme Court.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided it twice.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been decided twice by the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been decided there was no claim whatever.

Mr. FINDLAY. If my friend will permit I will tell him about that decision.

Mr. HISCOCK. Under these special contracts the Supreme Court decides no claim exists. Therefore you must have a law from the very foundation, recognizing a claim decided by the court to have no existence. And you have to go further than that even and provide for the adjustment and payment of the claims. It is therefore clearly new legislation.

I have made remarks on the floor perhaps of a partisan character, but, thank God, I have not the feeling against the Democratic party as to desire to see it commit itself to this legislation. I remember that my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] made a speech on this subject in which he presented the figures giving the amount involved, and I think it is somewhere between twenty-five and fifty millions of dollars. It includes men on the public works. To a certain extent it covers those engaged on river and harbor improvement. It is far-reaching in its influence and extent. It is no trifling question, and if it is the intention of Congress to pass a law giving the value of ten hours' labor for eight hours' work in cases where there have been special contracts made and the contracts have been discharged, it is due to the country, and I say it in the interest of economy, after the manner of gentlemen on the other side, that we should do it with our eyes open, so there may be no doubt what is intended.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to make this remark: I think the spirit of our rule, if it means anything, is that every committee appointed by the House shall have jurisdiction over certain subjects and that the subjects belonging to that committee shall be considered by it. The Appropriations Committee is not a committee on claims. It is simply a committee organized for the purpose of reporting appropriations here clearly and indisputably authorized by laws.

Now we have a proposition before us that belongs exclusively to the Committee on Claims, and is not germane to any appropriation bill, not more so than a thousand other claims pending here would be. If we are to refer every claim on all subjects, no matter how the claim may originate or what its purpose may be, to the Committee on Appropriations, and thus hastily consider them, you can ascertain in what confusion the House would soon be placed. I say it is the duty of the Speaker of this House and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to scrutinize these subjects and not permit to go on these appropriation bills one single item except such as are clearly authorized by law and within the rules of the House.

This is but a claim, and I have no doubt is pending before that committee now, and if they report in favor of the claim no doubt the amount will be appropriated and it will be paid; but do not undertake to ring it in here on an appropriation bill and take the committee by surprise in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this amendment is new legislation in the contemplation of clause 3 of Rule XXI, and being new legislation is not in order unless it retrenches expenditures. It is not claimed that its operation would be to retrench expenditures; and consequently the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition contained in section 2 of this bill is one to provide a mode of constructing and to appropriate money to build a navy. I propose to speak to this question as briefly as possible. It is called a proposition to increase the Navy.

I believe the United States should have a navy. It is now practically, in the light of the improvements and advancement in the matter of constructing vessels of war and their armament and armor, without any. It is not a jest to say that with the splendid corps of highly educated and experienced naval officers the United States has, and the superabundance of deep water it owns, that it would have a great navy if we only had war ships for these officers to command upon this water.

I am going to speak to-day for a navy, and I shall therefore be obliged to oppose the plan contained in this bill for an increase of the Navy. The bill, or rather the proposition in the bill for an increase of the Navy, if it should become a law, and its provisions were fully executed, would not, as we shall see before I close, give us a vessel that we would dare to put in the water.

Mr. Chairman, the importance of this great subject to our Republic can not be magnified. The great statesman, Daniel Webster, speaking of the extent of the British Empire, said of its morning drum-beat, that it "follows the sun in its course, keeps pace with the hours, and circles the earth with one continuous strain of the martial airs of England." While this can not be said of the widespread extent of the United States, it may be said that our territory infolds a continent, and the length of our exposed coast-lines on our boundary is more than one and two-third times the distance around the world at the equator.

The total length of the Atlantic and Gulf coast line of the United States, including bays and harbors, but not the small indentations, is 13,000 statute miles. I speak of the coast line from near Saint Johns, New Brunswick, on the northeast around with the Atlantic coast and the Gulf of Mexico to Brownsville at the mouth of the Rio Grande. The Pacific coast line along the west of the States of California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, measured in the same way, is 3,750 statute miles; that of Alaska, without including the indentations, is nearly 21,000 statute miles. The shore lines of the archipelago of Alexandria from 54° 40' to the head of Chatham Straits alone includes 8,500 statute miles. The American coast line from Duluth to the mouth of the Saint Lawrence River, measured along the coast of Lakes Superior, Huron, Saint Clair, Erie, and Ontario, including one hundred and sixty-two miles of connecting rivers and straits, is 3,782 miles, and the Saint Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to its mouth, measured on the map of the United States, is seven hundred and thirty miles; a total coast line on the great lakes and rivers of the north of 4,512 statute miles.

The whole exterior United States coast line is thus found to be 42,362 miles in length, equal to about one and two-thirds times the circumference of the earth at the equator. And, Mr. Chairman, this does not compass the whole of the water defense required in time of war. Great interior rivers, bays, straits, and sounds, such as the Mississippi River, the Chesapeake, Delaware, and Mobile Bays, and the Straits of Juan de Fuca and Puget Sound—all these coast and interior lines to-day are defenseless in ships, in guns, and in forts; for whatever we have would not stand for an hour before the great war vessels of some of the third and fourth rate nations of the earth. We have no forts for coast defense, I may say, in which American soldiers would dare be taken. As has been said by some of the distinguished officers of our Army, they would prefer to take them outside of these old and now worthless and obsolete forts, and take them along the gravel and sand of the seashore at the water's edge, rather than risk the dangers that would be incurred by being within the so-called fortifications while under fire.

We are then, Mr. Chairman, in the situation of an overgrown, extremely tender child; whenever we are touched we are to be hurt, and without power of striking back. We need sea-going vessels, line-of-battle ships, cruisers to police the high seas, gunboats, torpedo-boats, &c., for coast defense. We should protect American shipping in foreign ports and on the high seas to secure that now much-needed extension of American commerce. We should, in order to preserve the dignity of our great, progressive nation, have ships that would be fit to be sent into foreign ports to command the respect that is due to our flag and to secure the protection that is due to the American citizen when he is in foreign lands or upon foreign seas.

The people who cry out against a navy now would be the first to cry out against the Government and the inefficiency of Congress if war were to come. I pray we shall have no more war; I have seen enough of it and my country has seen enough of it; but the way for this country to have a foreign maritime war is to keep on in her fatal course of remaining without the means of adequate defense and the power of aggressive resistance. "In peace prepare for war" is an ancient saying, and it is well enough. But our national policy should rather be to in peace so prepare that no nation or combination of nations or despotisms of the earth will ever dare declare war against us. We should keep pace with the spirit of the age and maintain the respect of the other nations of the world. Other nations are preparing and have prepared for conflicts upon the sea and to protect their coasts, their cities, and their people.

There has been much said in times gone by about our nation being extravagant in paying out money to build a navy. My curiosity was excited, and I looked to the amounts we have expended since the close of the war of the rebellion in constructing ships. And I have made a comparison with the expenditures by other nations that rank among the first of the world, and also by other nations that rank far below the United States. In looking at this I found some things worth referring to by way of comparison.

England, France, Germany, Sweden, Italy, Russia, all those countries, have been struggling to keep in the advance in the matter of the best and most improved vessels and armament that can be put afloat. They have since 1865 expended large sums of money. England in the matter of making appropriations for the maintenance of her navy alone, since the time named, has appropriated—I state it in round numbers—$306,000,000. The United States in the same period has appropriated $263,000,000 in round numbers. The expenditures for the construction of new vessels since 1865 up to the year 1884 in England were $91,000,000; in France, $121,000,000; in Russia, $83,000,000; in Italy, $38,000,000; in Sweden, $15,000,000; in Germany, $27,000,000. The United States has expended $4,907,000 in the completion of perfected ships of war. In the same time Sweden, feeble in point of numbers and population, feeble in the matter of great material resources, could outnumber us almost ten times in that which goes to make efficiency in time of war.

I here give a table of comparative expenditures of certain nations, taken from Admiral Porter's report of November 12, 1884:

Tabulated form showing the expenditures of foreign nations for the maintenance of their navies during the last fifteen years, as well as the amounts expended for the construction of new ships since 1865; also a statement of the expenditures by the United States for the same purposes during the same periods of time.

Chili, a small strip of country supposed to be poor in resources, on the west coast of South America, had a single ship afloat that could go from San Diego, the southwestern point of California, to Juan de Fuca Straits, on the north of Washington Territory, and take every fort and every ship and every town and city belonging to the United States along that coast, and we could not pretend that we would be able to resist the power of that single vessel of this fourth-rate power of South America. I allude to the ship Esmeralda, owned by Chili. And now we see this proposed bill looks to building a hull and putting it on the stocks at a period not less than two and a half years from this time—not even to putting it in the water.

Mr. Chairman, before I come to the provisions of the bill, I feel constrained to refer to a matter that has often been quoted in one way or another, and that is that in our last war we got along with such ships as we then had; that we blockaded a great coast line, and in that way succeeded in doing something with a navy.

But, Mr. Chairman, we blockaded a would-be confederacy that had not in the beginning a boat even, not to say anything of a ship of war. And yet the very existence of our Government was almost staked—for on that depended the recognition by foreign powers of the confederacy—when the Monitor and the Merrimac came in conflict in Hampton Roads. If it had turned out that the Monitor under the heroic Worden had been disabled and not the Merrimac of the confederacy, England and France and other nations of the world were ready to recognize the Southern Confederacy. Fortune and the blessing of God shone on us in that conflict and in others. There was not only the Merrimac as a rebel ram, but there was also the Albatross, that, after an unsuccessful attempt to get to sea, went back and was chained up to the bank of the Roanoke River at Plymouth, and the whole of our Navy was breathless, believing danger impending to it and to the Government until that most gallant hero Lieut. William B. Cushing, in the dark hours of the night, with a torpedo-boat, stole in, put his torpedo under the rebel ram, and blew her up. We were in danger from that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Simply in the interest of history and as a matter of historical justice, I desire to correct the suggestion made by the gentleman [Mr. KEIFER] that the Navy of the United States was in fear and trembling from the ram Albatross after she had been tied up to the wharf at Plymouth. On the contrary, that ironclad, formidable as she was, had been met in the open waters of Albemarle Sound by three of the wooden gunboats of the United States Navy of the same class referred to almost contemptuously yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox]—three wooden gunboats of the Tallapoosa class—and, in a fair fight upon open water, was defeated by those wooden gunboats, disabled and sent back to Plymouth in such a condition that she never attempted to escape until she was destroyed by Cushing.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have been willing to give way to the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who is naturally very jealous of the reputation of the Navy, and especially as to its exploits in the late war, but I can not give time to the repetition of history in the short period of sixty minutes allotted to me to-day. I have said that that vessel was defeated and taken back to Plymouth on the Roanoke River, where it was blown up after the most extraordinary preparations on the part of the United States, rather than risk its coming out to meet the three great powerful wooden ships that were waiting. The Tennessee was a rebel ram at Mobile, and it did not get to sea. The Atlanta was below Savannah and it did not get to sea. The Nashville was at Mobile and was driven up into the Alabama River at the time of the capture of Mobile. This ends the list of the rebel rams. Not one of them, I may say, ever got out to sea. If they ever had got out (and some of us know the anxiety the country felt at that time) it would have secured at least the recognition of the would-be Southern confederacy by foreign powers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the bill. I will not stop to read the provisions of the second section consecutively, but in general I may say that the bill undertakes to abolish the present Naval Department of the United States, and to substitute for it something that is a little her-maphroditical in character, made up in part of the Navy, but of civilians in larger part. The Secretary of the Navy is to preside over a board of seven, consisting of three persons to be selected by the President of the United States from the Navy and three others from civil life; and when I read this bill I feel that although I live in the central West, far away from any portion of our seacoast, I am at liberty to talk about naval affairs, because hereafter we are to have civilians to determine what sort of a navy we shall build. The proposition is not to consult the wisdom that has accumulated in the naval service—old admirals and commodores and captains and other distinguished naval officers—but to resort to other sources. The board is to be appointed by the President of the United States, and is to consist of six persons besides the Secretary of the Navy, who is to be its president.

By the terms of the bill this board "shall meet in Washington within thirty days subsequent to their appointment, and, after organization, prepare and cause to be printed and sent to all ex-Secretaries of the Navy, all officers and retired officers of the line and staff of the Navy; to prominent ship-builders, marine and naval architects, engineers, and others interested in such matters, a circular asking for such suggestions, advice, and information as they may see fit to offer." And this is to be furnished within such time as the board may fix. Now, I wish to observe that in the first incipient step toward getting a vessel—not a ship, because this bill does not provide for one completed at all—these civilians are not even asked to furnish advice as to what shall go into the vessel in the way of boilers or other machinery. Nothing in the way of equipment is to be furnished. Nothing is to be advised about in reference to armament, which is regarded in time of war as rather important for a war ship. If we are to have an armored vessel, nothing is to be advised about that will resist the shot of the swiftest projectiles now hurled by the improved heavy guns of the world. We are to have then only under this bill a vessel built without armor; for armor is not a part of the building of a ship in a naval point of view. Thus we are to have no advice furnished with reference to the machinery, the equipment, the armament, or the armor of a perfect vessel. What a vessel of war this would be! And when are we to get even that?

Now we come to another thing: After replies to these circulars are received, this civilian board—for I must so call it—is to determine, from such advice as may come to it, the general classes and character of the vessels to be constructed.

Right here let me observe, that if there should not be any responses from distinguished people familiar with ship-building; if the responses come from those most indifferently qualified, from those who maintain for instance that we should build a wooden navy, then it would come to pass that we have only a plan here for building obsolete wooden ships. I am not going astray on this point; for, twenty-four hours only ago, I heard from the voice of the eloquent and distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] the prediction, if not the expression of a hope, that the time would come when we would wage our maritime wars in wooden vessels. Suppose that a distinguished man like the gentleman from New York should be called upon to send advice in reply to a circular, and should advise building a wooden ship!

Others say, speaking of a hundred years ago or three-quarters of a century ago, that naval warfare was then waged in wooden ships. The gentleman from New York further says that Nelson fought only with wooden ships. Ah, it is true that great naval hero at the siege of Calvi, in Corsica, in 1793, where he lost an eye, and at the battle of Trafalgar in 1805, where he lost his life and won a place in Westminster Abbey, fought in a wooden ship. But, Mr. Chairman, the time has gone by when vessels are to be lashed together, and men are to fight on shipboard with short hand implements of war. Marines no longer need guns in their hands. The improvements in explosives and projectiles, in cannon, in the means of projecting at high velocity heavy ball or shot have put an end to the possibility of naval warfare ever being carried on again as it was in the days of Lord Nelson. He never saw a ship that would have resisted the shot from a modern naval gun on board of one of the improved line-of-battle ships of to-day for twenty minutes at a league's distance. Such vessels as he fought in would now disgrace the age in which we live. Projectiles are now thrown with such force as to penetrate the most highly improved steel armor for resistance eighteen inches in thickness and through 2-foot iron or composite armor plate. Again, this civilian board is to act upon the advice it may get in the manner specified, not on what it might get if it were left to seek information in such methods as it might choose. And I may say here, in passing, that whatever is known in the way of improvements in the building of cruisers, gunboats, turret-vessels, rams; whatever belongs to the armored ship and the vessel that is to police the sea; whatever belongs to vessels that are needed in the defense of our harbors and our coasts; whatever is now known the world over in reference to these matters is now to be found on file in the Navy Department. And all that is known by the maritime powers of the earth about machinery, equipment, armament, and armor for all classes of the most highly improved ships of war is also known there and in other Departments of our Government.

When this board has read the answers to its circulars and decided upon a class, and accepted one of each of four classes and awarded a premium of $10,000 for the best of each of four classes, and $5,000 for the second best of each of four classes, then these vessels must be ordered to be built, although at that very hour it may be known that there are other better plans and classes of vessels which it would be wise to construct. The draughtsman of this section had a good gambling idea, if I may be allowed the expression, for he looked out for the second horse. It is proposed to give $10,000 for the plan of the best vessel of each class that is accepted, and that we are required to build, and then $5,000 for the next best plan of each which we reject, and never will build.

Allow me to say with much deference, but upon competent information, that a perfect plan and specifications, which would comprehend the structure of a good ship with armament and machinery and armor and everything requisite, could not be procured for $10,000. But I think this board will receive some propositions. There are plenty of old plans of ships lying about the Navy Department; and I venture the suggestion that there are plenty of geniuses—we sometimes call them "cranks"—within the sound of my voice who have old plans which they have been carrying around under their arms for years, and they will now have an opportunity to file them. Somebody may bring here the plans and specifications of the Esmeralda, the great Chilean vessel. Somebody may obtain and file the plans and specifications of the great Italian ironclad Le Panto, now being built, the greatest vessel now constructing in respect to the depth of water it will draw, or the iron-clad Riachuelo, belonging to Brazil. You may get plenty of plans and specifications from the Clyde and file them; but when you have all these before your board you have nothing there but what is already in the Navy Department, with all the additional improvements that could be combined with the originals.

But, as I have already observed, we are to set aside the present naval advisory board and go on with a new one. What a great calamity it would be if after this civilian board has decided upon a plan and ordered a vessel built, or rather the hull built, without armament or machinery or armor, some Congress should criticize the board and set aside its work, and order something else! In that way we shall never get a ship.

There are three civilians, besides the Secretary of the Navy, on the proposed new board. We have now an advisory board. I believe there are two civilians required to be on it, and for many weeks and months there has been a vacancy in that advisory board because the Secretary of the Navy could not find a man qualified who would accept the place. Ah! gentlemen shake their heads. They can find plenty of men who will accept the place, but are they to be indifferent fellows like some of us? We have not been able to keep the present advisory board full, although the salary fixed by law is $5,000 per year, because we could not get men skilled and qualified for the place. The new board is to fix the designs and determine the relative merits, and so on, as I have already said. And they are to complete this herculean work and report to the President of the United States by the 1st day of December next.

Then it has another office to perform. That board is supplemented with responsibility by being directed to consider whether the five unfinished monitors now in process of construction or already partly constructed are suffering from their present incomplete condition, and whether they should be completed and armed. It is to review the work of the highly experienced officers of the present board. If this bill be passed we are to say to the country that we are going to wait for the report of a civilian board to find out whether these vessels are suffering from their present incomplete condition.

What if they are? Then I suppose we are to try to apply something to stop their suffering. But they may report they ought to be completed and armed. Then we have lost precious time. We are serving notice on the country that the vessels we have already put large sums of money in, and which are being built in accordance with the most improved plans and specifications in the world, some of them combining the best improvements, in point of construction, machinery, armament, armor, and equipment, of the best ships now in process of construction by England, by Germany, and by Italy—we are giving notice that what we have already done is to be stopped, and we are not to engage in the work of completing anything that can be put afloat. One of these monitors is partly completed in the navy-yard, as I understand it, on the Pacific coast, and there is nothing else there for the protection of that coast. We do not even order that completed.

Mr. ELLIS. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him right here?

Mr. KEIFER. For a question, but I can not allow the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. ELLIS. I wish you to call by name those ships whose types fill out the idea of an American navy.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well; the gentleman will have his way about the order of things. I can say, without being very familiar with this, that the Chicago, a ship of 4,500 tons displacement, is built in accordance with some of the best improved plans of a ship of that class in the world.

Mr. ELLIS. What is her speed?

Mr. KEIFER. Sixteen or more knots per hour.

Mr. ELLIS. How much armor?

Mr. KEIFER. I will give all the monitors, if the gentleman desires; but I prefer to go through in my own way.

Mr. ELLIS. You refer to American ships now being built?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly. I have said they are built partly after the best and most improved plans, or class if you choose to use the word, of ships in the world. I do not believe the gentleman disputes that proposition.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not dispute it. The idea I wish to draw out is this: The gentleman thinks we may safely copy those in further increase of the Navy.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman undertakes to draw his own conclusion without being justified in it. I undertake to say if this country needs a navy we must finish something, and inasmuch as we have the best class of ships the world now knows anything about in process of construction, I would finish those before I would send circulars around the country hunting information on which to make a report at a distant day in reference to vessels which are to be built some years hence.

Mr. ELLIS. Then the gentleman regards those vessels now being constructed as the very best vessels in the world? That is what I wish to get at.

Mr. LONG. Has not an appropriation been made for the completion of these cruisers?

Mr. KEIFER. I have already answered that question by saying that these monitors, the bill itself provides in effect, are not to be finished.

Mr. LONG. Cruisers?

Mr. KEIFER. Some are being finished.

Mr. LONG. All of them.

Mr. RANDALL. The money is given for all.

Mr. THOMAS. Not by this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. No; not by this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. And there is no provision in any law or bill to complete any of the five monitors.

Mr. ELLIS. Provision is made, I understand, for finishing those vessels.

Mr. THOMAS. And armament, too.

Mr. KEIFER. Not the monitors; for by this very bill it is provided that the new board is to examine and report on the propriety of their completion.

The unfinished monitors are the Monadnock, at Mare Island, on the Pacific coast; the Puritan, at Chester, Pa.; the Terror, at Wilmington, Del.; the Amphitrite, at Philadelphia; and the Miantonomoh, at Brooklyn.

I was speaking, when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Louisiana, of the armored vessels unfinished, the monitors. We are to look, according to the bill, to see whether they "are suffering" or not, in order to determine whether they shall be completed or not, and this board is to report on that subject by the 1st day of December, 1885.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are many objections to the scheme in this bill. We are to set up a new naval establishment. We are to have a new class of clerks—of civilians—under the direction of this civilian board. They are to be paid by this bill in accordance with the allowance made to experts and clerks in the Navy Department. Another class of men entirely is to come in. We are to build up a new establishment, and at last we have come to the day when we would be startled and dazed even if we were not hourly looking for astounding things. We have come to the time which of all others would astonish us, and that is when the Democratic party presents to the Congress of the United States a proposition to appropriate an indefinite sum of money for the construction of a navy. I have witnessed my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations on the floor of this House, and everywhere, cry out against an indefinite appropriation for a poor employé of the Government when the sum that was possible under the appropriation was less than $100. But we have by this bill a different condition of affairs in this language:

The necessary money to pay the expenses of the board and its awards—

That is, $60,000; we can determine on that—and for the building of the vessels as herein provided for, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid under the directions of the President of the United States, &c.

The President and Secretary of the Navy may expend $5,000,000 on a vessel or $10,000,000, just as they please. They may go to the uttermost limits; there is nothing to check them; they have the United States Treasury behind them. I am not here, Mr. Chairman, to congratulate Democracy upon taking this advance step in the matter of making unlimited and indefinite appropriations, for I do not believe in it. Some on that side of the House have contended for limited appropriations in the smallest affairs connected with the Government; and now when we are in the closing hours—ay! the closing hours of a Republican administration, and a Republican Executive is about to go out—Democracy sends forth its proclamation that hereafter we are to have unrestricted and indefinite appropriations from the public Treasury. Is that Democratic? Is that the way to launch an incoming administration?

But the President to come in is to have control of this after all. I ought to have said in its proper connection that if we have a favorable report by this board for four classes of vessels or ships to be made the President of the United States is yet to come in and become the law as to whether the vessels recommended to be built shall be built, or rather whether any vessel shall be built at all. He is to say whether anything is to be done or not. After the board has gone through with all of its travails and brought forth whatever it may of perfection or monstrosity the President is to look at it and say whether it shall be allowed to come to anything or not in the world. The whole thing is finally to be determined by him as to whether we are to have not a navy but a ship on the stocks. Nothing nearer a navy is proposed.

Now in order that this indefinite appropriation may be easily reached, it remains entirely within the power of the President, by the terms of this proposed bill, to direct a pay officer of the Navy Department to be detailed, and then he can say in a note to the Treasurer of the United States, "Hand over to my detailed officer $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 to be used by us." All of the ordinary forms of paying out money from the Treasury of the United States, with all of the checks and guards about it, are set aside by the provisions of this bill; and it simply says that the President of the United States shall detail some pay officer of the Navy who shall take whatever money is ordered to be taken out of the Treasury for the purposes herein provided. Is not that advancement? Is not that looking to the matter of getting the money out of the Treasury which my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] so greatly hopes may be accomplished by the incoming Democracy? Here is another method without check at all to reach the money in the Treasury. Mr. Chairman, it is without a parallel in legislation, and I may say that it is so unprecedented that it is suggestive of great danger to the Treasury of the United States.

Last of all in this remarkable section we find:

The provisions of this section shall take effect immediately after the passage of this act.

The Democracy is to come into power a few days or a few hours after this bill takes effect and then it shall become a law! The handling of the public money in this loose way is to begin promptly.

We have had advisory boards. By a law passed on the 5th of August, 1882, we had an advisory board. It was made up of the accomplished, trained, and educated officers of the Navy, with the exception, I believe, of two persons; but it was scientific in its character. That board has labored with all these questions. The Secretary of the Navy was directed by the same act to send out circulars for advice and upon the subject of new ships, &c., and he sent them out, I think, about the 5th of August, 1882; and also later supplemental circulars were sent out, asking for advice upon the matters to come before them. The Navy Department and the present highly accomplished Secretary of the Navy, who is astute, ready, and always alive to give prompt attention to whatever belongs to progress in the Navy and the Navy Department, has gathered up in this and other ways all the information that can be obtained upon this subject, and it is all in that Department now.

This advisory board is incomplete now simply because one civilian member resigned and another could not be obtained at $5,000 a year to take his place, but it is one which possibly might be made complete. This advisory board is to be set aside for a new-fangled one. And those gentlemen, those three distinguished men, as we suppose they are to be learned in engineering, skilled in the science of maritime ship-building, are to be paid the enormous sum of $10 a day and railroad fare; it is not proposed even I believe to pay for their dinners if they should happen to go to New York. They are to have $10 a day for their summer's work and for their deliberations and their business. All the accumulations of science and of learning and of skill and of experience that these persons are to have are to be paid for at the rate of $10 a day. Mr. Chairman, the draughtsman of the bill may have known well what he was about and may have proposed to pay them all they are to be worth. I do not know who they are to be, and therefore I may say that.

It is absurd, Mr. Chairman, and entirely unheard-of, to have a competition in furnishing detailed drawings and specifications for naval vessels. When the general features and essential requisites of a vessel are decided upon it is time enough to prepare detailed drawings and specifications, and skilled draughtsmen in the Navy Department can do this. We have all possible information to determine what kind of vessels should be built, as I have already stated, now in the Navy Department. What is wanted is a determination of the authority to decide in the competition in drawings, specifications, and models.

I have some queries to put that I hope the gentlemen who are responsible for this bill will answer. Are foreign designers to be allowed to compete for the awards? If any person brings exact copies of the plans of foreign or home vessels—for instance, those of the Italian Le Panto or the Brazilian Riachuelo as an ironclad, or the Esmeralda as a cruiser, built on the Clyde for Chili—is he to be allowed with those plans to enter into competition? Who is to be regarded as the proprietor of the plans and receive the prize?

Under this plan, Mr. Chairman, four vessels are to be built, but no limit is fixed as to the cost. A five-million-dollar ironclad may be ordered. All the requirements of existing legislation regulating alterations in plans and requiring the supervision of the board are omitted. If we should adopt some plan that was the best we had and yet not the best, and commence the building of a ship, the law would be such that unless it was changed we could not vary the construction of the vessel in any part, and we would have to complete the thing we started out with. In the two years or more which it would take to finish the vessel, even before we put machinery into her, we would find ourselves in a condition that we should have to build that which we did not want.

If this supposed perfect proposition were adopted, as I have said repeatedly, it would give us a vessel on the stocks without machinery in it, without equipment on it, and if it was an armored vessel, without armor, and if it was to carry guns, an essential for war-ships, we might assume without armament. So that at the end of the time and at the end of the discretion, notwithstanding the indefinite appropriation, we should have a structure upon the stocks somewhere in a navy-yard or somewhere else where it was built by contract that we would not dare to launch, that we could not put into the water because it would have no machinery to run it or manage it. Therefore the whole plan is utterly imperfect and should be rejected.

Mr. Chairman, when, on yesterday, the majority of this committee voted to leave an appropriation of $400,000 in the first section of this bill to finish a ship now twenty years old, finish a ship that has only been partially built, and its timbers not even planked over, we had notice served upon us that the thing was to spend money not to make a navy; for, as I have shown, no part of a navy would be completed under this bill without further legislation. If we carried out all the provisions of this bill, if we finished the ship New York, now, as for twenty years, on the stocks in the Brooklyn navy-yard, we would have a vessel, if war should come, we should never dare to launch or take out of the harbor. You would hear the people of the city of New York cry aloud for appropriations to build stone-boats to take down to the Narrows and sink there, so as to prevent the New York from getting out where it could be captured, and to prevent vessels outside getting in where they could capture New York city and this old hulk of a ship, the New York; and that would be the only way to protect either. The New York, when completed, could not catch anything that was on the sea that was less powerful than itself. It could not run away from anything that belongs to marine naval warfare. Speed in a naval ship is as important as strength. But we are to spend $400,000; and then there is no person who has temerity and courage enough to claim it would be worth anything or be needed for any possible purpose except, as stated on yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the other distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], that we might possibly need it at some time or another to keep school in. That is all.

Now, there are many things that might be said and should be said in reference to this. Among the other queries I desire to put is this:

I would like to ask gentlemen to tell me what four classes of vessels are most needed. What four among the score or more of classes of ships that are now built for naval war purposes—what four are we to select? Are we to have cruisers, monitors, gunboats, or one or more of the dozen different kinds of turret vessels? I would like gentlemen to tell me whether there are to be different classes of cruisers and different classes of gunboats, or whether we are to have torpedo-boats. If I had time I would be able to show that a maritime power that boasts of its strength upon the sea, the power before which all the maritime nations of the world tremble, to wit, Great Britain, is armed strongest for defense through her torpedo-boats.

If we should ever be able to build and complete four good war ships under this bill when a law, which I deny, the country would have but little toward an adequate navy to protect its long coast lines or to maintain war on the high sea.

Besides the completion of the cruisers and monitors now in process of construction I would build and in all respects complete the new vessels of the several classes recommended by the present Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Chandler. With these our country would be so armed as probably to avert war, and if a maritime war came we would in some part be ready to maintain it with a power commensurate with our greatness.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] yield?

Mr. HUTCHINS. On which side does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. McCOID. In opposition to the bill—just for a moment. I simply wish to send up and have read from the Clerk's desk a remonstrance relating to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We respectfully protest against appropriations for the increase of the Navy, and the manufacturing of large guns and other munitions of war, as a means of preserving peace with other nations.

We earnestly pray your honorable body to spare no expense or effort that may be necessary in providing courts of arbitration and other humane and civilized methods of promoting and maintaining friendly relations with foreign countries; for which we will ever pray.

ELIAS JESSUP,
WILLIAM F. SMITH,
ISAAC T. GIBSON

On behalf of Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends.

1st MONTH, 2, 1885.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes of my time to Mr. LONG, of Massachusetts.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if I shall want all the time allotted me, for I rise merely to declare myself with regard to this section of the bill. As I listened to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEFER] and heard his fervid and eloquent statement of the need of a navy and the exposure of our coast, and then heard him argue so strenuously against the proposed and only means of providing for its needed defense, I was reminded of the old story told of a distinguished citizen of my native State, who said he was "in favor of the Maine law, but agin its execution." [Laughter and applause.] There was a great deal of force in many of the objections which the gentleman from Ohio urged against the measure, but they are objections to details in the bill, which are open to amendment. With reference to many of them I fully agree with him, but they can be corrected by the touch of a pen. But I do not agree with him in opposing the general legislation proposed.

The question before the country and the House is the fundamental one whether we shall have a navy at all sufficient for the necessities of the country. That, sir, is an elementary question. It is a question which answers itself. If one of the corner-stones of a man's house has begun to crumble, he does not deliberate; he acts, and makes the foundation secure. One of the corner-stones of our Republic has crumbled. The time has not yet come, sir, when physical power and prowess are not an element of national strength. No nation can steadily hold its own that does not carry with it not only the impression but the fact of its ability to assert and defend itself. It is to that impression and to that fact that little England owes her self-respect and the respect of the world. She may not be holding her own to-day, but she would be holding her own if she were fighting on the sea in defense of her own institutions and not in the invasion of others.

A national flag is a splendid thing, though it be but a broom, so long as it rocks at the masthead; but it is a very poor thing, no matter how gaudy its colors or fine its texture, when it trails in the slime. The very recognition of national power, the consciousness that a nation is able to defend itself and to strike back, is in itself, and without firing a gun, the best protection. It is the very protection and peace which the petition just read at the Clerk's desk, from the Society of Friends, aims to secure, protection at home and abroad—protection to the merchant who builds his warehouse on the seaboard, and to the interior farmer whose interests depend upon the maintenance of relations with the export markets of the coast.

All this is elementary. Yet what, in respect to our seacoast defenses, is the condition of our country which is to-day intrusted to our hands? It is very well for the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSEMER] in his eloquent address to say we have sufficient defense in the hearts of our people, our brave soldiers and sailors. They have brave hearts indeed. So there were never braver hearts than those of the three hundred Spartans who stood at the pass of Thermopylae and resisted the hosts of Xerxes. But the paltriest coward in the Persian ranks, standing a mile from their swords with a Hotchkiss rifle before him, would have laughed at them, and anon moved on in derision over their riddled bodies.

To-day on our ocean border our country is like an unarmed giant, mighty in resources but surrounded by an armed soldiery who hold him at the very point of their bayonets. Our harbors are defenseless; our seacoast is at the mercy of foreign ironclads; our ocean cities are a temptation to the exaction of a ransom of half their value; our Navy is an alphabet of floating wash-tubs. There is scarce a nation so poor as to do it reverence. We have but one ship, the Tennessee, which ranks as first rate; and even as to her the Secretary of the Navy says in his report that as soon as she shall be examined she will be condemned as not worth repairing.

On such wooden ships as we have there is not a single piece of ordnance of more value in modern warfare than a child's pop-gun. This picture has been drawn over and over again, till we are tired of its coloring. Our people ridicule their own navy, and even come to relish as a joke the running down of the Tallapoosa by a coal-barge. They laugh at our naval array as a sort of marine Falstaffian burlesque. And what have we done about it? I have sat here through one session and heard a wrangle between members on one side and the other as to which party is at fault, meantime nobody caring a row of pins about the quarrel and the people indifferent to it. Is it not time to get above this fish-woman's scolding?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will suspend the Chair desires to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that the House, under its standing order, this being Friday, is to take a recess at 5 o'clock to reassemble this evening at 7 o'clock, though ordinarily the hour of reassembling is 8.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the hour for the recess had been extended till 6 o'clock.

A MEMBER. There was no extension.

Mr. THOMAS. There ought to be.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. THOMPSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WELBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House continue in session until 6 o'clock for debate in Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill, and that then the recess be taken until this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the recess be taken at 6 o'clock instead of 5. Is there objection?

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that we now take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, a recess is now declared until 7 o'clock this evening in accordance with previous order. The gentleman from New York, Mr. BAGLEY, will preside at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7 o'clock p. m., Mr. BAGLEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

February 13, 1885.—Amended so as to include bills for the removal of political disabilities reported by the Judiciary Committee and Senate bills on the Speaker's table for the removal of political disabilities.

February 20, 1885.—Amended by providing that to-night's session for pension business shall be from 7 till 9 o'clock.

THOMAS M. McCHESNEY.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7863) granting a pension to Thomas M. McChesney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEONORA A. BOYDEN.

Mr. STRUBLE (by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa) reported back favorably from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 1709) granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANDREW FRANKLIN.

Mr. STRUBLE (by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa) also reported back favorably from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 2272) granting a pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to proceed with business under the order for Friday evening's session.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar, under the special order heretofore made, which has just been read.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order of business be so fixed that members may call up such bills as they may select, the Chair alternating in recognition from side to side in the House, and that the bills reported favorably from the two committees—the Committee on Pensions and Invalid Pensions—where favorable reports are made, shall be given preference and disposed of, and if afterward any time remains the adverse reports may be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WILLIAM LOCKHART.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 357) granting a pension to William Lockhart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Lockhart, late a soldier in the Black Hawk war.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. This man is 80 years old, and was wounded in the Black Hawk war. I think he ought to have a pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALEXANDER WEIDE.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask consideration of House bill 7495, granting a pension to Alexander Weide.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Alexander Weide, late captain of Company C, Third West Virginia Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NEWTON J. BURRIS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I call up Senate bill 1655, found on page 52 of the Calendar, granting a pension to Newton J. Burris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Newton J. Burris, late a private in Company I, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEONORA A. BOYDEN.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent in behalf of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who presented this bill, to consider Senate bill 1709, granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Leonora A. Boyden, mother of Charles F. Putnam, late a master in the United States Navy, lost in the Arctic Ocean, and pay her a pension of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH SANSON.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 7990) granting a pension to Joseph Sanson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph Sanson, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. F. M. NORTON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8189) granting a pension to Mrs. F. M. Norton, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. F. M. Norton, widow of James H. Norton, deceased, late a private in Company G, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE A. WASHBURN.

Mr. EATON. I move to take up Senate bill 1803, granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of George A. Washburn, late major of the Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and brevet brigadier-general, to $45 per month.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It is proposed to increase the pension. I ask therefore that the report be read, so as to show the grounds on which the increase is recommended.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have been informed that this is a very meritorious case, and I shall not insist upon the further reading of the report, but ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. FYAN) is as follows:

As the Senate report covers the facts and evidence in the case, it is adopted by this committee:

[Senate Report 1183, Forty-eighth Congress, second session.]

The claimant, George A. Washburn, late major of the Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers, was pensioned for gunshot wound of left thigh at $12.50 per month from January 17, 1863, the date of discharge. This pension was increased to $25 per month from October 7, 1869. No further claim appears to have been made before the Department.

The claimant now asks that this amount be increased, and presents the following affidavit, made by his attending physician:

"This is to certify that I have made examination of General G. A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers; that I am familiar with his condition and habits for the past year, and I am of opinion that he is totally incapacitated for all forms of manual labor. By reason of wounds received in battle his left leg is of little use, interfering with riding, getting in and out of a carriage, &c., necessitating the constant use of a stick. At frequent periods he can not for days together go out of doors. His rest at night is disturbed by great pain, which requires the attendance of another person to nurse him, and the use of large amounts of pain-quieting medicine. When absent from home he requires the attendance of another, and he is daily in requirement of health-supporting measures. My opinion is that were he to return to his home in the North the nature of his bronchitis and asthma are such that they would speedily prove fatal, at least exceeding dangerous to life. From the painful existence and permanency of his disorders of wound, lameness, asthma, bronchitis, and their complications, as well as his need of support, I would earnestly recommend the case of General Washburn to your consideration."

"C. S. MAY, M. D."

Senator Platt also indorses the statements made by Dr. May, and states that in his opinion the applicant is entitled to an increase of pension.

A. S. Warner, late surgeon Sixteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, certifies as follows:

"I have examined Col. George A. Washburn, formerly major of the Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and I find he received a wound, the ball passing very near the junction of the ilium with the sacrum, passing through the pelvis, badly comminuting the ischium, a part of the ball (a triple one) passing through the scrotum and out, and a part was lodged in the left testis. I am of opinion the disability occasioned by the wound is permanent and total."

Unquestionably this soldier is equitably entitled to an increase of pension, but as the rate of $50 is now the highest allowed for total disability, requiring constant attendance of another person, except in cases covered by the act of June 16, 1880, and inasmuch as this soldier does not require constant attendance, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHRISTIAN ARNDT.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7992) for the relief of Christian Arndt and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Christian Arndt, late of Company H, Ninth Minnesota Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM D. FARNSWORTH.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to take up the bill (H. R. 8152) for the relief of William D. Farnsworth and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Whereas on or about the 23d day of May, 1882, by an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of Almira Farnsworth," approved May 23, 1882, a pension was granted said Almira Farnsworth; and

Whereas said Almira Farnsworth died on the 6th day of June, 1882, without having received her pension certificates, and left a husband surviving her, one William D. Farnsworth, who is old and feeble, being eighty-three years of age; Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William D. Farnsworth on the pension-roll in lieu of Almira Farnsworth, said pension to date from the 23d day of May, 1882, but in all other respects subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments: Strike out all after the word "Farnsworth," in line 4, and insert "dependent father of Edward Farnsworth, late of Company E, Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws; " also strike out the preamble.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM STANSBERRY.

Mr. PRICE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7993) for the relief of William Stansberry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Stansberry, late of Company A, Third West Virginia Cavalry, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA GINN.

Mr. BAGLEY. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2350) granting a pension to Anna Ginn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna Ginn, widow of Benjamin Ginn, late a private in Company F, Fiftieth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES L. ALDEN.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6960) for the relief of Charles L. Alden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Charles L. Alden, of Company C, Second Minnesota Infantry, on the pension-roll at a rate commensurate with his present disabilities.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the bill with the following amendment:

In lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "a rate commensurate with his present disabilities" and insert "the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to ask the gentleman who calls up this bill what pension this soldier is entitled to under the general law. Thirty dollars is the highest pension known under the general law except in special cases.

Mr. STRAIT. The man is entirely blind now.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. For the loss of both eyes he would be entitled to $72.

Mr. STRAIT. The committee did not think he was entitled to $72 and recommended a pension of $30.

The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDGAR L. DUTTON.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call up the bill (S. 1790) granting a pension to Edgar L. Dutton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Edgar L. Dutton, late a private in Company K, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $16 per month, in lieu of the $30 per month heretofore allowed him, as specified in pension certificate 116435.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I should like to know why it is proposed to increase the rate of pension in this case from $8 a month to $16? There ought to be some reason assigned for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have sent for the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report is on the desk. The Clerk will read it.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1790) granting an increase of pension to Edgar L. Dutton, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

A careful examination of this case enables us without hesitation to adopt the Senate report and ask for the passage of said bill. The said report is as follows: "That the Commissioner of Pensions, in his letter transmitting the papers in this case to the committee, makes the following remarks concerning it, namely:

"The soldier was pensioned March 1, 1872, for hernia of right side, at $4 per month, from May 13, 1865, the date of his discharge; at $8 per month from April 14, 1874. His claim for increase on account of heart disease is inadmissible, because there is no record or medical testimony showing existence of alleged disability in the service, nor medical or other satisfactory testimony showing existence at and since discharge."

"The claimant testified in his application for increase that he could not furnish the medical testimony required as to existence of the disability from heart disease while in the service, because it was contracted while absent from his regiment, and states in an explanatory affidavit filed with the Commissioner of Pensions that—

"The disease of the heart, upon which his claim for increase is based, was incurred in the service while a prisoner at Andersonville, Ga., and Florence, S. C., between July 19, 1864, when he was taken prisoner at Peach Tree Creek, in front of Atlanta, Ga., and the middle of December, 1864, when he, with about 10,000 other sick and wounded prisoners, was released on special parole, and never afterward returned to his regiment, and was discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., May 11, 1865."

"He further says that, even though he had been returned to his regiment, it would still be impossible for him to furnish the testimony of the surgeon or assistant surgeon of his regiment as to his condition subsequent to his release on parole as a prisoner, for the reason that both of those officers are dead. But he furnishes evidence establishing beyond all reasonable doubt that at the time of his enlistment he was not only free from heart disease but was a sound and able-bodied man, and other testimony in the case supports the declaration of the soldier that his disease of the heart was contracted as he alleges it was, and that it has continued since the close of the war to the present time.

"He was examined by a board of examining surgeons in April, 1879, and again in September, 1880, and the reports in both instances rate him total for hernia and total for heart disease, and certify that: 'We find his disability, as described above, to be equal to and entitling him to $16.'"

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LUCRETIA G. RIPLEY.

Mr. WAIT. I call up the bill (H. R. 3556) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucretia G. Ripley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucretia G. Ripley, widow of Edward F. Ripley, deceased, who enlisted as a private in Company H, Eighteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and was afterward detailed as night hospital steward at New Haven, Conn., and died on the 10th day of September, 1873, leaving surviving said widow, and issue under the age of 16 years, one child, to wit, Grace A., born January 18, 1875; and that the said Lucretia G. Ripley be paid during her widowhood the sum of $8 per month, to commence on the 11th day of September, 1875.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words "Connecticut Volunteers," in line 8.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CLARINDA HUNT.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I call up the bill (S. 1804) granting a pension to Clarinda Hunt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Clarinda Hunt, the foster-mother of Edwin W. Hunt, deceased, who enlisted in the United States Navy September 15, 1861, and was discharged September 1, 1865, for disability, from which he never recovered.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PATRICK FURLONG.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to Patrick Furlong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Furlong, late a private in Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FERDINAND HUSCHER.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I call up the bill (H. R. 8048) to increase the pension of Ferdinand Huscher.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the copy of the bill sent to the Clerk's desk is not the regular Calendar bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I have sent to the document-room for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be reported, and the Chair will direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Ferdinand Huscher, late a hospital steward in the United States Army, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $24 per month, in lieu of the pension now allowed him.

Mr. MATSON. The Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of this bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That statement is correct, and the bill was reported to the House with a favorable recommendation by the Committee on Pensions on Wednesday.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any amendment reported?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. No amendment except to change the name from "Huscher" to "Herscher."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I reserve the right to oppose the bill until my friend from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] shall give some explanation of it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I would much prefer to have the report here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] withdraw his bill for the present, and meanwhile he may be able to find the report.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The report, they say, has not been printed.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed for the present. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

CHANCEY G. DARRAH.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8187) granting a pension to Chancey G. Darrah.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Chancey G. Darrah, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SYDNEY L. SKAGGS.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sidney L. Skaggs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sidney L. Skaggs, late scout of the Second Arkansas Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sydney L. Skaggs, having considered the same, report as follows: Claimant was a pilot, guide, and scout, serving as such with the Union Army in the State of Arkansas in 1864 and the early part of 1865. That while serving as such he was seriously wounded by the enemy.

Your committee agree with and adopt the report made to the Senate by Mr. JACKSON, of the Committee on Pensions, upon said bill, and incorporate it herewith as a part of their report, as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sydney L. Skaggs, having examined the same, make the following report:

"That said Skaggs, in 1864 and during the early part of 1865, acted as pilot and guide for the different Federal commanders at the post of Clarksville, Johnson County, Arkansas. That in January, 1865, while out with a scouting expedition, under the command of Lieutenant Pitts, of Company A, Second Arkansas Infantry, the party were attacked by rebels or bushwhackers, and during the fight said Skaggs was wounded in each shoulder. The wound in the right shoulder necessitated amputation of the right arm near the shoulder joint. This amputation was made by the regimental surgeon, and he was treated in the regular Army hospitals. He filed his application for pension, which was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that he was not an enlisted man in the military service of the Government, and because the general law made no provision for volunteer scouts and pilots, although regularly employed. Skaggs was between 16 and 17 years of age while serving as scout and when wounded, as aforesaid, in an actual engagement with the enemy.

"Your committee have, in several instances, recommended relief in cases of this character, where the disability or injury was received by the scout in an actual engagement with the enemy. They think such cases constitute a proper exception and come within the spirit of the law. The committee accordingly report back the bill to the Senate with the recommendation that it be passed."

Your committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS M. MCCHESNEY.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up a bill reported this evening (H. R. 7863), granting a pension to Thomas M. McChesney, with amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

The committee propose to strike out the preamble, and to make the bill read thus:

Be it enacted, &c., That Thomas M. McChesney, of the township of Cranberry, in the county of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey, shall be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, as though he had been regularly mustered into the service as an enlisted man in Company N, Ninth New Jersey Volunteers."

The amendments were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CORYDON MILLARD.

Mr. SUMNER, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 6505) granting a pension to Corydon Millard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Corydon Millard, formerly a chaplain in the United States heavy artillery, at the rate of $20 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SUMNER, of Wisconsin) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6505) granting a pension to Corydon Millard, having had the same under consideration, hereby submit the following report:

The claimant, Corydon Millard, enlisted and acted as chaplain of the Fourth United States Heavy Artillery Volunteers, from 1861 to 1866, when he was honorably discharged. He was in active service about four years.

He had a broken leg when he enlisted—that is, his leg had been broken—and he had so far recovered that he appeared to be entirely well, but his application for enlistment was held in abeyance on that account for about two weeks before he was accepted. At various times during his service he suffered from lameness and severe pains in the broken limb, resulting several times in running and great prostration, on account of long-continued and severe exertion and exposure. These conditions grew upon him until his disability was quite marked, and of an aggravated character at the time of his discharge. This disability has never left him, and he is now greatly if not totally disabled. He is 45 years of age, entirely without means of support, and unable to earn his living by manual labor.

The Pension Office can not grant him a pension, on account of his prior unsoundness, and therefore he asks relief by special act of Congress.

While his disability had its origin in the injury received before his enlistment, we are of the opinion that his four years of constant service, with the consequent exposure and hardships, must have added greatly to his disability.

Wherefore your committee recommend the passage of said bill, provided, however, that the same be amended by inserting therein the words "twenty dollars," after the word "of," in line 6 thereof.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why this claimant could not obtain a pension under the general law? Why was it necessary to come here and ask a special bill?

Mr. SUMNER, of Wisconsin. The claimant enlisted in 1861 and served until 1866, over four years. While a boy one of his limbs was broken. He recovered entirely, apparently, from that injury, enlisted and was accepted by the Army surgeons, and served the period I have mentioned. But from the fact that he had received this injury before he enlisted the Pension Office can not grant him a pension; hence the necessity for this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It is put upon the ground that he was injured before he went into the service.

Mr. SUMNER, of Wisconsin. Yes; but he was accepted and served four years. The disability is unquestioned.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA SPELLEN.

Mr. SMITH, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7418) for the relief of Maria Spellen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Maria Spellen, widow of Barnard Spellen, late a member of Company M, Ninth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. BEAN.

Mr. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Bean, late a private in Capt. P. W. Conover's company of Utah militia.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean, beg leave to submit the following report:

The evidence in this case shows, to the entire satisfaction of the committee, that about July, 1849, one Capt. P. W. Conover organized in Utah Territory a militia company for the purpose of defending the people of that section of the country against attacks from Indians which were then threatened.

The company elected officers and was armed in part by order of Brigham Young, then assuming to be and to act as governor of said Territory, with an iron field-piece, six pound caliber. This company is shown to have co-operated with the United States troops then under command of Captain Stansbury, Topographical Engineers, United States Army, and Lieut. J. W. Gunnison, United States Army, and was part of the time at least under the command of one or both of said officers; that while said company was thus co-operating with said United States troops, and under the direction and command of its officers, a fight occurred with the Indians at or near Fort Provo, lasting about three days; that subsequent thereto there were several other fights with the Indians, in which said company participated, and lost two killed and several wounded.

That about August, 1849, said militia company built a bastion on an elevated place within Fort Provo, and mounted it with their six-pound gun. That about September 1, 1849, while said militia company was occupying said bastion at Fort Provo, the Indians opened fire upon some men in the settlement, and gave evidence of a purpose to attack the settlement and fort. This soldier, Bean, was detailed to assist in manning the cannon, and at the second discharge it exploded, wounding him dangerously in the arms and thigh and other places, making necessary the amputation of his left arm below the elbow, which amputation was performed by Surgeon Blake, United States Army, then with Captain Stansbury's command. These are facts substantiated by Captain Conover, Lieutenant Thomas, and several members of the company.

In December, 1852, Bean applied for a land-warrant, alleging his service as above narrated.

This claim was rejected May 14, 1854, "on the ground that the service of Captain Conover's company, in which claimant alleged he served, is not sufficient to entitle him to a bounty-land warrant under act of 1852, which requires thirty days' service, nor under act of 1855, because service was not rendered in a recognized war."

The examiner who passed upon the application found that Captain Conover's company, Utah militia, was in service from February 4 to February 19, 1850, but that no other rolls of said company for 1849 and later than February, 1850, are on file in the Second Auditor's Office, and the Auditor so reports.

In explanation of this it is quite clearly shown by an affidavit of Captain Conover and some of his company that a new muster-roll was made out during the first part of 1850 and sent to Washington, and that the names of those who had been either killed or wounded were left off this roll, and the places of those left off were filled by others who thereafter served with the company.

The Second Auditor, in replying to an inquiry from the Pension Office, under date of May 5, 1854, refers to the "pay-rolls" of Capt. Peter W. Conover's company, and gives the names of a number of the company, some or all of whom made affidavits in the case of the application for a bounty-land warrant.

Your committee find that while the original organization of the militia company may not have been fully authorized by law, yet that it was organized, did service in assisting in repelling Indian attacks, co-operated with United States troops, and part of the time, at least, under the control of United States officers, and that finally it was recognized by the national authorities, and payment for services made to the members appearing on the pay-roll; therefore your committee think Bean should be placed on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID T. HOOVER.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to David T. Hoover.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David T. Hoover, late a private in Company H, Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD KRAEMER.

Mr. HITT. I call up the bill (H. R. 1873) for the relief of Edward Kraemer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Edward Kraemer, formerly a member of Company F, Twelfth Regiment, Illinois State Volunteers, to $24 per month.

The report (by Mr. CULLEN) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1873) for the relief of Edward Kraemer, having had the same under consideration, would make the following report:

Edward Kraemer enlisted as a private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, August 3, 1861. On or about February 25, 1863, at Sister's Ferry, Ga., he was injured while detailed on fatigue duty by the falling of a tree, which broke his left arm, four of his ribs, and injured his head and left shoulder. He was unable to perform military duty afterward on account of said injuries, and was discharged from service June 30, 1865. He was pensioned at $3 per month, and afterward reduced to the rating of $4 per month. He filed requisite proof of soundness prior to enlistment and injury received in service, and records show his treatment in hospital during service. His application for increase was rejected December 24, 1879.

The affidavit of Dr. August Weirich shows that he treated him some time; that said Kraemer is a temperate man; that his right frontal bone was fractured and depressing on his brain, causing neuralgic pains constantly; that he is affected with paralysis of the arm; has several ribs fractured, and is subject to severe, incurable ophthalmia.

The affidavit of Dr. Edward D. Kiltos, late medical inspector of the United States Army, shows that he has been the family physician of said Kraemer since discharge, and he has now become partially insane; that his right side is paralyzed, and he is for the most part confined to his bed and is entirely disabled from work.

The affidavit of Dr. B. F. Fowler, late examining surgeon, shows total disability of said Kraemer.

Your committee have to report that, inasmuch as the law allows a pension of $72 per month to a man totally disabled and confined to his bed, needing attention, this claimant should receive the amount asked for in the bill, which is only one-third of that sum. The affidavits of these physicians show that he is almost totally disabled and confined to his bed.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN K. COOKE.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call up the bill (H. R. 7231) to remove the disabilities of John K. Cooke.

The bill was read.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FERDINAND HUSCHER.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I again call up the bill (H. R. 8048) to increase the pension of Ferdinand Huscher. The bill has already been read this evening.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to strike out in the body of the bill and in the title the word "Huscher" and insert "Hercher," was read and agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] will give some reason for the passage of this bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. This man served sixteen years in the Army—three years during the war and almost continuously afterward in the regular Army. He is drawing a very small pension for a gunshot wound. During his service he contracted a disease of the liver from which he is now suffering. He is in a very dangerous condition. I know the man very well. I have seen him within the last ten days.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

STEPHEN SAUER.

Mr. HOUK. I call up the bill (H. R. 7417) for the relief of Stephen Sauer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen Sauer, father of George Sauer, deceased, who was formerly a private in the Fourth Battery Wisconsin State Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7417) for the relief of Stephen Sauer, having considered the same, report as follows:

Stephen Sauer, the applicant, asks a pension as the dependent father of George Sauer, who enlisted as a private in the Fourth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteers, on the 18th of September, 1861, and died in the service of typhoid fever, at Fortress Monroe, in September, 1864. At the time of his death the soldier had never been married. There is no question that the soldier died in the service in the line of duty. He enlisted when about twenty years of age. The application of the father, Stephen Sauer, was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that "at the time of the soldier's death the claimant was not dependent upon the son for support, as he had enough means for that purpose, and did support himself and family before and after the son enlisted." The mother of the deceased soldier, and wife of the applicant, died about a year after the soldier's birth. Claimant was married the second time.

The evidence in this case shows that the claimant is possessed of from $25 to $1,000 worth of property; that his income has not exceeded from $75 to $100 per year, and that for twenty-four years he has been suffering from disease of the heart, rendering him almost entirely incapacitated for the performance of manual labor. It is shown by the record also that the soldier remitted money to his father at different times as the result of his labor before enlistment, and as part of his pay while in the service, which is corroborated by the testimony of the farmer for whom the son worked and the agent of the express company who received it and delivered it to the father. It now appears that the second wife of the claimant is obliged to do washing to assist in supporting the family, as well as other manual labor. At the time the evidence was taken he had one sick daughter at home.

In the opinion of your committee the case presented by the claimant is one that should be favorably considered. The evidence is somewhat conflicting as regards his age, making it anywhere from 70 to 80 years. The necessities that compel his wife to do washing and support him in addition to her self appeal to your committee strongly as one presenting strong equities, and after giving the son to the service of his country, and who served about three years and died in the service, thus depriving him of the staff of his old age, your committee think that the Government should do no less than to provide a partial support for the father in his declining years. Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by inserting in the sixth line thereof, after the words "Stephen Sauer," the word "dependent." With this amendment, and upon the grounds herein stated, your committee report the bill back to the House favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to insert before the word "father," in line 6, the word "dependent," was read and agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THEODORE LEVERON.

Mr. WINANS, of Michigan. I call up the bill (H. R. 301) granting a pension to Theodore Leveron.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theodore Leveron, late a private in Company M, Third Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 301) granting a pension to Theodore Leveron, respectfully report:

That Theodore Leveron enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company M, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, October 11, 1861, and was honorably discharged August 3, 1865.

May 2, 1874, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging gunshot wound of left arm, received at Hopkinsville, Ky., July 30, 1863—was also thrown from his horse at Cadiz, Ky., in the fall of 1863, causing injuries of the head—which was rejected, February 27, 1883, as to gunshot wound, on the ground that soldier was not in line of duty at the time of receiving said injury, and no pensionable disability from injury to head since discharge.

It appears from the evidence in the case that the soldier had an altercation with a citizen at a place of amusement in Hopkinsville, Ky., on or about the 20th day of June, 1863. The next day after this, as soldier was passing the place of business of the citizen, Savage by name, he came out and caught the soldier by the collar, and shot him with a pistol which he held in his right hand. At the time of the shooting soldier was detailed as messenger at the military telegraph office, and was on his way to his breakfast at the time he was assaulted and shot. The citizen was arrested by the military authorities, but whether he was placed on trial for the offense is not disclosed by the evidence.

Capt. Albert Slov, of Vincennes, Ind., testifies (November 9, 1882) that he was captain of claimant's company in the service, and corroborates the statements of claimant from facts gathered at the time of the shooting, and to seeing the wound after its infliction.

John P. Kullehn, of Wheatland, Knox County, Indiana, testifies (November 9, 1882) to the fact that he was a member of claimant's company and regiment, and to the shooting of the soldier by Savage at the time and in manner above detailed; did not see the shooting, but heard of it immediately after its occurrence.

C. P. Hollingsworth, of Bruceville, Knox County, Indiana, testifies (November 9, 1882) that he was the first lieutenant of claimant's company, and to the fact of the wounding of the soldier by Savage at Hopkinsville, as indicated by other witnesses; that the shooting was without provocation on the part of claimant; that he believes that said shot was given solely because Leveron was a Federal soldier.

Claimant was on detached duty at the time he was shot, and under regular orders.

We think the evidence in the case justifies the conclusion that the soldier was shot by the citizen, Savage, while in the line of duty, and that the controversy was not provoked or encouraged by the soldier, and that the injury to the claimant is clearly due to his military service, and that he should receive a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUT. NATHANIEL JOHNSON COFFIN.

Mr. HAYNES. I call up the bill (H. R. 4393) for the relief of Lieut. Nathaniel Johnson Coffin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, arrears of pension to Nathaniel Johnson Coffin, late first lieutenant of Company K, Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry in the late war of the rebellion, in accordance with section 670, pension laws, and that this act shall be construed as extending to the time of his discharge at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, as a sergeant of Company H, Ninth United States Infantry, in the war with Mexico, on the 22d day of August, 1848.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4399) for the relief of Lieut. Nathaniel Johnson Coffin, submit the following report: Lieutenant Coffin is a hero of two wars, and his physical and mental condition entitles him to the kind consideration of his country. May 4, 1847, he enlisted for service in the Mexican war. He served as a private until the war ended, and received a medal for gallant conduct at the storming of Chapultepec. An honorable discharge was given him August 2, 1848. Lieutenant Coffin again enlisted, September 27, 1862, as a private in Company K (Capt. M. T. Betton), Thirtieth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, to serve in the late rebellion. He was promoted to be first lieutenant of said Company K early in 1863. Afterward, in May, 1863, while stationed with his company on the banks of the Nansemond River, in Virginia, to check the enemy's advance on Norfolk, he received a wound on the skull, which probably caused a pressure of bone on the brain.

This wound, it is claimed, induced severe and continued pains in the head, mental confusion, and a partial loss of memory for several years. At any rate, in consequence thereof, Lieutenant Coffin resigned his command and was honorably discharged June 9, 1865, at Fortress Monroe.

There is in evidence an affidavit of Captain Belton, commanding Company K, Thirtieth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, who states that Lieutenant Coffin was of sound body and mind at the time he was mustered into service; that—

"When he was discharged he was subject to insanity, and other ways sick in quarters, from injuries received while in the performance of his duties on picket on Nansemond River, in Virginia, in May, 1863, when Norfolk was threatened by the enemy; that said N. J. Coffin, then promoted to first lieutenant under my command, was seriously wounded on the head at the above-mentioned time while in the performance of his duty in actual service."

Benjamin F. Winn swears that he—"Was a subordinate officer under Lieut. Nathaniel J. Coffin while picketing on the Nansemond River, in Virginia, and herein state that said lieutenant was wounded on the head in an engagement on the picket line in the month of May, A. D. 1863."

The Senate Committee on Pensions, during the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, made an extended report on this worthy case, the voluminous facts thereof being well condensed. The Senate report concludes as follows:

The fact seems to be that claimant is demented to an extent of incapacity; that there appears to be reliable evidence of his being sound mentally and physically at the time he was mustered into service, and became demented while in such service from his wounds in the head or otherwise. The medical evidence regarding his wounds is to the effect that he bears scars on the spot of the alleged wound, but the physicians are unable to say how such scars were received, whether from a wound in battle or not; that a portion of the bone seems to press on the brain, and that the claimant is very sensitive to any pressure upon this spot. There is an uncertainty existing as to how he received his wounds, as the claimant himself can only say that he was wounded in some way while on the above-stated picket duty, and became insensible at that time; can give no particulars in the premises as to how the wound was received, but alleges having been wounded at the time and place designated.

There is a mass of affidavits and other facts which leave no doubt of the justice of Lieutenant Coffin's claims. He lost his health in the service, and now in his old age is entirely unable to earn a living. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment increasing his pension to $20 a month.

The substitute reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read and agreed to, as follows:

That the pension now granted to Nathaniel Johnson Coffin, late first lieutenant of Company K, Thirtieth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, in the late war of the rebellion, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $20 per month.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES BEDELL, SR.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I call up the bill (H. R. 2327) for the relief of James Bedell, sr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of James Bedell, sr., for a pension on account of the death of Samuel Umstead, a soldier of Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, shall be heard and determined by the Commissioner of Pensions in all respects as if the said Samuel Umstead had been the son of said James Bedell, sr., as for the purposes of said pension application he shall be taken to be.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill S. 2327, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

The effect of the Senate bill as passed is to give to the claimant arrears of pension. He has never had any title to a pension. This committee and the House have refused to give arrears by special act in all cases except where it has been shown that by some fault or negligence of an officer of the Government the right to arrears has been taken away from the claimant. We believe James Bedell, sr., should be pensioned as the dependent father of Samuel Umstead, as he was; to use the language of the Senate report, to all intents and purposes his father; but to avoid giving arrears in a case where we think it would not be proper to give arrears, we report back the said Senate bill and ask the adoption of the accompanying amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MATSON. There is an amendment to that bill in the form of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in the possession of the Clerk. The bill will for the present be passed over informally, to be taken up again when the substitute has been found.

ISABELLA TURNER.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call up the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Isabella Turner, widow of Oscar D. Turner, late a sergeant of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment of Maine Volunteers, on the pension-roll, and to pay her a pension from the death of her husband, March 14, 1862, subject to the general pension laws should she again marry, and as to the rate of pension.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2009, granting a pension to Isabella Turner, widow of Oscar D. Turner, late sergeant Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers, have examined the same, and report favorably, recommending the passage of the same, with an amendment by striking out the words "and to pay her a pension from the death of her husband, March 14, 1862."

The evidence shows that the soldier contracted chronic diarrhea and other disability in the service, in line of duty, which ruined his constitution, and that ever afterward he was greatly enfeebled and disabled from manual labor; that his power to resist disease was diminished thereby, so that he yielded to a slight attack of cold, which resulted in pneumonia, of which he died March, 1862.

The widow is left without means of support, and the evidence satisfies your committee that the real cause of his death was contracted in the service. It is a just case for relief.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out the words "and to pay her a pension from the death of her husband, March 14, 1862," was read and agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET B. HARWOOD.

Mr. BREWER, of New York. I call up the bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Margaret B. Harwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret B. Harwood, widow of Rear-Admiral Andrew A. Harwood, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. ROBINSON, of New York) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 7513, after duly considering it, reported it back, recommending its passage on the following statement of facts:

Rear-Admiral Andrew A. Harwood entered the Navy January 1, 1818, and died August 28, 1884, having been over sixty-six years in the service, during which period the Department states that "his personal and official records are unblemished."

The Navy Register shows that he was on active duty, either afloat or on shore, forty-one years.

Early in his career he attracted the attention and secured the esteem of two of the most distinguished and gallant officers in our naval history.

As a midshipman, under the command of the celebrated Commodore David Porter, he assisted in the capture of a piratical schooner and her barge in the West Indies. The present head of the Navy, Admiral Porter, then a boy of ten, was with his father at the time, and authorizes the statement that his favorable knowledge of Admiral Harwood began at that time, and continued through the whole course of a service always useful and efficient, and in many respects highly creditable and valuable in its character.

The details of that service are given in the subjoined papers, which include the memorial of his widow asking for a pension, marked A, supported by statements from the Navy Department, B and C; from Commodore Luce, D; Admiral Porter, part of D; Medical Director Lansdale, E; and Lieutenant Kimball, F.

From these papers it appears that Admiral Harwood was a lineal descendant of Benjamin Franklin. That, inheriting from his ancestor industrious habits and a thirst for knowledge he devoted himself at an early period in his professional life to the ordnance branch of the service with so much zeal and efficiency that he was sent to Europe in 1844 as a member of commission to visit the foundries and dock-yards of England and France; was afterward member of a board to prepare ordnance instructions for the Navy, and to make the necessary investigations and experiments. With occasional intermissions he continued on ordnance duty, having charge of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography during the first years of the war, until assigned to a more active sphere in command of the Washington navy-yard, and of the Potomac flotilla, which held the long line of the Potomac against the confederate forces.

Of the value of his ordnance services the naval officers whose testimony is subjoined speak in strong terms. "There is no doubt," says Commodore Luce, "that the high character of the ordnance of the United States Navy and of the gunnery of that day (1858-'61) was due in a very great degree to the labors of the board of which he was an active member." Many details showing the nature and value of his ordnance services appear in the statement of Lieutenant Kimball.

Subsequently, while employed on light-house duty, and after he had been placed on the retired-list, he devoted his leisure hours to the preparation of his book on "Naval Courts-Martial," which, in the language of Commodore Luce, "at once took a high position as a standard authority." It "is followed in all military trials in the Navy," says Lieutenant Kimball, who regards it as the beginning of a new era in such trials.

The thorough knowledge of military courts indicated in his book led to his assignment, at the suggestion of Admiral Porter, to do duty as Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy, the last active employment in which he was engaged.

The report from your committee of March 1, 1884 (H. R. 608, first session Forty-eighth Congress), contains a list of cases in which pensions have been granted to widows of naval officers. To that list may be added the widows of Rear-Admirals McDougal, Beaumont, Middleton, Stirling, and Sands, and of Commodore Watson, to each of whom a pension of $50 a month was given by acts passed during the first session of the present Congress.

Satisfied that Mrs. Harwood is in needy circumstances, and that her case is quite as strong as any of those above referred to, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the undersigned, Margaret B. Harwood, respectfully sheweth—

That she is the widow of the late Rear-Admiral Andrew A. Harwood, of the United States Navy.

That the said Harwood was born on the 8th October, 1802; entered the Navy as midshipman on the 1st of January, 1818, and died on the 28th August, 1884.

That during his unbroken connection of sixty-six years with the service his official and personal records were, in the language of the official order announcing his death, "unblemished."

That the Navy Register shows that he was employed in active service more than forty-one years.

That the several papers herewith submitted show:

1. That while a midshipman he was on duty, first, in suppressing the slave trade on the coast of Africa, and afterward, under the late Commodore David Porter, in cruising against pirates in the West Indies, having assisted in the capture of a piratical schooner and her barge.

2. That early in his professional career he devoted himself to the study of ordnance, beginning when that branch of the naval service was in its infancy, and adhering to it and becoming identified with it to such an extent that when the late war commenced the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy was committed to his charge.

While on ordnance duty, in 1844, he was member of commission to visit the dock-yards and foundries of England and France, and to report on improvements in naval gunnery. As a consequence of the report of this commission, he was appointed member of a board to prepare the ordnance instructions of the Navy, and to make the necessary investigations and experiments.

He was subsequently member of a board to revise ordnance instructions. Referring to this latter duty, an officer well qualified to judge says: "There is no doubt that the high character of the ordnance of the United States Navy and the excellence of the gunnery practice of that day was due in a very great measure to the labors of the board of which he was an active member." (See outline, subjoined, No. 3.)

During the first year of the war he was Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, from which he was transferred to the then important command of the Washington navy-yard, and of the Potomac flotilla, holding in the latter capacity the long line of the Potomac against the confederate forces.

He was subsequently assigned to duty on the Light-House Board, on which he continued nearly five years.

From the Light-House Board he was taken to perform the duties of Judge-Advocate General of the Navy, a position he held until 1st October, 1871.

While on light-house duty, after he had been placed on the retired-list, he devoted his leisure hours to the preparation of his work on naval courts-martial, which is referred to in the accompanying documents (Nos. 3 and 5) as a "work which at once took a high position as a standard authority," "followed in all military trials in the Navy."

Your memorialist respectfully calls attention to the fact that her late husband, though frugal, self-sacrificing, and economical in his habits, left very little property, not enough for the maintenance of his widow, his unmarried daughter, and several grandchildren who are in a dependent condition.

Your memorialist therefore prays that a pension of $30 a month be granted her, being the same amount allowed the widows of other officers whose rank was the same as that of her late husband.

In support of the various averments and allegations herein above set forth, your memorialist begs leave to refer to the following papers herewith submitted:

1. General order of the Navy Department announcing the death of Admiral Harwood.

2. Transcript from records of Navy Department, indicating services of Admiral Harwood.

3. Outline of Admiral Harwood's official career, prepared by Commodore S. B. Luce, and indorsed by Admiral Porter.

4. Statement of Medical Director Philip Lansdale, U. S. N.

5. Statement of Lieut. W. W. Kimball, U. S. N.

And your memorialist will ever pray, &c.

MARGARET B. HARWOOD.

Outline of Admiral Harwood's official career, by Commodore S. B. Luce.

Harwood, Rear-Admiral Andrew Allen, United States Navy. Son of John Edmund Harwood and Elizabeth Franklin Bache, granddaughter of Dr. Benjamin Franklin. Born in 1802, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

Appointed midshipman in the United States Navy in 1818, his first vessel being the gunboat Saranac.

His next service was on board the sloop of war Hornet, from 1819 to 1821, engaged in cruising in the West Indies, for the suppression of piracy and the slave trade.

In 1823 he was on board the Sea Gull, serving with the barges belonging to the expedition of Commodore David Porter against the pirates. On July 3 of that year assisted in the capture of the piratical schooner Catalina, of three guns, and her barge, by the barges of the Gallinipper and Mosquito.

In 1844 he was on ordnance duty, during which time he was appointed member of a commission to visit the dock-yards and foundries of England and France, and to report on improvements in ordnance and naval gunnery. As a consequence of the report of the commission he was appointed member of a board to prepare the ordnance instructions for the United States Navy and to make the necessary investigations and experiments. Subsequently, 1858-'61, he was again on ordnance duty and member of a board to revise ordnance instructions and to prepare a new edition, with a view to bringing the work up to the times. There is no doubt that the high character of the ordnance of the United States Navy and the excellence of the gunnery practice of that day was due in a very great measure to the labors of the board of which he was an active member.

August 6, 1861, he became chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography; 1862, in command of Washington navy-yard and Potomac flotilla.

Again, he was secretary of the Light-House Board, member of examining board, and for a time occupied an office analogous to that of Judge-Advocate-General. It was while on light-house service that he produced his work on Naval Courts-Martial, in which he presented, in a "collective and concise form, the leading principles of military jurisprudence, together with the distinguishing laws and regulations which govern the practice of United States naval courts-martial." This work, which at once took a high place as a standard authority, is noted for its scholarly style and thoroughness of construction. It may not be out of place to remark, however, that owing to the very limited demand for works of that character it was not a financial success.

For the generation to which he belonged Rear-Admiral Harwood was an officer of unusual attainments, and exhibited in an eminent degree the character of a Christian gentleman in all the varied relations of life.

S. B. LUCE, United States Navy.

I cheerfully subscribe to the above, and am of the opinion that no officer's widow is better entitled to a pension than Mrs. Harwood.

DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.

E.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1884.

I was intimately acquainted with the late Admiral A. A. Harwood for about forty years. He was a thorough gentleman in every sense of the word, a consistent Christian, a most loyal citizen, and, as an officer of the Navy, one who set a worthy example in his strict attention to duty as a subordinate, and an intelligent and temperate exercise of his authority as a commanding officer.

Admiral Harwood inherited from his grandfather, Benjamin Franklin, a love of study and an aptitude for scientific knowledge which made his services of peculiar value to the Navy. After having attained, by voluntary training, an education much beyond that of the naval officers of his generation, he made a special study of ordnance, and was one of the earliest and most efficient of the officers who aided in the development of that most important branch of scientific warfare. His distinguished services in that direction caused him to be selected as Chief of the Ordnance Bureau.

In his work on courts-martial, now a standard authority, he has left a monument which will be a worthy memento of his intelligence and industry.

During the late civil war Admiral Harwood held a most important position—that of commandant of the Potomac flotilla, holding the long line of the Potomac against the confederate forces.

Having thus served his country most actively and efficiently, both in peace and in war, during a long life, he has died, leaving his family very insufficiently provided for.

Letter from Lieut. W. W. Kimball.

U. S. S. TENNESSEE, New York, December 15, 1884.

MY DEAR MR. LUCE: To me it is apparent that even such a brief and imperfect summary of his record as I can give from references at hand will show that the Government of the United States is deeply indebted to the late Rear-Admiral A. A. Harwood for his continuous, brilliantly able, and entirely unselfish efforts in behalf of his country during the fifty-four years he served her on duty in the Navy.

Entering upon his naval career as a midshipman January 1, 1818, he was at once ordered to arduous and dangerous duty in cruising on the coast of Africa, where, escaping the worst effects of the deadly climate, he served three years, and was then selected as one of the officers of Porter's expedition against the West India pirates, an expedition that in suppressing the horrors of piracy on and near our own coast was of almost inestimable value to the commerce of the United States and of the world.

It was during the two years of this service that Midshipman Harwood distinguished himself in the action at Signage Bay, which resulted in the capture of the piratical schooner Catalina and her barge by the barges Gallinipper and Mosquito.

For the succeeding ten years he was doing routine duty afloat and ashore, but doing it in such a way that he was marked among his associates for his extraordinary abilities and unswerving devotion to duty, and was in 1833 distinguished by his flag officer by being detailed as special messenger to take to the United States from Naples the ratified treaty with that power.

A few years later he began the work of improving the material and reorganizing the service of the ordnance of the Navy, a work which he followed unflinchingly for twenty years, and which resulted in the greatest benefit to the country.

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James Bedell, sr., as dependent father of Samuel Umstead, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

VIRGINIUS FREEMAN.

Mr. LIBBEY. I ask to take up the bill (H. R. 8032) to relieve the political disabilities of Virginus Freeman, of Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring thereto), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from Virginus Freeman, of Virginia.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

COL. SAMUEL M. THOMPSON.

Mr. STEVENS. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Col. Samuel M. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel M. Thompson, a private in the Mexican war under Col. E. D. Baker, and colonel of the Fourth Illinois Regiment of Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

The report (by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Col. Samuel M. Thompson, adopt the report of the Senate committee, and recommend favorable consideration of the same, as follows:

"The papers on file in the Pension Office show that Samuel M. Thompson enlisted in Company D, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at Springfield, Ill., on June 9, 1846, for service during the Mexican war, and was with his regiment until left at Matamoras on account of sickness, December 14, 1846. The records include a certificate of disability given by Surgeon William M. P. Quinn, United States Army, dated at 'Camp near Matamoras, December 11, 1846,' and recommending the soldier's discharge on account of 'debility from chronic rheumatism, jaundice, &c.' It is shown that the soldier was a sound, healthy man at enlistment, and that he has been disabled ever since his service in the Mexican war, having been unable to do any work much of the time, and having been pronounced incurable in 1857, about twenty-eight years ago. For the period of thirty-eight years the soldier has been lame, and not able to rest on the side of his lame hip. At no time since his discharge has he been able to do more work than half the labor of a man in ordinary health. As a result of his disability his heart has become affected.

"For years past the soldier has been dependent on his step-children for support. He did not understand his rights under the pension laws, and did not apply for a pension until 1879. His claim was allowed the following year, and he has drawn a pension at the rate of $12 per month since October 4, 1880. He is now nearly 84 years old, and his days are numbered. In view of his long-standing and increasing disability, clearly resulting from his military service, of his dependent condition, and of his advanced age, the committee are disposed to regard favorably his application for an increase of pension, with a view to providing him with the ordinary comforts of life during his last days, and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out the word 'fifty,' in the ninth line, and inserting the words 'twenty-five.'

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JONATHAN C. HARRISON.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask to take up for consideration a bill (H. R. 5998) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan C. Harrison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $30 per month, the name of Jonathan C. Harrison, late a private in Company B, Fifty-second Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This is a bill fixing the rate of pension. I thought the rate of pension was always to be fixed in the Pension Office, unless there was something in the case beside disability. I think the report had better be read to show what it is.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5998) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan C. Harrison, having considered the same, report as follows:

Jonathan C. Harrison, while serving as private of Company B, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, had his arm amputated below but within one and a quarter inches of the elbow, for which wound he draws $24 per month pension. Had the amputation been made at or above the elbow the pension would have been $30 per month. There appears no issue between the claimant and the Commissioner of Pensions as to the uselessness of the stump, and as to the fact that an elbow amputation would not in any wise have been of greater injury to him for all practical and personal purposes than at the point amputated. But the Commissioner rules that he can not grant an increase because estopped by the words of the present law, which requires absolute incapacity for manual labor as a precedent to increase from $24 to $30 per month, a requirement not demanded in any case from those suffering from amputations at or above the elbow.

In view of the facts, your committee are of the opinion that claimant Harrison should be put on the same footing with this class of wounded soldiers, and should not be held to the rule of incapacity for manual labor no more than they, and are therefore of the opinion that he is clearly entitled to the desired increase of $6 per month, and recommend that the bill pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. J. B. WALBACH.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7229) to relieve the disability of J. J. B. Walbach.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the disabilities imposed upon and incurred by J. J. B. Walbach, of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, by virtue of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, removed.

The report (by Mr. TUCKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom has been referred House bill No. 6124, beg leave to report as follows:

The petition of the citizen J. J. B. Walbach, of Baltimore, Md., is hereto annexed, and the committee see no reason that it should not be granted, and therefore report the accompanying bill as a substitute for the bill referred, and recommend that the said substitute do pass.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

I hereby pray that my civil and political disabilities may be removed. And in duty, &c.,

J. J. B. WALBACH.

BALTIMORE, June 1, 1894.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES DYE.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8229) to grant a pension to James Dye.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Dye, late an assistant surgeon in the service of the United States, of the Twenty-first Regiment of Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS FERGUSON.

Mr. ENGLISH. I call up the bill (H. R. 7303) to restore the name of Thomas Ferguson to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Ferguson, late a member of Company B, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. H. GILLEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I call up Senate bill No. 2587, granting a pension to William H. H. Gilley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Gilley, late a private in Company G, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, said pension to commence from the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HUGH O'NEIL.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I call up the bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, said Hugh O'Neil being the dependent father of John O'Neil, late a private in Company I, Mounted Riflemen of the Indian wars.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM PAUGH.

Mr. BAGLEY. I desire to call up House bill 5581, granting a pension to William Paugh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Paugh, late a private in Company A, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment: Strike out in line 7 all after the word "volunteers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. GRENNON.

Mr. PARKER. I offer a bill and report for present consideration, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Grennon, widow of William H. Grennon, late of Company M, Fourteenth New York

Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $16 per month, from and after the passage of this act, subject to all other provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

A. W. STARK.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8186) to remove the political disabilities of A. W. Stark, of Virginia. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from A. W. Stark, of Virginia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to inquire whether there are any more favorable reports that have not been acted upon by the committee?

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to make a report if the committee will rise, and we can then go right back into committee again.

Mr. PRICE. I have a bill that I will send up which is favorably reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

ANDREW FRANKLIN, ALIAS ANDREW M'KEE.

Mr. PRICE. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2272) granting a pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee, late a private in Capt. M. Armstrong's company of Ohio militia, from August 22, 1812, to March 7, 1813, and from July 23, 1813, to August 18, 1813, in the war of 1812, to take effect from the time of filing his application for a pension.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 7 strike out "March 7" and insert "February 22."

In lines 11 and 12 strike out "time of filing his application for a pension" and insert "passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I have an adverse report—that is, I should say rather that the committee are divided thereon, which I desire to call up for consideration from the table. My friend from Kansas stated that he desired to have the committee rise for the purpose of making a favorable report in a case. I therefore yield to him for that motion.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. MORRILL. My idea is that we will go back immediately into committee after making the report.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the Private Calendar had instructed him to report various bills with sundry recommendations.

CATHARINE HELTON.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8069) granting a pension to Catharine Helton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

CATHARINE HELTON.

Mr. MORRILL. I now call up the bill just reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, being the bill (H. R. 8069) granting a pension to Catharine Helton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Helton, mother of Calvin Helton, as shown by claim numbered 25035, on file in the Pension Office.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In the sixth line, after "Helton," insert "dependent;" so it will read "dependent mother," &c. Strike out of the bill all after the word "Helton" where it occurs the second time, in line 6, and insert "late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Volunteers."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In the absence of the gentleman who reported it, I call up the bill (H. R. 8244) granting a pension to John A. Landon.

The bill was read.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. This is a bill reported by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay. I submit it does not come within the order for the business of this evening, which is set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions and bills removing political disabilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is unfortunate for the man for whose benefit this bill has been reported.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I will not insist on the objection.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. It is the duty of the Chair to observe the terms of the order under which the House meets. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] is recognized.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. The bill which I desire to call up is also reported from the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and therefore does not come within the order.

NANCY B. LEACH.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I call up the bill (S. 2204) granting arrears of pension to Nancy B. Leach.

The bill, which was reported with an adverse recommendation by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, as follows:

Whereas Nancy B. Leach, mother of Bradford Leach, late of Company I, Twelfth New Hampshire Volunteers, was placed on the pension-roll on the 25th day of June, 1881, and from which date payment of said pension was made: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, to the said Nancy B. Leach a pension at the rate prescribed by law from the date of the death of the said Bradford Leach: Provided, That all sums previously paid on account of pension to the said Nancy B. Leach be deducted.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as the hour is so near at hand when the committee must rise pursuant to the order of the House, there is not time for the reading of the report.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD, and that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] be permitted to make a statement and that I be permitted to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to this bill.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. If there be no objection let the reports of the majority and minority of the committee be printed in the RECORD, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] and myself can each make a statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. MATSON. I shall have to object to the passage of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has suggested that there was not time to read the report.

Mr. MATSON. Then let the committee rise.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I hope the gentleman [Mr. MATSON] will give me an opportunity to state briefly the facts in this case, so that it may be considered by the committee to-night. It is not necessary that these lengthy reports should be read. They can be printed in the RECORD.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2204) granting arrears of pension to Nancy B. Leach, submit the following report:

We find that claimant is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 per month, as dependent mother of Bradford Leach, a deceased soldier of the war of the rebellion, said pension commencing June, 1881. This bill provides for the payment of a pension at the same rate from the death of her son up to June, 1881, or the time from which the original pension was granted. The act of March 3, 1879, provides:

"All pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from any cause which originated in the service since March 4, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to discharge, and if such disability occurred after the discharge, then from the date of actual disability or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension, provided the application for such pension has been, or is hereafter, filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the application."

The application for pension in this case was received at the Pension Office in Washington, June 23, 1881, nearly a year after the expiration of the time fixed by law under which arrears of pensions could be allowed.

It is claimed that the application was actually made and executed in proper form February 11, 1879, or more than sixteen months prior to the expiration of the limitation; that this application was executed at the office of David H. Hill, in Sandwich, Carroll County, New Hampshire, and by claimant left with said Hill, who was her duly authorized attorney, to be placed in the United States mail; that through his neglect and gross carelessness it was mixed up with other papers in his office where it lay for twenty-eight months; that it was then accidentally discovered and placed in the mail. Your committee are of the opinion that claimant should be held responsible for the neglect of her attorney. The simple fact that she executed the papers, and never filed them, does not entitle her to any more consideration than is extended to hundreds of others who, from ignorance of the law or from unforeseen casualties, failed to make their applications within the required time.

The rule of the committee has been to afford no relief by special act unless it could be clearly shown to be the fault of the Government that the papers were not filed in time. Where it has been proven that the papers were actually received before the expiration of the limitation at the Department and afterward lost relief has been granted, and in the Agnel case Congress went still further, and said where the Commissioner of Pensions had, prior to the expiration of the limitation, erroneously instructed a claimant that her case was not a pensionable one under the existing law, it was proper to afford relief by special act. But Congress has uniformly refused such relief in cases where it was shown that claimants had forwarded their applications to their attorneys in Washington in time to reach that city before the expiration of the limitation, and such attorneys had failed to receive them, or receiving them had neglected to file. To allow the relief asked for in this case would open the doors for thousands of similar cases arising under almost all conceivable circumstances.

After the expiration of the limitation in the arrears of pensions act, and before this claimant's application was ever received or filed in the Pension Office, more than 30,000 other claimants, with cases doubtless as meritorious, had filed their claims. Shall all these cases be passed by and their rights disregarded to give relief in this particular case?

The views of this committee upon the question of arrears of pensions have been so clearly stated that they can not be misunderstood. In the report made May, 1884, upon bill H. R. 491, to repeal the limitation in the arrears of pensions act, your committee emphatically declared:

"The limitation referred to is a practical and unjust discrimination in favor of a portion of our maimed and disabled soldiers and their dependent relatives and against another portion equally meritorious and equally deserving. Your committee believe that such discrimination is utterly unjustifiable, and that such limitation should be at once abrogated and removed as repugnant to a sound policy of equity and justice."

Your committee are not opposed to allowing the pension to the disabled soldier or dependent relative, to commence from date of disability or dependence, but they insist that while the law stands as it is that no discriminations shall be made, but that all shall be treated alike. Since the 1st day of July, 1880, more than 110,000 applications have been filed. In none of these cases will applicants be entitled to receive arrears, no matter how severe the disability or meritorious and deserving the applicant may be.

Your committee believe that the passage of this bill would be an unjust discrimination against the thousands who are not allowed arrears, and would be a very dangerous precedent to establish. They therefore report adversely, and ask that the bill lie on the table.

The views of the minority (submitted by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) are as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2204) granting arrears of pension to Nancy B. Leach, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

The following facts are established beyond controversy:

1. That Mrs. Leach was lawfully entitled to a pension, as the dependent mother of a deceased soldier, from the time of his death.
2. That she employed a competent and reliable attorney, Judge David H. Hill, of Carroll County, New Hampshire, to make, and with his assistance she duly made and executed, as early as February 11, 1879, a proper application for her pension.
3. Judge Hill put the application in an envelope properly stamped, sealed, and directed, and supposed this letter, with other letters, was taken by a law student in his office to the post-office and duly mailed.
4. Afterward, and before July 1, 1880, the date when arrears of pension were cut off by act of Congress unless the application had previously been filed in the Pension Office, Judge Hill repeatedly and in good faith informed Mrs. Leach and her friends that her claim for pension had been filed, and it appears that she relied on this information.
5. The mistake was not discovered until June, 1881, when Mr. Fosker, the law student, found the envelope containing Mrs. Leach's application in a package of papers which had been put away in Judge Hill's office as being no longer of any use. Judge Hill's attention was immediately called to the document, and he at once forwarded it to his friend, Mr. George N. French, of the Treasury Department, requesting him to file the application forthwith at the Pension Office.
6. From the records of the Pension Office it appears this original application was actually filed June 25, 1881, upon which Mrs. Leach has been allowed a pension from that date only.

It appears to us to be a case of accident, mistake, or misfortune, rather than of negligence on the part of the attorney. Clearly no actual negligence or want of care can be charged against Mrs. Leach. If it is urged that by the strict rules of law her attorney might be held liable in an action for negligent conduct in regard to the non-delivery of the letter containing the application at the post-office, we answer that such remedy is impracticable and uncertain, for an attorney is bound to the exercise of ordinary care only in such a case. A suit at law against the attorney, even if he is responsible, would probably fail, because a lack of ordinary care is not clearly established in the present case. Besides, Mrs. Leach does not possess the means to fight a lawsuit against the attorney, and this great Government ought not to require it of a good soldier's mother, even if the attorney were liable and had the means to pay.

It is urged that to allow the relief asked for here "would open the doors for thousands of similar cases, arising under almost all conceivable circumstances," and yet the committee are all of the opinion that the act of March 3, 1879, limiting arrears of pension to cases filed prior to July 1, 1880, discriminates unjustly, and ought to be repealed. The passage of this act, where a poor old lady is shown to have been without actual fault, and where it is absolutely beyond question her papers were fully prepared and completed long before the limitation act took effect, and her pension was granted upon the identical application lost or mislaid, as aforesaid, certainly can have no unfavorable influence against a repeal of the law referred to.

The minority of your committee contend that this case should be considered and decided upon its own intrinsic merits, and we are heartily in favor of adding cases like that of Mrs. Leach to the exceptions already established against this unjust discrimination.

Again, the experience of Congress and of the Pension Office since July 1, 1880, shows that very few cases just like the present one exist, and for which this act, if passed, would afford a precedent, while the waiver of the strict statutory provisions, cutting off arrears, has been exercised by Congress in numerous instances where the equities in favor of the claimant have been no stronger than this claim presents. We think the bill ought to pass.

This bill is fully sustained by a number of recent precedents, among which are the following:

Special acts granting arrears.

An act for the relief of Benjamin P. Dobson, corporal in Company I, Nineteenth Indiana Volunteers, approved April 25, 1882, first session Forty-seventh Congress (chapter 104, page 658, volume 22, U. S. Stat. at Large).

APPENDIX.

SENATE REPORT.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2204) granting arrears of pension to Nancy B. Leach, mother of Bradford Leach, have examined the same and report recommending the passage of the same.

The committee desire to submit the exact point involved in this case. The original application was duly made and executed February 11, 1879. It was actually filed June 25, 1881, and the proof sustaining the claim. It was allowed, and certificate No. 203323 issued to the dependent mother, carrying pension at the rate of $5 per month. The claimant supposed that her application was on file until long after the 1st day of July, 1880, the period of limitation under the arrears-of-pension act. The claimant has no practical remedy unless relieved by special act.

Mr. Hill, the attorney employed, is a reputable citizen, who has held responsible positions of public trust, and an honest attorney at law in good standing in the profession.

The affidavits of Hon. James E. French and of Hon. David H. Hill are herewith submitted, which establish all the remaining facts necessary to be stated.

I, James E. French, of Moultonborough, in the county of Carroll, State of New Hampshire, make oath and say, am well acquainted with Nancy B. Leach, holder of pension certificate No. 203323. I well remember the time she made her application for a pension, because it was at my suggestion that she applied to Hon. David H. Hill, of Sandwich, to assist her, and it was in the winter of 1879; said Hill afterward informed me that said claim was filed, and said claimant was so informed several times prior to July 1, 1880.

I have no interest in said claim for a pension.

JAMES E. FRENCH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 9th day of December, A. D. 1884, and I hereby certify that I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

W. A. HEARD,
Clerk of Supreme Court.

I, David H. Hill, of Sandwich, in the county of Carroll, and State of New Hampshire, depose and say that I acted as attorney for Nancy B. Leach in matter of pension for her as dependent mother. The declaration was drawn by me and taken to William A. Heard, clerk of supreme court, to be executed, as I now remember it.

I think we returned to my office, and I put the declaration in an envelope and put stamp on for postage. It was understood that it was to go by that mail.

I supposed for a long time that it went that day, and so informed Mrs. Leach. The papers were thus completed, and sealed and stamped at the time of their date. I had no doubt of it until a student in my office called my attention to an envelope thus sealed and stamped, which he said he had found among other papers which he thought he had packed away as papers no longer useful, and asked me if there was not something that had been overlooked. I at once sent them to George N. French, a clerk in Treasury Department, to file at the Pension Office. Within ten days he wrote to me that they were filed and that they were sent to said French just a few days before I was informed that they were filed. I can not say positive how they were first overlooked, but believe that my student, A. B. Fosker, of said Sandwich, took some letters to the mail for me, and Mrs. Leach and myself both supposed he had taken the Leach papers with them, and continued so to think until they were discovered by said Fosker, as above described.

My post-office address is Sandwich Center, Carroll County, and State of New Hampshire, and I have no present interest in the pension claim of Mrs. Leach.

DAVID H. HILL.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 9th day of December, A. D. 1884, and I hereby certify that I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

W. A. HEARD,
Clerk of Supreme Court.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, this bill has passed the Senate. It gives arrears to an old lady whose son became disabled in the Army and died in February, 1879. She executed her papers in proper form before the judge of probate in Carroll County, New Hampshire, and left them with him to be mailed to the Pension Office in Washington. The judge put them in a letter, properly directed and sealed, and gave it to a student in his office to carry to the post-office. In some way, which does not very clearly appear, the letter got mislaid among a file of papers, and was laid away in a pigeon-hole in the probate office, and was not discovered till after the 1st of July, 1880, when the right to arrears was cut off by act of Congress. Indeed, the papers were not found until some time in June, 1881, nearly a year afterward.

In the mean time Judge Hill in good faith, supposing the fact to be so, had informed the old lady and her friends that the application had gone to the Pension Office and was there on file awaiting consideration in its order. In looking over some of the papers in the probate office for another purpose, this letter, sealed and directed, was found, but too late to enable Mrs. Leach to get arrears. The identical document, which had thus been seasonably prepared and executed, was sent to the Pension Office and the applicant obtained a pension upon it.

Now, the only question is whether Mrs. Leach shall have arrears. The majority of the committee have reported adversely on the ground that the temporary loss of her papers was due to the carelessness or negligence of her attorney, and that her remedy ought to be against her lawyer instead of seeking relief by a special act of Congress. The minority of the committee, composed of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEFEVRE] and myself, are of opinion that inasmuch as her application was made in season, and as no actual fault is attributed to her, it is unjust to refuse to grant her these arrears. And in order to show that our Committee on Invalid Pensions and Congress would be taking no new departure in passing this bill, I desire to call the attention of the committee to several recent precedents which I think fully cover the principle involved.

I call attention to the case of Benjamin F. Dobson, of the Nineteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, reported by my friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-seventh Congress—a case in which Congress by special act granted arrears of pensions (22 United States Statutes at Large, chapter 104, page 658).

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. When did that pass?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. That act passed in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and was approved April 25, 1882. The facts in Dobson's case were that he sent to his member of Congress, December 6, 1879, his application for a pension by mail, requesting that it be filed in the Pension Office, and the Representative acknowledged its receipt, stating that he would cause it to be done. By some blunder or neglect on the part of the Congressman, the application, as well as evidence in support thereof, received afterward from Dobson, were filed with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

From December 6, 1879, until April 11, 1881, Dobson supposed his claim was pending in the Pension Office, instead of in Congress. He then applied for, and obtained, a pension without arrears through the regular channels. This was a plain case of "inadvertence," as the report by my distinguished friend, the chairman of our committee [Mr. MATSON], called it, on the part of a Congressman, while in the case now before the House substantially the same thing, according to the majority report, has grown into "neglect and gross carelessness" on the part of a reputable attorney.

Another case where Congress has granted arrears of pension by special act, approved March 2, 1883, is that of William M. Meredith, of Company E, Seventieth Indiana Volunteers (22 United States Statutes at Large, chapter 75, page 798).

Thereport, also made by our respected chairman [Mr. MATSON], shows that Captain Meredith executed his application for a pension on or about June 24, 1879, and gave it to his attorney, one House, of Indianapolis, to be mailed to the Commissioner of Pensions. House afterward made an affidavit that he mailed it the next day after receiving it. The papers, however, never reached the Pension Office, and their loss it is said was not discovered by the claimant until after July 1, 1880, too late to obtain arrears at the Pension Office. It is not altogether improbable that Captain Meredith's papers by some accident or mistake, like those of Mrs. Leach, got into a pigeon-hole in a lawyer's office instead of being mailed. Judge Hill and his law student would have testified in good faith that Mrs. Leach's application was mailed, until convinced of their error by subsequently finding the papers mislaid in his office.

Again, there is the case of Jacob Humble, of Company F, Sixth Indiana Cavalry, where, by special act approved July 24, 1882 (22 United States Statutes at Large, chapter 347, page 722), arrears were allowed. The chairman of our committee [Mr. MATSON] also reported this case favorably in the Forty-seventh Congress. The facts are, briefly, that Humble, about August 1, 1879, made his application for a pension and sent it by a neighbor to be delivered to his attorney at Spencer, Ind. The neighbor and the attorney, by affidavit before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, testified that the application was inclosed in an envelope, properly directed and sealed, and the attorney stated that he put the letter into the post-office. It was never heard from afterward. Humble did not know that his application had been lost until some time in 1881—about two years after his papers were executed.

The suggestion is made in the last two cases that the papers were lost in the mails, and therefore that the fault, if any, is chargeable against the Government alone, not against the claimant. It seems to me a sufficient answer to this is that the Government in no case undertakes to warrant or insure the safe carriage and delivery of mail matter at the place of its destination. Nor does the Government hold itself out as responsible for the carelessness or negligence of its employes in the mail service. A Government officer in the mail service is liable to the injured party for loss arising from his own neglect or carelessness in the performance of his duty, the same as other people. In principle these cases can not be distinguished from the one now under consideration and are precedents for the passage of this bill.

Another precedent in favor of the bill is the act for the relief of the widow of Edward M. Wilkens, passed July 7, 1884 (United States Statutes, chapter 348, page 83), reported from our committee by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], by which Mrs. Wilkens obtained arrears denied her under the general pension laws. Her husband during his last illness executed his original application for a pension a few days before his death, which occurred March 27, 1879, but it was not sent to the Pension Office on account of his illness until some time after his death, Mrs. Wilkens not being aware that it was necessary to have her husband's application filed in the Pension Office during his lifetime in order to obtain arrears. This Congress, in her case, granted the arrears without opposition.

Then again only the other night we granted arrears to Mrs. Emily Agnel, the widow of a professor at West Point, notwithstanding the fact that it was conceded she made no application for a pension whatever until long after July 1, 1880. She was advised, it is true, by her member of Congress that it was of no use for her to apply to the Pension Office because in his opinion she was not pensionable under existing laws. Afterward, and since July 1, 1880, an opinion was obtained from the Attorney-General that she was entitled to a pension, and the pension was granted, and this House the other night passed a bill giving her arrears.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to remind him of the facts in that case. While I think that bill ought not to have passed at all, yet he will remember that the passage of it was urged upon the ground that the Commissioner of Pensions, when the application was presented—

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. It never was presented until after the act of Congress cutting off arrears took effect, namely, July 1, 1880.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That bill was urged upon the ground that when the application was presented the Commissioner of Pensions informed her agent, or her member of Congress, that there was no law authorizing a pension in her case.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. If my friend [Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama] will take the trouble to read the report he will find that was not the fact. There was nobody connected with the Pension Office that said anything about it until after July 1, 1880.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. There was a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions received after the report was made, which was submitted to the House.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Yes; the letter was dated March 26, 1884, nearly four years after the time for obtaining arrears had expired. The report made by the gentleman himself [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] from the Committee on Pensions in Mrs. Agnel's claim, beginning near the bottom of the first page, expressly states—

That it was after the last day of June, 1880, when, under the advice of friends and an attorney, she resolved to apply to the Pension Office with the sole idea of getting the case before the Attorney-General for an opinion, and that it was, as she anticipated, rejected by the Commissioner, but a favorable opinion finally rendered by the Attorney-General.

Mrs. Agnel never consulted the Commissioner of Pensions nor filed her claim in the Pension Office till December 16, 1880, several months too late for arrears. Her pension, at the rate of $30 per month, from the time of filing the application was finally allowed June 12, 1882, after a favorable opinion was obtained from the Attorney-General.

Mr. Chairman, I have found eleven cases where Congress has recently allowed arrears of pension by special acts and have appended them to the minority report.

The only point here is—and as our time is limited I will come to it directly—the only point is, whether or not this old lady, lawfully entitled to a pension, having made out the necessary papers, and having left them with her attorney, to be sent to the Pension Office, and the attorney, in good faith, supposing his clerk had delivered them at the post-office with other mail matter, but subsequently finding them mislaid among probate papers in a pigeon-hole in his office—whether or not she, being without any actual fault, shall be allowed her arrears. I do not believe that a dozen cases like this can be found in the country. The principal objection made by the majority of the committee is that it will be establishing an unsafe precedent. I can not regard it in that light. The precedents abundantly justify us in passing this bill. If there is any other case like it, I am willing to vote in its favor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, it seems to me to be unjust to require Mrs. Leach to look to her attorney for the recovery of arrears equitably belonging to her, on the assumption of negligence on his part—which is by no means clearly proved.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] has very fairly presented this case, and I have only a word to say in reply. The clear distinction between the cases he cites as having passed this House and the one he asks the House now to pass is that in the present case it is not alleged that any official of the Government was in any way to blame, but the whole blame rests upon the woman's attorney. Now, if Congress or the Government undertakes to relieve persons against the wrongs practiced upon them by their attorneys, it undertakes a very large contract. It is popularly supposed that the Government already has on hand a pretty good contract in paying the pensions that it ought to pay; but to pay arrears to parties who have failed to receive their pensions through the neglect or wrong of attorneys is, I think, more than any fair-minded man would say the Government ought to undertake. But, sir, I apprehend we have not time to do justice to this old woman, even from the standpoint of the gentleman from New Hampshire, and at the same time to do justice to these other claimants, whose cases have been favorably passed upon by this Committee of the Whole. Our session of this evening must close in a very few minutes, as under the order of the House it can not be extended beyond 9 o'clock. I move, therefore, that the committee now rise.

Mr. PARKER. Before the question is taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, I wish to say that in the case of Mary A. Grennon, which I presented and which was passed without especial notice, there was an adverse report. I infer from remarks which have been made that it was understood nothing would be presented except favorable reports. I would not wish the Committee of the Whole to fall into any error as to the state of the case from the lack of any explanation on my part. I shall therefore, if there be any objection to that case, ask to withdraw it when it comes before the House.

Mr. BAGLEY. That is the case of a soldier who is supposed to have been killed by the enemy while going to a spring. Although there was an adverse report, I think the case a good one. I hope that when we take up the case in the House it may be favorably considered.

Mr. MATSON. We have not time now to talk about mistakes. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had, according to order, had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also bills for the removal of political disabilities, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof):

A bill (H. R. 8032) to remove the political disabilities of Virginius Freeman, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 7229) to remove the disabilities of J. J. B. Walbach, of Baltimore, Md.

On motion of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. 8186) to remove the political disabilities of A. W. Stark, of Virginia, was laid on the table; and the bill (S. 2623) to remove the political disabilities of Alexander W. Stark was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

A bill (H. R. 7303) to restore the name of Thomas Ferguson to the pension-roll.

MARY A. GRENNON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. 3735) granting a pension to Mary A. Grennon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the case on which there was an adverse report by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PARKER. This bill proposes to place on the pension-roll the widow of a private. During the war, while on the picket line, he started for a spring. A shot was heard. He did not return, and has never been heard of since. It was the belief of his comrades, from the circumstances connected with the case, that he was killed by the enemy. I ask that the bill be passed; but if any member objects I will not press the request.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED.

Amendments to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

JAMES D. JOHNSTON.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1915) to remove the disabilities of James D. Johnston, of Georgia, incurred under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. MATSON. I move to reconsider the votes by which these various bills have just been passed; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I believe that completes the business of the evening, and in the moment or two left I beg leave to say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions during this Congress, after careful consideration, have reported on twelve hundred and twenty-three cases, and that six hundred and sixty-eight bills, favorably reported, have been passed by the House. Indeed, I might add without egotism, so far as we are informed every bill reported favorably by that committee has been passed by the House, and, as this is our last appearance before the House, we return thanks for the courteous treatment extended to us.

I now give way to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who no doubt also desires to return his thanks to the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I believe all the bills reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions have been passed, and I will add, in my opinion several of them favorably reported ought not to have passed. That committee also is under many obligations for the courtesy it has received.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If it is in order, while there is such good feeling, I will suggest that gentlemen call up the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like to have the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] indicate to the House and the country when he thinks his committee will be able to bring in the next pension bill for the soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The Committee on Pensions have always been anxious to pass a proper Mexican pension bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Oh, yes; provided it has Black Hawk Indians in it; but we want it with Union soldiers in it.
Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. But we do not want to pension Black Hawk Indians.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But the gentleman wants to pension all who served during the time of any Indian disturbance.
Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman is mistaken now, as he often is in the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will take the bill including the Union soldiers, and without those who served during Indian disturbances.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now 9 o'clock, and, in compliance with previous order, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow, when it will be called to order by the Speaker on the return of the procession from the Washington Monument.

A bill (H. R. 4067) to change the limit of appropriations for the public building at Louisville, Ky.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting sundry petitions received from infantry officers of the Army, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2442) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying petitions, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2087) for the relief of Henry Frank, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

MARIA G. UNDERWOOD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLISON in the chair). "Concurrent resolutions" being in order, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM], which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Alice E. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood, in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reference of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. The President of the Senate has decided that under the rule such a resolution must be referred to that committee. I do not remember the number of the rule.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Then it does not need any motion to refer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that under the rule the resolution must go to that committee, and it will be so referred.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under the eighth rule, beginning with Order of Business 396, Senate bill 1886.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Kansas to request unanimous consent to proceed with the appropriation bill. I suppose that will be granted. What will be the effect of the motion of the Senator from Kansas to lay aside the pending order? Will it come up regularly on Monday, or will it require a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business 396 will come up to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Or this morning, if the appropriation bill is disposed of during the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If disposed of before whatever time under the new adjournment it would be in order.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw his motion that I may ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up for present consideration a bill that will take no time.

Mr. PLUMB. I insist on my motion that the appropriation bill shall be taken up. If the Senate is then minded to indulge the Senator from Iowa a moment or two in regard to his bill, I do not know that I shall object; but I can not consent to postpone the motion I have made, as I wish to bring the appropriation bill before the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on striking out, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, all after the word "thereof," in line 117, to the end of line 151.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. No; the understanding yesterday was that we were to vote on these propositions separately, and we voted upon the first down to the word "thereof," in line 117. The next division would properly be to the end of line 128, perhaps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stands corrected. The Senator from New York is right. The words proposed by the committee to be stricken out down to the end of line 128, will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof," in line 117, it is proposed to strike out the following:

And drop-letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established. That all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1883, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound or a fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law.

Mr. WILSON. I now ask unanimous consent that the appropriation bill may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 483. It will not create any discussion. If it should, of course I shall withdraw the request. It is a bill which has passed the House and has been reported by unanimous consent from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. I should like very much to have it passed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MAXEY. I think, as we are in the midst of the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, which is certainly a matter of national importance and ought to be disposed of, we should finish that bill before taking up anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I will state that the very question now pending on the Post-Office appropriation bill will lead to a division of the Senate, and if the Senator from Texas will look over the Chamber he will find quite a sufficient reason, I think, to withhold his objection.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will withhold the objection.

Mr. MAXEY. I am not in the custom of making objections about anything; I only stated a practical proposition of common sense; but as that seems to be met by the Senator from Tennessee, I withdraw the objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEOKUK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senate now consider the bill the title of which has been read?

Mr. BAYARD. That retains, I understand, the present order in its position of precedence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to call. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Secretary to read again the sentence beginning "provided."

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys.

Mr. HOAR. It provides that "the site shall leave the building unexposed;" but it is a House bill, and I do not care to interfere.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. MARTIN.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be informally laid aside, and that unanimous consent may be given to take up the bill (H. R. 5452) for the relief of John W. Martin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations proposing to strike out the clause after the word "thereof," in line 117 to line 128, inclusive.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought the division would be on that part between the word "thereof," in line 117, and the word "established," in line 121. That clause is not connected in any way with the sentence which follows, but is designed to simply accommodate the question of postage on drop letters to the rule established in the preceding sentence for letters transmitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the matter is capable of a division in that way, and if the Senator asks it, the question will be first taken on that part.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out after the word "thereof," in line 117, to and including the word "established," in line 121, being the following words:

And drop-letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next clause recommended to be stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 121, after the word "established," the committee report to strike out the words:

That all publications of the second-class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1883, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent per pound or a fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary question rather than to discuss this provision, because I discussed it yesterday, and I thought the Senate had finished the discussion of it. Judging from the action on the part of the Senate yesterday, beginning with line 129 to the end of line 138, I believe that the Senate will agree that the amendment of the committee shall be agreed to, and that that language shall be left out of the bill. If that is done, as I have no doubt it will be done by the Senate, and we shall now by a vote disagree with the amendment of the committee striking out from line 121 to line 128, it will be necessary then to make a slight amendment in that portion of the bill. As I understand, we can only do that by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR (to Mr. MILLER, of New York). Make your meaning more clear.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will put it in this shape then: Will it be in order to ask unanimous consent to make any change in the lines which we are now about to vote upon? That, I suppose, will be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order to ask unanimous consent to change the bill in almost any way.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Then I will ask unanimous consent, in line 123, to strike out the word "and," or that it be eliminated in some way so that when we come to vote it will not be in, and then, at the end of that line and the beginning of line 124, to take out the words "to bona fide subscribers," and in place of the words "to bona fide subscribers" to insert "including sample copies."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend. The Chair will receive the committee of the House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT CEREMONIES.

Representatives DORSHEIMER, TUCKER, and CANNON appeared at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen of the committee.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. We are directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives is now in session and awaits the coming of the Senate in order to proceed with the ceremonies which are appointed to be held in the Hall of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to Senators that the Chair is informed that the President of the United States is still reviewing the procession at the east front of the Capitol. The order of exercises adopted by the Senate provides that the President and his Cabinet, the judges of the Supreme Court, &c., the diplomatic corps, and the Senate, shall go together, in that order, to the Hall of the House; and it will be, perhaps, ten or fifteen minutes before it will be convenient for the House of Representatives, according to this joint order, to receive the Senate. If there be no objection, therefore, the business of the Senate will proceed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I renew my request to change lines 123 and 124 by unanimous consent as I have indicated.

Mr. HOAR. Why not, instead of that, strike out from the word "act" down to the word "agents," inclusive? If you are going to have second-class matter go at that rate, let everything go in.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I desire to say that the changes which I have indicated will make the law, if it should become a law, precisely the same as the present law and in the same language with the exception that the rate of postage will be reduced one-half. The present law reads:

Publications of the second class except as provided in section 25, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at 2 cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law.

Mr. HOAR. Why not have the same rate on transient papers sent from one office to another?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. There is but one rate upon second-class matter now. If the language as proposed here should be concurred in, it would make two rates of postage upon second-class matter.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I desire to ask him if his motion to amend line 123 is not premature.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is premature.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand it, upon the demand of the Senator from Kansas the pending question is to strike out after the word "thereof," in line 117, to and including the word "established," in line 121.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that he is mistaken about that. Those words have been retained by the vote of the Senate. The question now is on the amendment of the committee recommending to strike out from the word "established," in line 121 to and including line 128.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I withdraw my inquiry. The Senator from New York is quite right, if that question has been decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The Chair will state that the request of the Senator from New York is for unanimous consent to make certain changes. He does not move to amend, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understand that it can only be done by unanimous consent, and it is absolutely necessary that it shall be done unless we now propose to make a reform backward in our post-office matters and have two rates of postage upon second-class matter. Originally there were two rates upon second-class matter, and that led to a great deal of complaint by publishers throughout the country. Some years ago the law was changed, and all second-class matter now goes at one rate; that is, a rate of 2 cents a pound. Now it is proposed to change that rate to 1 cent a pound, but the language here employed divides second-class matter into two distinct classes, you may say, and makes two distinct rates—one reducing the postage to 1 cent a pound, and raising the rate upon the other portion of second-class matter to 4 cents a pound, doubling its present rate.

Mr. DAWES. May I inquire of the Senator from New York what is the force of the words he proposes to leave in—"except as provided in section 25 of said act?"

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That is a section which permits county newspapers to be circulated free in the county where published, and some few other little things connected therewith.

Mr. DAWES. So that leaving those words and striking out the rest of the clause will make a uniform rate for all second-class matter?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. For all second-class matter. The present law is that all second-class matter goes at 2 cents a pound. If the amendment I have suggested be adopted all second-class mail matter will be carried through the mails at 1 cent a pound. If it is not adopted second-class matter will go through the mail, a portion of it at 1 cent a pound and the rest at 4 cents a pound, doubling the present rate, which I imagine we do not want to do.

Mr. DAWES. What part will go at 4 cents a pound?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will explain. All sample copies which are sent out by publishers of newspapers, particularly weekly newspapers, religious papers, and all the large weeklies, especially at the end of the year, by hundreds of thousands of copies, and all sample copies sent out separately by individuals, except where bona fide subscribers, if we leave this as it stands in the bill, will be compelled to pay not 2 cents a pound, but 4 cents a pound. The entire publishing interests of this country, so far as I have been able to hear from them, and I have heard from hundreds, desire that whatever the rate shall be upon second-class matter it shall be uniform, that there shall be only one rate, and we propose to make it 1 cent a pound.

If these suggestions of mine are adopted, the law will be left precisely as it is to-day except that the rate will be reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent a pound. Of course it depends also upon the Senate agreeing with the amendment of the committee, commencing with line 129 down to line 138, inclusive, which I will speak to when we come to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York?

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read from the desk, that we may hear what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 123, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to strike out "and;" in the same line, after the word "publication," to strike out "to bona fide subscribers" and insert "including sample copies;" so that the clause will read:

That all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof, from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1885, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound or a fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed modification?

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the amendment in that shape. If the Senator will confine his amendment to striking out the words "to bona fide subscribers" and inserting "including sample copies," I shall not object; but if he does not do that he will introduce an element of discord and possible loss to the revenues of the Post-Office Department which I do not think he contemplates, and certainly I will not consent to if I can avoid it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think the Senator is mistaken in his objection to striking out the word "and," because I have made my suggestion to correspond precisely with the present law. I will read it again:

Publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at 2 cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law.

I see that I was mistaken; the word "and" is there. I had marked that out yesterday. That word should remain in. Then the only change is, at the end of line 123, and the beginning of line 124, to strike out the words "bona fide subscribers" and insert the words "including sample copies;" that makes it correspond exactly to the present law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again report the modification as now suggested by the Senator from New York. The Secretary did not understand the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is to leave in the word "and;" not strike that out.

The SECRETARY. In line 123, after the word "publication," it is proposed to strike out "to bona fide subscribers" and insert the words "including sample copies."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York as to the modification of the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Now the question is on agreeing or disagreeing to those lines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on striking out, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, the portion that has been read, beginning with the word "that," in line 121, down to and including the word "law," in line 128.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the amendment is adopted I wish to know what the effect will be as to sending through the mail papers for advertising purposes alone. The Department ought not to be burdened with that class of advertising papers. There is a grocer's paper; I remember that there has been some discussion as to whether it should go through the mails.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that his question does not properly come up now. It will come up when we consider the striking out or retaining lines 129 to 138. That point comes in there. When we reach it I think I shall be able to answer his question to his entire satisfaction; but this language that we are now acting upon is the present law absolutely word for word without any change whatever except that we reduce the rate of postage on second-class matter from 2 cents to 1 cent a pound. The question as to what kind of matter shall go comes up under those other lines, but I can discuss it now if that is deemed desirable.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from New York that he has already inserted here "sample copies," which includes the idea that I think the Senator from Delaware is trying to arrive at.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have some doubt about the propriety of this reduction of the revenues of the Post-Office Department to the extent we are going. That Department, while it may not be self-sustaining, ought not to be very expensive to the Government. We are reducing its revenue, and now it is proposed that we shall reduce the revenue derived from sample copies. I doubt very much whether we ought to do that. When papers are sent to bona fide subscribers, that is one thing; but where a publisher sends out broadcast through the country copies for the purpose of soliciting subscribers to his paper, to make it a profitable business to himself, he ought to be willing to pay something to the Department for the privilege he enjoys. I doubt very much whether we ought to reduce the postage on sample copies.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly, the sending out of sample copies by all regular and legitimate publishing houses who are publishing regular papers weekly, semi-weekly, or monthly, or magazines, tends to increase the revenue of the Post-Office Department. There ought certainly to be no objection on the part of the Government to doing that kind of business. All the great religious weeklies, all the semi-weeklies, and all the monthly publications, and even the weekly editions of all our leading daily papers throughout the length and breadth of this country, which circulate millions upon millions of copies, are accustomed at the end or near the end of the year to send out large numbers of sample copies of their papers to the names of people that may be given to them in various towns scattered throughout the land. The result is that those sample copies bring back to the publishers a large number of permanent subscribers to increase their circulation, and of course increase the revenues of the Post-Office Department. It is believed and held that if this law is enacted the increased circulation of newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of various kinds will be so great that the Department will lose little, if any, revenue by it. That is the judgment of the Post-Office Department itself.

It is the law to-day, and has been for years, that all regular publications can send out sample copies at the regular legal rate of 2 cents a pound. Now we propose to reduce the rate on second-class matter from 2 cents to 1 cent a pound. Certainly we ought not to go backward and change the classification and make a greater division than there is at the present time and more confusion. Certainly it is not for the best interests of the Department to do it, for instead of increasing the revenues it will largely reduce them unless we give them this privilege, and this leaves the law precisely where it is to-day, and I have read it repeatedly.

The question which the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Iowa raise as to the class of publications which shall be considered second-class has nothing whatever to do with the question before the Senate at the present moment. That will come up when we consider the amendment from line 129 to line 133, and then I will read the present law, which explains and defines what is second-class matter and what matter can go through the mails at second-class rates. If there is any abuse such as the Senator from Delaware speaks of, the abuse comes from a failure to enforce the present statute in the Post-Office Department, and not from the law itself.

I do not care to go further into that discussion, because it seems to me unnecessary until that portion of the amendment is acted upon, but if any further explanation is desired, I am ready to make it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that so far as the revenue from publications, papers, and periodicals is concerned, I think it is about as expensive to the Government as all the profit it gets from it. We are paying the railroad companies by weight. This bill contains an appropriation of over $14,000,000 to pay railroad companies for the transportation of the mail. Much of the weight is caused by periodicals and newspapers. The letter postage has long since paid its way, but the second-class matter does not pay very liberally, and I do not know that the increase of the number of periodicals and newspapers carried through the mails will tend to increase revenue when you take into consideration the additional expense which will be thrust on the Department for transportation.

We are appropriating in this bill $14,500,000 to railroads for the transportation of the mails, made up largely of papers and periodicals and that class of matter. In addition to that, we are paying over a million dollars for postal cars, so that it is becoming a very expensive business to transport these papers and periodicals throughout the country. While there may be some additional number of subscribers, perhaps large additional numbers of subscribers obtained by sending out these sample copies through the country, I do not know that that will add anything to the revenues of the Postal Department. If these men want to do business, if they want to circulate their papers and invite subscriptions for their papers, they ought to be willing to contribute to the revenue of the Department through which they propose to send out sample copies.

Mr. MAXEY. The only legitimate ground for the adoption of the proposition as it came from the House is that the general spread of intelligence through newspapers would justify a reduction of postage on second-class matter from 2 cents to 1 cent a pound. It is a perfectly well-known fact that for years past the postage on newspapers has been far less than the expense of carrying them. On postal cards and letters we receive millions more than the cost of transmission. Newspapers and third-class mail matter absorb the surplus, because they do not pay their way. No question has been presented to the Post-Office Committee which has caused more trouble than the determination of what is a sample copy. Beginning with the chairmanship of a very distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hamlin], who was chairman of the Post-Office Committee when I entered the Senate ten years ago and who is now in the Chamber, up to the present time we have had sample copy after sample copy of what purported to be newspapers laid before us, and it would take an expert to settle whether they were advertisements or newspapers, they having the form of newspapers.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will yield I will submit a motion that the Senate proceed, in pursuance of its previous order, to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that is done—

Mr. MAXEY. I will yield the floor; but when the question comes up again I will resume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the President pro tempore of the Senate is at the present time in the President's room, and the Chair will ask that the motion be withheld for a few moments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I will do so.

Mr. MAXEY. I will complete what I was saying.

The striking out of the expression "bona fide subscribers," as it came in the bill from the House, I think was bad policy. I think it ought not to be stricken out, because if that expression "bona fide subscribers" is there, then at 1 cent a pound actual bona fide newspapers would be carried, the object we have in view being the spread of intelligence by means of bona fide newspapers. Strike out that expression, and as certainly as we pass this clause thousands and hundreds of thousands of advertisements will come in the shape of newspapers, in the form of newspapers, and be scattered over the country, spreading no intelligence, but simply advertising different kinds of wares. That will be the effect of it.

That is all I wish to say about it. I think the view of the Senator from New York is entirely wrong upon that, and that the bill as it came from the House is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the words which have been read from line 121 to line 128 inclusive as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out from line 129 to line 133 inclusive. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of 1 cent for each four ounces or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto; and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter, are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885. And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator from New York, who seems to have given special attention to this matter, whether the last sentence, which gives liberty to mark an article in a newspaper, is the existing law.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The existing custom is that an article may be marked.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is not the existing law, I suggest that the question be divided by putting the vote on striking out that part, closing with the word "five," in line 136. The other is a distinct proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. My recollection is—I will not speak of it with certainty—that we had the very point which he has stated before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads; and I think that a year or two ago the committee reported favorably a proposition to authorize the marking of an article, without putting in any words, in print or writing. I am under the impression that that became a law.

Mr. HARRISON. It is certainly a very innocent and a very useful practice, as all of us who have had newspapers sent to us for the purpose of calling our attention to a particular article have discovered. It is quite convenient to have some mark which will call attention at once to the purpose of sending the paper, rather than to have to look the whole paper through. I ask that the question be divided as I have indicated.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I see no objection to dividing it, and I see no objection to leaving the lines from 136 to 138 in the bill, although in the regulations of the Post-Office Department that thing is now permitted to be done and is done constantly without any question on the part of the Post-Office Department, and if it is deemed desirable to put in permission I see no objection.

Mr. DAWES. The purpose of that provision is to enable those who desire to send a marked copy to leave their order at the printing office, and the mark is put on when the paper is printed in such a manner as to call attention to it, and it relieves any one who desires to have a marked copy sent out from the labor of doing it himself and paying the postage on it. It is in the same interest as all this legislation.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will ask then, in connection with the Senator from Indiana, that the question be taken on striking out from line 129 to the word "five," in line 136.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana demands a division of the question so as to exclude from the present action of the Senate all after the word "five," in line 136, to and including the word "postage," in line 138. The Chair thinks that division may properly be made. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out, beginning with line 129, to and including the word "five," in line 136.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask what is the question before the Senate? I have been detained from the session this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just stated it. It is on striking out, on pages 6 and 7 of the bill, from line 129 to line 136, including the word "five."

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say in reference to that that I am in favor of striking out that portion of the clause inserted by the House, but I understand that a division of the question has been called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question has been divided so that the present question is on striking out, beginning with line 129, to and including the word "five," in line 136.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the committee have proposed to strike out the whole. Now, is the question on supporting the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee to strike out the words which have been stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; I see.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in favor of striking out those words. I am opposed to legislation on appropriation bills, and as this proposed action accords with the rules of the Senate, I shall vote to strike out the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next question is on striking out after the word "five," in line 136, to and including the word "postage," in line 138. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate has proceeded apparently upon the theory that it was willing to reduce postage upon second-class matter and to do that without changing in any sense existing law, except in that particular. Section 22 of the law of 1879, chapter 180, provides:

That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, mark, or sign, thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, and index figures of subscription book, either written or printed, the printed title of the publication, the printed name and address of the publisher or sender of the same, and written or printed words or figures or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end.

If the clause which is found between lines 136 and 138 is retained, we shall have entered upon a new change in the postal laws beyond that contemplated and effected by what has been left in the bill by the action of the Senate; and it seems to me, without something to show precisely what the effect of it is to be, we ought not to enter upon this, but ought to concur with the report of the committee in striking out the provision.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him again, does this in any way affect the postal revenue? Is there any way by which it could have any effect to reduce the postal revenue to allow a blue or red pencil mark to be put above an article?

Mr. PLUMB. I think it would, because matter of that kind now pays an increased postage. I do not know that I am able to state fully the scope of it; but there are large numbers of papers in this country whose chief pabulum grows out of the printing of special editions containing advertisements of insurance companies, banks, and so on, the value of which is largely enhanced by being able to mark them and send them without increased postage, not to subscribers, but to persons whose attention it is desirable to invite to these advertisements. It seems to me that observing the line heretofore drawn between advertising publications and bona fide newspapers as such, we ought not to insert that paragraph.

If we intend to obliterate it all and say simply that if a man prints a thing which he calls a newspaper, and as an inducement to get advertisements says "I will print large editions in addition to that," or "I will draw a red or blue or black line, or put some other distinctive mark on the paper, so that if you send it to a man it will obviate the necessity of your paying circular postage on matter which amounts to the same thing"—if we are going to do that, we ought at least to have the recommendation of the Department and the action of the proper committee. It is entirely different from the proposition the Senate has heretofore voted upon, simply to reduce postage, leaving the general law precisely as it is now. I am in favor, so far as we properly can, of discriminating in favor of legitimate newspapers, newspapers that have legitimate subscription lists, and newspapers whose revenue is not derived chiefly from expedients of that kind.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am not convinced from the statement made by the Senator from Kansas that we ought to agree with the committee to strike out these words. I do not think we have sufficient information to warrant us in leaving them in the bill. Certainly we make a great departure from what I am seeking to do. What I think the people desire is simply that there should be a reduction of 50 per cent. in the rate of postage on second-class matter. That the Senate have now entirely agreed to; and without more information I shall concur with the committee in this particular amendment.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New York will allow me to say that after the amendment already made in lines 123 and 124, I do not see why we ought not to strike out all after the word "provided," in line 129, down to the word "thereto," in line 132.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. We have already agreed to strike that out. We agreed with the committee and have stricken out from line 129 to line 132.

Mr. BECK. Why should we strike out—

And all acts so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885?

That seemed to be a part of the motion.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That was done at the suggestion of the Senator having this bill in charge.

Mr. BECK. I am not quite sure that I desire to do that. Will the Senator from Kansas be kind enough to explain it?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to inquire of the Chair what is the condition of the formation of the procession to proceed to the House. We received a message from a committee of the House of Representatives some thirty minutes since, I think, that they were ready to receive the Senate; and it seems to me we are in danger of being guilty of a discourtesy to that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the order of the Senate adopting the procedure as agreed upon by the commission is, that "the House being in session and notification to that effect having been given to the Senate, the Senate in a body, preceded by the President, ex-Presidents, the Cabinet, the President-elect, the Vice-President-elect, the judiciary, and diplomatic corps will proceed to the House of Representatives."

The Chair has delayed asking the Senate to proceed to the Hall of the House because he was informed that the President of the United States was reviewing the procession, which is part of the programme; but the Chair is now informed that within two or three minutes the President of the United States will be ready to proceed to the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In answer to the Senator from Kentucky I will say that this clause was allowed to go out without any particular consideration, because it was believed that if this became a law of course it would succeed all other postal laws affecting this matter, and it was not necessary. I see no harm in leaving it in, and I am not sure when I come to read it through to line 135 but that perhaps it ought to have been left; otherwise this change of rate will take place as soon as the bill passes instead of the 1st of July.

Mr. BECK. It would not hurt to keep it in.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It would not hurt.

Mr. BECK. I would rather leave it in to be sure about it.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT CEREMONIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, preceded by the President of the United States, the Cabinet, the judiciary, and the diplomatic corps.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its sitting. The pending question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out, on page 7 of the Post-Office appropriation bill, after the word "five," in line 136, all down to the word "postage," inclusive, in line 138.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 21, 1885.

The House was called to order at seventeen minutes past 1 o'clock p. m. by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEDICATION OF THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to inform the Senate the House is now ready to receive the Senate and proceed with the ceremonies which are appointed to take place in the Hall of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

The Speaker appointed as such committee Mr. DORSHEIMER, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. CANNON.

At 2 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the members of the Senate, following their President pro tempore and their Secretary, and preceded by their Sergeant-at-Arms, entered the Hall of the House of Representatives and occupied the seats reserved for them on the right and left of the main aisle.

The President pro tempore occupied the Speaker's chair, the Speaker of the House sitting at his left.

The Chaplain of the House, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D., and Rev. S. A. WALLIS, of Pohick church, near Mount Vernon, Va., sat at the Clerk's desk.

The President of the United States, with the members of his Cabinet, the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Admiral of the Navy, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, the diplomatic corps, and all others present were seated in accordance with the order of arrangements of the Congressional Commission heretofore published.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives, you are assembled, pursuant to the concurrent order of the two Houses, to celebrate the completion of the monument to the memory of the first President of the United States. It is not only a memorial but an inspiration that shall live through all the generations of our posterity, as we may hope, which we this day inaugurate and celebrate by the ceremonies that have been ordered by the two Houses.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. President, it appears that there are some unoccupied seats upon the floor of the House. I therefore ask, by unanimous consent, that the ladies members of the families of Senators and Representatives be admitted to occupy those seats during these proceedings.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Rev. S. A. WALLIS, of Pohick church, near Mount Vernon, Va., then offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, Lord of heaven and earth, who alone rulest over the nations of the world and disposest of them according to Thy good pleasure, we praise Thy holy name for the benefits we commemorate this day.

Wonderful things didst Thou for us in the days of our fathers, in the times of old. For they gat not the land in possession by their sword, neither did their own arm save them, but Thy right hand and the light of Thy countenance, because Thou hadst a favor unto them. Especially do we render Thee our hearty thanks for Thy servant George Washington, whom Thou gavest to be a commander and a governor unto this people, and didst by him accomplish for it a great and mighty deliverance. And as we are now gathered before Thee in these Halls, we bless Thee for the government and civil order Thou didst establish through him. Grant that it may be upheld by that righteousness which exalteth a nation, and that this place may evermore be the habitation of judgment and justice. Let Thy blessing rest upon our Chief Magistrate and his successors in all generations. Grant each in his time those heavenly graces that are requisite for so high a trust; that the laws may be impartially administered to the punishment of wickedness and vice, and to the maintenance of Thy true religion and virtue. We also humbly beseech Thee for our Senate and Representatives in Congress assembled that Thou wouldst be pleased to direct all their consultations to the advancement of Thy glory, the good of Thy Church, the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people, that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavors upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations. We pray Thee for our judges and officers that they may judge the people with just judgment, be no respecters of persons, and hear both the small and the great in his cause. O Lord God of Hosts, be pleased to save and defend our Army and Navy, that each may be a safeguard to these United States, both by land and sea, until Thou dost fulfill Thy word, that nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Be with those who have been appointed to speak unto us this day as they recount the deeds of old time, Thy marvelous works, and the judgments of Thy mouth. Give them grace to utter such words as may stir us up to emulate the virtues of our forefathers, so that we may transmit the Republic to our posterity high in praise and in name and in honor.

Let Thy richest blessings rest upon our country at large; may we lend a true obedience to the laws cheerfully and willingly for conscience' sake. Let no causeless divisions weaken us as a nation, but grant that we may be knit together more and more in the bonds of peace and unity. Preserve us from the dangers now threatening society, and enable each of us, high and low, rich and poor, to do his duty in that state of life unto which Thou hast called him. So that they are Thy people and sheep of Thy pasture shall give Thee thanks forever, and will always be showing forth Thy praise from generation to generation. These and all other benefits of Thy good providence we humbly beg in the name and through the mediation of Jesus Christ our most blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

After the prayer the Marine Band, stationed in the vestibule, played appropriate national airs.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives, the first proceeding in order is the oration by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts. The Chair is sorry to announce that Mr. Winthrop, from indisposition, is unable to attend. According to the arrangements of the committee the oration will be now read by Hon. JOHN D. LONG, a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

The oration by Mr. Winthrop was read, as follows, by Mr. LONG:

PRESIDENT ARTHUR, SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES: By a joint resolution of Congress, you have called upon me to address you in this Hall to-day on the completion of yonder colossal monument to the Father of his Country. Nothing less imperative than your call could have brought me before you for such an effort. Nearly seven and thirty years have passed away since it was my privilege to perform a similar service at the laying of the corner-stone of that monument. In the prime of manhood, and in the pride of official station, it was not difficult for me to speak to assembled thousands in the open air, without notes, under the scorching rays of a midsummer sun. But what was easy for me then is impossible for me now. I am here to-day, as I need not tell you, in far other condition for the service you have assigned me—changed, changed in almost everything except an inextinguishable love for my country and its Union and an undying reverence for the memory of Washington. On these alone I rest for inspiration, assured that, with your indulgence, and the blessing of God, which I devoutly invoke, they will be sufficient to sustain me in serving as a medium for keeping up the continuity between the hearts and hands which laid the foundation of this gigantic structure and those younger hearts and hands which have at last brought forth the capstone with shoutings. It is for this you have summoned me. It is for this alone I have obeyed your call.

Meantime I can not wholly forget that the venerable ex-President John Quincy Adams—at whose death-bed, in my official chamber beneath this roof, I was a privileged watcher thirty-seven years ago this very day—had been originally designated to pronounce the corner-stone oration, as one who had received his first commission, in the long and brilliant career at home and abroad which awaited him, from the hands of Washington himself. In that enviable distinction I certainly have no share; but I may be pardoned for remembering that, in calling upon me to supply the place of Mr. Adams, it was borne in mind that I had but lately taken the oath as Speaker at his hands and from his lips, and that thus, as was suggested at the time, the electric chain, though lengthened by a single link, was still unbroken. Let me hope that the magnetism of that chain may not even yet be entirely exhausted, and that I may still catch something of its vivifying and quickening power, while I attempt to bring to the memory of Washington the remnants of a voice which is failing and of a vigor which I am conscious is ebbing away.

It is now, Mr. President, Senators, and Representatives, more than half a century since a volunteer association of patriotic citizens initiated the project of erecting a national monument to Washington in the city which bears his name. More than a whole century ago, indeed—in that great year of our Lord which witnessed the treaty of peace and Independence, 1783—Congress had ordered an equestrian statue of him to be executed, "to testify the love, admiration, and gratitude of his countrymen;" and again, immediately after his death, in 1799, Congress had solemnly voted a marble monument to him at the capital, "so designed as to commemorate the great events of his military and political life." But our beloved country, while yet in its infancy, and I may add in its indigency, with no experience in matters of art, and heavily weighed down by the great debt of the Revolutionary war, knew better how to vote monuments than how to build them, or, still more, how to pay for them. Yorktown monuments and Washington monuments, and the statues of I know not how many heroes of our struggle for Independence, made a fine show on paper in our early records, and were creditable to those who ordered them; but their practical execution seems to have been indefinitely postponed.

The Washington Monument Association, instituted in 1833, resolved that no such postponement should longer be endured, and proceeded to organize themselves for the work, which has at length been completed. They had for their first president the great Chief-Justice, John Marshall, the personal friend and chosen biographer of Washington, whose impressive image you have so recently and so worthily unveiled on yonder western terrace. They had for their second president the not less illustrious James Madison, the father of the Constitution of which Marshall was the interpreter, and whose statue might well have no inferior place on the same terrace. Among the other officers and managers of that association I can not forget the names of William W. Seaton, whose memory is deservedly cherished by all who knew him; of that grand old soldier and patriot Winfield Scott; of Generals Archibald Henderson and Nathan Towson; of Walter Jones, and Peter Force, and Philip R. Fendall, together with that of its indefatigable general agent, honest old Eliza Whittlesey. To that association our earliest and most grateful acknowledgments are due on this occasion. But of those whom I have named, and of many others whom I might name, so long among the honored and familiar figures of this metropolis, not one is left to be the subject of our congratulations. We all rejoice, however, to welcome the presence of one of their contemporaries and friends, whose munificent endowments for art, education, religion, and charity entitle him to so enviable a place on the roll of American philanthropists, the venerable William W. Corcoran, now, and for many years past, our senior vice-president.

Nearly fifteen years elapsed before the plans or the funds of this association were in a state of sufficient forwardness to warrant them even in fixing a day for laying the first foundation-stone of the contemplated structure. That day arrived at last—the 4th of July, 1848. And a great day it was in this capital of the nation. There had been no day like it here before, and there have been but few, if any, days like it here since. If any one desires a description of it, he will find a most exact and vivid one in the columns of the old National Intelligencer—doubtless from the pen of that prince of editors, the accomplished Joseph Gales. I recall among the varied features of the long procession Freemasons of every order, with their richest regalia, including the precious gavel and apron of Washington himself; firemen, with their old-fashioned engines; Odd-Fellows from a thousand lodges; temperance societies and other associations innumerable; the children of the schools, long ago grown to mature manhood; the military escort of regulars, marines, and volunteer militia from all parts of the country, commanded by Generals Quitman and Cadwalader and Colonel May, then crowned with laurels won in Mexico, which long ago were laid upon their graves. I recall, too, the masses of the people, of all classes, and sexes, and ages, and colors, gazing from the windows, or thronging the sidewalks, or grouped in countless thousands upon the Monument grounds. But I look around in vain for any of the principal witnesses of that imposing ceremonial; the venerable widows of Alexander Hamilton and James Madison; President Polk and his Cabinet, as then constituted—Buchanan, Marcy, John Y. Mason, Walker, Cave Johnson, and Clifford; Vice-President Dallas; George Washington Parke Custis, the adopted son of the great chief; not forgetting Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson, both then members of the House of Representatives, and for whom the liveliest imagination could hardly have pictured what the future had in store for them. Of that whole Congress there are now but a handful of survivors, and probably not more than two or three of them present here to-day—not one in either branch of Congress, nor one, as I believe, in any department of the national service.

To those of us who took part in the laying of that first stone, or who witnessed the ceremonies of the august occasion, and who have followed the slow ascent of the stupendous pile, sometimes with hope and sometimes with despair, its successful completion is, I need not say, an unspeakable relief, as well as a heartfelt delight and joy. I hazard little in saying that there are some here to-day, unwearied workers in the cause, like my friends Horatio King and Dr. Toner—to name no others—to whose parting hour a special pang would have been added had they died without the sight which now greets their longing eyes on yonder plain.

I dare not venture on any detailed description of the long intervening agony between the laying of the first stone and the lifting of the last. It would fill a volume, and will be sure hereafter to furnish material for an elaborate monograph, whose author will literally find "sermons in stones"—for almost every stone has its story if not its sermon. Every year of the first decade certainly had its eventful and noteworthy experiences. The early enthusiasm which elicited contributions to the amount of more than a quarter of a million of dollars from men, women, and children in all parts of the land, and which carried up the shaft more than a hundred and fifty feet almost at a bound; the presentation and formal reception of massive blocks of marble, granite, porphyry, or freestone from every State in the Union and from so many foreign nations, beginning, according to the catalogue, with a stone from Bunker Hill and ending with one from the Emperor of Brazil; the annual assemblies at its base on each succeeding Fourth of July, with speeches by distinguished visitors; the sudden illness and sad death of that sterling patriot President Zachary Taylor, after an exposure to the mid-day heat at the gathering in 1850, when the well-remembered Senator Foote, of Mississippi, had indulged in too exuberant an address—these were among its beginnings; the end was still a whole generation distant.

Later on came the long, long disheartening pause, when—partly owing to the financial embarrassments of the times, partly owing to the political contentions and convulsions of the country, and partly owing to unhappy dissensions in the association itself—any further contributions failed to be forthcoming, all interest in the monument seemed to flag and die away, and all work on it was suspended and practically abandoned. A deplorable civil war soon followed, and all efforts to renew popular interest in its completion were palsied.

How shall I depict the sorry spectacle which those first one hundred and fifty-six feet, in their seemingly hopeless, helpless condition, with that dismal derrick still standing as in mockery upon their summit, presented to the eye of every comer to the capital for nearly a quarter of a century! No wonder the unsightly pile became the subject of pity or derision. No wonder there were periodical panics about the security of its foundation, and a chronic condemnation of the original design. No wonder that suggestions for tearing it all down began to be entertained in many minds, and were advocated by many pens and tongues. That truncated shaft, with its untidy surroundings, looked only like an insult to the memory of Washington. It symbolized nothing but an ungrateful country, not destined—as, God be thanked, it still was—to growth and grandeur and imperishable glory, but doomed to premature decay, to discord, strife, and ultimate disunion. Its very presence was calculated to discourage many hearts from other things, as well as from itself. It was an "abomination of desolation standing where it ought not." All that followed of confusion and contention in our country's history seemed foreshadowed and prefigured in that humiliating spectacle, and one could almost read on its sides in letters of blood, "Divided! Weighed in the balance! Found wanting!"

And well might that crude and undigested mass have stood so forever, or until the hand of man or the operation of the elements should have crushed and crumbled it into dust, if our Union had then perished. An unfinished, fragmentary, crumbling monument to Washington would have been a fit emblem of a divided and ruined country. Washington himself would not have had it finished. He would have desired no tribute, however imposing, from either half of a disunited republic. He would have turned with abhorrence from being thought the father of anything less than one country, with one constitution and one destiny.

And how cheering and how inspiring the reflection, how grand and glorious the fact, that no sooner were our unhappy contentions at an end, no sooner were Union and Liberty, one and inseparable, once more and, as we trust and believe forever, reasserted and reassured, than this monument to Washington gave signs of fresh life, began to attract new interest and new effort, and soon was seen rising again slowly but steadily toward the skies—stone after stone, course upon course, piled up in peace, with foundations extended to the full demand of the enormous weight to be placed upon them, until we can now hail it as complete! Henceforth and forever it shall be lovingly associated, not only with the memory of him in whose honor it has been erected, but with an era of assured peace, unity, and concord, which would have been dearer to his heart than the costliest personal memorial which the toil and treasure of his countrymen could have constructed. The Union is itself the all-sufficient and the only sufficient monument to Washington. The Union was nearest and dearest to his great heart. "The Union in any event," were the most emphatic words of his immortal Farewell Address. Nothing less than the Union would ever have been accepted or recognized by him as a monument commensurate with his services and his fame. Nothing less ought ever to be accepted or recognized as such by us, or by those who shall rise up, generation after generation, to do homage to his memory!

For the grand consummation which we celebrate to-day we are indebted primarily to the National Government, under the successive Presidents of the past nine years, with the concurrent action of the two branches of Congress, prompted by committees so often under the lead of the veteran Senator MORRILL, of Vermont. The wise decision and emphatic resolution of Congress on the 2d of August, 1876, inspired by the Centennial Celebration of American Independence, and adopted, as it auspiciously happened, on the hundredth anniversary of the formal signing of the great Declaration, that the monument should no longer be left unfinished, with the appointment of a joint commission to direct and supervise its completion, settled the whole matter. To that joint commission, consisting of the President of the United States for the time being, the senior vice-president of the Monument Association, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, with the Architects of the Capitol and the Treasury, the congratulations and thanks of us all may well be tendered. But I think they will all cordially agree with me that the main credit and honor of what has been accomplished belongs peculiarly and pre-eminently to the distinguished officer of engineers who has been their devoted and untiring agent from the outset. The marvelous work of extending and strengthening the foundations of a structure already weighing, as it did, not less than thirty-two thousand tons—64,000,000 pounds—an operation which has won the admiration of engineers all over the world, and which will always associate this monument with a signal triumph of scientific skill, was executed upon his responsibility and under his personal supervision. His, too, have been the ingenious and effective arrangements by which the enormous shaft has been carried up, course after course, until it has reached its destined height of five hundred and fifty-five feet, as we see it at this hour. To Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey, whose name is associated in three generations with valued military service to his country, the successful completion of the monument is due. But he would not have us forget his accomplished assistant, Capt. George W. Davis, and neither of them would have us fail to remember Superintendent McLaughlin and the hard-handed and honest-hearted mechanics who have labored so long under their direction.

Finis coronat opus. The completion crowns the work. To-day that work speaks for itself, and needs no other orator. Mute and lifeless as it seems, it has a living and audible voice for all who behold it, and no one can misinterpret its language. Nor will any one, I think, longer cavil about its design. That design, let me add, originally prepared by the Washington architect, Robert Mills of South Carolina, and adopted long before I had any relations to this association, was commended to public favor by such illustrious names as Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, Albert Gallatin, Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster. A colonnade encircling its base, and intended as a sort of pantheon, was soon discarded from the plan. Its main feature, from the first, was an obelisk, after the example of that which had then been recently agreed upon for Bunker Hill. And so it stands to-day, a simple sublime obelisk of pure white marble, its proportions, in spite of its immense height, conforming exactly to those of the most celebrated obelisks of antiquity, as my accomplished and lamented friend, our late minister to Italy, so happily pointed out to us. It is not, indeed, as were those ancient obelisks, a monolith, a single stone cut whole from the quarry; that would have been obviously impossible for anything so colossal; nor could we have been expected to attempt the impossible in deference to Egyptian methods of construction. We might almost as well be called on to adopt as the emblems of American progress the bronze crabs which were found at the base of Cleopatra's Needle! America is certainly at liberty to present new models in art as well as in government, or to improve upon old ones; and, as I ventured to suggest some years ago, our monument to Washington will be all the more significant and symbolic in embodying, as it does, the idea of our cherished national motto, E pluribus unum. That compact, consolidated structure, with its countless blocks, inside and outside, held firmly in position by their own weight and pressure, will ever be an instructive type of the national strength and grandeur which can only be secured by the union of "many into one."

Had the fine arts indeed made such advances in our country forty years ago as we are now proud to recognize, it is not improbable that a different design might have been adopted; but I am by no means sure it would have been a more effective and appropriate one. There will always be ample opportunity for the display of decorative art in our land. The streets and squares of this city and of all our great cities are wide open for the statues and architectural memorials of our distinguished statesmen and soldiers, and such monuments are everywhere welcomed and honored. But is not—I ask in all sincerity—is not the acknowledged pre-eminence of the Father of his Country, first without a second, more fitly and adequately represented by that soaring shaft, rising high above trees and spires and domes and all the smoke and stir of earth—as he ever rose above sectional prejudices and party politics and personal interests—overtopping and dominating all its surroundings, gleaming and glistening out at every vista as far as human sight can reach, arresting and riveting the eye at every turn, while it shoots triumphantly to the skies? Does not—does not, I repeat, that colossal unit remind all who gaze at it, more forcibly than any arch or statue could do, that there is one name in American history above all other names, one character more exalted than all other characters, one example to be studied and revered beyond all other examples, one bright particular star in the clear upper sky of our firmament, whose guiding light and peerless luster are for all men and for all ages, never to be lost sight of, never to be unheeded? Of that name, of that character, of that example, of that glorious guiding light, our obelisk, standing on the very spot selected by Washington himself for a monument to the American Revolution, and on the site which marks our national meridian, will be a unique memorial and symbol forever.

For oh, my friends, let us not longer forget, or even seem to forget, that we are here to commemorate not the monument but the man. That stupendous pile has not been reared for any vain purpose of challenging admiration for itself. It is not, I need not say it is not, as a specimen of advanced art, for it makes no pretension to that; it is not as a signal illustration of engineering skill and science, though that may confidently be claimed for it; it is not, certainly it is not, as the tallest existing structure in the world, for we do not measure the greatness of men by the height of their monuments, and we know that this distinction may be done away with here or elsewhere in future years; but it is as a memorial of the pre-eminent figure in modern or in ancient history the world over—of the man who has left the loftiest example of public and private virtues, and whose exalted character challenges the admiration and homage of mankind. It is this example and this character—it is the man, and not the monument, that we are here to commemorate!

Assembled in these legislative halls of the nation, as near to the anniversary of his birth as a due respect for the day of our Lord will allow, to signalize the long-delayed accomplishment of so vast a work, it is upon him in whose honor it has been upreared, and upon the incomparable and inestimable services he has rendered to his country and to the world, that our thoughts should be concentrated at this hour. Yet what can I say, what can any man say, of Washington, which has not already been rendered as familiar as household words, not merely to those who hear me, but to all readers of history and all lovers of liberty throughout the world? How could I hope to glean anything from a field long ago so carefully and lovingly reaped by such men as John Marshall and Jared Sparks, by Guizot and Edward Everett and Washington Irving, as well as by our eminent living historian, the venerable George Bancroft, happily here with us to-day?

Others, many others, whom I dare not attempt to name or number, have vied with each other in describing a career of whose minutest details no American is ever weary, and whose variety and interest can never be exhausted. Every stage and step of that career, every scene of that great and glorious life, from the hour of his birth, one hundred and fifty-three years ago—"about 10 in the morning of the 11th day of February, 1731-2," as recorded in his mother's Bible—in that primitive Virginia farm-house in the county of Westmoreland, of which the remains of the "great brick chimney of the kitchen" have been identified only within a few years past—every scene, I say, of that grand and glorious life, from that ever-memorable hour of his nativity, has been traced and illustrated by the most accomplished and brilliant pens and tongues of our land.

His childhood, under the loving charge of that venerated mother, who delighted to say that "George had always been a good son," who happily lived not only to see him safely restored to her after the exposures and perils of the Revolutionary struggle, but to see him, in her eighty-second year, unanimously elected to be the President in Peace of the country of which he had been the Saviour in War; his primary education in that "old-field school-house," with Hobby, the sexton of the parish, for his first master; his early and romantic adventures as a land-surveyor; his narrow escape from being a midshipman in the British navy at 14 years of age, for which a warrant had been obtained and his luggage actually put on board a man-of-war anchored in the river just below Mount Vernon; his still narrower and hairbreadth escapes from Indian arrows and from French bullets, and his survival—the only mounted officer not killed—at the defeat of Braddock, of whom he was an aid-de-camp; together with that most remarkable prediction of the Virginia pastor, Samuel Davies, afterward president of Princeton College, pointing him out—in a sermon, in 1755, on his return, at the age of 23, from the disastrous field of the Monongahela—as "that heroic youth Colonel Washington, whom I can not but hope Providence has preserved in so signal a manner for some important service to his country"—who has forgotten, who can ever forget these most impressive incidents of that opening career by which he was indeed so providentially preserved, prepared, and trained up for the eventful and illustrious future which awaited him?

Still less can any American forget his taking his seat, soon afterward, in the Virginia House of Burgesses—with the striking tribute to his modesty which he won from the Speaker—and his subsequent election to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, where, on the 15th of June, 1775, at the suggestion of John Adams and on the motion of Thomas Johnson, afterward governor of Maryland, he was unanimously appointed "General and Commander-in-Chief of such forces as are, or shall be, raised for the maintenance and preservation of American liberty." Nor can any of us require to be reminded of the heroic fortitude, the unswerving constancy, and the unsparing self-devotion with which he conducted through seven or eight years that protracted contest, with all its toils and trials, its vexations and vicissitudes, from the successful siege of Boston, his first great triumph, followed by those masterly movements on the Delaware, which no less celebrated a soldier than Frederick the Great declared "the most brilliant achievements of any recorded in the annals of military action," and so along, through all the successes and reverses and sufferings and trials of Monmouth and Brandywine and Germantown and Valley Forge, to the siege of Yorktown, in 1781, where, with the aid of our generous and gallant allies, under the lead of Rochambeau and De Grasse and La Fayette, he won at last that crowning victory on the soil of his beloved Virginia.

Nor need I recall to you the still nobler triumphs witnessed during all this period—triumphs in which no one but he had any share—triumphs over himself: not merely in his magnanimous appreciation of the exploits of his subordinates, even when unjustly and maliciously contrasted with disappointments and alleged inaction of his own, but in repelling the machinations of discontented and mutinous officers at Newburg, in spurning overtures to invest him with dictatorial and even kingly power, and in finally surrendering his sword and commission so simply, so sublimely, to the Congress from which he had received them.

Or, turning sharply from this summary and familiar sketch of his military career, of which, take it for all in all, its long duration, its slender means, its vast theater, its glorious aims and ends and results, there is no parallel in history—turning sharply from all this, need I recall him, in this presence, presiding with paramount influence and authority over the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, and then, with such consummate discretion, dignity, and wisdom, over the original administration of that Constitution, when the principles and precedents of our great Federal system of government were molded, formed, and established?

It was well said by John Milton, in one of his powerful defenses of the people of England, "War has made many great whom peace makes small." But of Washington we may say, as Milton said of Cromwell, that, while war made him great, peace made him greater; or rather that both war and peace alike gave opportunity for the display of those incomparable innate qualities which no mere circumstances could create or destroy.

But his sword was not yet quite ready to rest quietly in its scabbard. Need I recall him once more, after his retirement from a second term of the Chief Magistracy, accepting a subordinate position, under his successor in the Presidency, as Lieutenant-General of the American armies in view of an impending foreign war, which, thank God, was so happily averted?

Nor can any one who hears me require to be reminded of that last scene of all, when, in his eight-and-sixtieth year, having been overtaken by a fatal shower of sleet and snow in the midst of those agricultural pursuits in which he so much delighted at Mount Vernon, he laid himself calmly down to die—"not afraid to go," as he whispered to his physician—and left his whole country in tears such as had never flowed before. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace!"

Eighty-five years ago to-morrow—his sixty-eighth birthday—was solemnly assigned by Congress for a general manifestation of that overwhelming national sorrow, and for the commemoration, by eulogies, addresses, sermons, and religious rites, of the great life which had thus been closed. But long before that anniversary arrived, and one day only after the tidings had reached the seat of Government in Philadelphia, President John Adams, in reply to a message of the House of Representatives, had anticipated all panegyrics by a declaration, as true to-day as it was then, that he was "the most illustrious and beloved personage which this country ever produced," while Henry Lee, of Virginia, through the lips of John Marshall, had summed up and condensed all that was felt, and all that could be or ever can be said, in those imperishable words, which will go ringing down the centuries, in every clime, in every tongue, till time shall be no more, "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen!"

But there are other imperishable words which will resound through the ages, words of his own not less memorable than his acts, some of them in private letters, some of them in official correspondence, some of them in inaugural addresses, and some of them, I need not say, in that immortal Farewell Address which an eminent English historian has pronounced "unequaled by any composition of uninspired wisdom," and which ought to be learned by heart by the children of our schools, like the laws of the Twelve Tables in the schools of ancient Rome, and never forgotten when those children grow up to the privileges and responsibilities of manhood.

It was a custom of the ancient Egyptians, from whom the idea of our monument has been borrowed—I should rather say, evolved—to cover their obelisks with hieroglyphical inscriptions, some of which have to this day perplexed and baffled all efforts to decipher them. Neither Champollion, nor the later Lepsius, nor any of the most skillful Egyptologists, have succeeded in giving an altogether satisfactory reading of the legends on Pompey's Pillar and Cleopatra's Needle. And those inscriptions, at their best, engraved, as they were, on the granite or porphyry, with the letters enameled with gold, and boasted of as illuminating the world with their rays, tell us little except the dates and doings of some despotic Pharaoh, whom we would willingly have seen drowned in the ocean of oblivion, as one of them so deservedly was in the depths of the Red Sea. One row of the inscriptions on Cleopatra's Needle, as it so strangely greets us in the fashionable promenade of our commercial capital, informs us, in magniloquent terms, of Thothmes III, who lived in the age in which Moses was born, the age which saw the Exodus of the Israelites. He is set down as a "Child of the Sun, endowed with power, life, and stability." Other inscriptions style him, or some other Pharaoh to whom they relate, the "Chastiser of Foreign Nations," "The Conqueror," "The Strong Bull."

Our Washington Needle, while it has all of the severe simplicity, and far more than all of the massive grandeur, which were the characteristics of Egyptian architecture, bears no inscriptions whatever, and none are likely ever to be carved on it. Around its base bas-reliefs in bronze may possibly one day be placed, illustrative of some of the great events of Washington's life; while on the terrace beneath may, perhaps, be arranged emblematic figures of Justice and Patriotism, of Peace, Liberty, and Union. All this, however, may well be left for future years, or even for future generations. Each succeeding generation, indeed, will take its own pride in doing whatever may be wisely done in adorning the surroundings of this majestic pile, and in thus testifying its own homage to the memory of the Father of his Country. Yet to the mind's eye of an American patriot those marble faces will never seem vacant—never seem void or voiceless. No mystic figures or hieroglyphical signs will, indeed, be described on them. No such vainglorious words as "Conqueror," or "Chastiser of Foreign Nations," nor any haughty assumption or heathen ascription as "Child of the Sun" will be deciphered on them. But ever and anon, as he gazes, there will come flashing forth in letters of living light some of the great words, and grand precepts, and noble lessons of principle and duty which are the matchless bequest of Washington to his country and to mankind.

Can we not all read there already, as if graven by some invisible finger, or inscribed with some sympathetic ink, which it requires no learning of scholars, no lore of Egypt, nothing but love of our own land, to draw out and make legible, those masterly words of his letter to the governors of the States in 1783:

There are four things which, I humbly conceive, are essential to the well-being—I may even venture to say, to the existence—of the United States as an independent power: First, an indissoluble Union of the States under one Federal head; second, a sacred regard to public justice; third, the adoption of a proper peace establishment; and, fourth, the prevalence of that pacific and friendly disposition among the people of the United States which will induce them to forget their local prejudices and policies, to make those mutual concessions which are requisite to the general prosperity, and, in some instances, to sacrifice their individual advantages to the interest of the community. These are the pillars on which the glorious fabric of our independency and national character must be supported.

Can we not read, again, on another of those seemingly vacant sides, that familiar passage in his Farewell Address—a jewel of thought and phraseology, often imitated, but never matched—"The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations?" and, not far below it, his memorable warning against party spirit—"A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume?"

Still again, terser legends from the same prolific source salute our eager gaze: "Cherish public credit;" "Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all;" "Promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

And, above all—a thousand-fold more precious than all the rest—there will come streaming down from time to time, to many an eager and longing eye, from the very point where its tiny aluminium apex reaches nearest to the skies—and shining forth with a radiance which no vision of Constantine, no labarum for his legions, could ever have eclipsed—some of those solemnly reiterated declarations and counsels, which might almost be called the confession and creed of Washington, and which can never be forgotten by any Christian patriot—

When I contemplate the interposition of Providence, as it was visibly manifest in guiding us through the Revolution, in preparing us for the reception of the General Government, and in conciliating the good-will of the people of America toward one another after its adoption, I feel myself oppressed and almost overwhelmed with a sense of Divine munificence. I feel that nothing is due to my personal agency in all those wonderful and complicated events, except what can be attributed to an honest zeal for the good of my country. * * * No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore an Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men, more than the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of Providential agency. * * * Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and of citizens.

And thus on all those seemingly blank and empty sides will be seen, from time to time, in his own unequalled language, the grand precepts and principles of peace, justice, education, morality, and religion, which he strove to inculcate, while encircling and illuminating them all, and enveloping the whole monument, from corner-stone to capstone, will be read with rapture by every patriotic eye, and be echoed by every patriotic heart, "The Union, the Union in any event!"

But what are all the noble words which Washington wrote or uttered, what are all the incidents of his birth and death, what are all the details of his marvelous career from its commencement to its close, in comparison with his own exalted character as a man! Rarely was Webster more impressive than when, on the completion of the monument at Bunker Hill, in describing what our country had accomplished for the welfare of mankind, he gave utterance, with his characteristic terseness, and in his inimitable tones, to the simple assertion, "America has furnished to the world the character of Washington!" And well did he add that, "if our American institutions had done nothing else, that alone would have entitled them to the respect of mankind."

The character of Washington! Who can delineate it worthily? Who can describe that priceless gift of America to the world in terms which may do it any sort of justice, or afford any degree of satisfaction to his hearers or to himself?

Modest, disinterested, generous, just—of clean hands and a pure heart—self-denying and self-sacrificing, seeking nothing for himself, declining all remuneration beyond the reimbursement of his outlays, scrupulous to a farthing in keeping his accounts, of spotless integrity, scornful gifts, charitable to the needy, forgiving injuries and injustices, brave, fearless, heroic, with a prudence ever governing his impulses and a wisdom ever guiding his valor—true to his friends, true to his whole country, true to himself—fearing God, believing in Christ, no stranger to private devotion or public worship, or to the holiest offices of the Church to which he belonged, but ever gratefully recognizing a Divine aid and direction in all that he attempted and in all that he accomplished—what epithet, what attribute, could be added to that consummate character to commend it as an example above all other characters in merely human history!

From first to last he never solicited or sought an office, military or civil. Every office stood candidate for him, and was ennobled by his acceptance of it. Honors clustered around him as if by the force of "first intention." Responsibilities heaped themselves on his shoulders as if by the law of gravitation. They could rest safely nowhere else, and they found him ever ready to bear them all, ever equal to discharge them all. To what is called personal magnetism he could have had little pretension. A vein of dignified reserve, which Houdon and Stuart have rightly made his peculiar characteristic in marble and on canvas, repressed all familiarities with him. His magnetism was that of merit—superior, surpassing merit—the merit of spotless integrity, of recognized ability, and of unwearied willingness to spend and be spent in the service of his country. That was sufficient to attract irresistibly to his support not only the great mass of the people, but the wisest and best of his contemporaries in all quarters of the Union, and from them he selected, with signal discrimination, such advisers and counselors, in war and in peace, as have never surrounded any other American leader. No jealousy of their abilities and accomplishments ever ruffled his breast, and with them he achieved our Independence, organized our Constitutional Government, and stamped his name indelibly on the age in which he lived as the Age of Washington!

Well did Chief-Justice Marshall, in that admirable preface to the biography of his revered and illustrious friend, sum up with judicial precision the services he was about to describe in detail. Well and truly did he say:

As if the chosen instrument of Heaven, selected for the purpose of effecting the great designs of Providence respecting this our Western Hemisphere, it was the peculiar lot of this distinguished man, at every epoch when the destinies of his country seemed dependent on the measures adopted, to be called by the united voice of his fellow-citizens to those high stations on which the success of those measures principally depended.

I do not forget that there have been other men, in other days, in other lands, and in our own land, who have been called to command larger armies, to preside over more distracted councils, to administer more extended governments, and to grapple with as complicated and critical affairs. Gratitude and honor wait ever on their persons and their names! But we do not estimate Miltiades at Marathon, or Pausanias at Plataea, or Themistocles at Salamis, or Epaminondas at Mantinea or Leuctra, or Leonidas at Thermopylae, by the number of the forces which they led on land or on sea. Nor do we gauge the glory of Columbus by the size of the little fleet with which he ventured so heroically upon the perils of a mighty unknown deep. There are some circumstances which can not occur twice; some occasions of which there can be no repetition; some names which will always assert their individual pre-eminence, and will admit of no rivalry or comparison. The glory of Columbus can never be eclipsed, never approached, till our New World shall require a fresh discovery; and the glory of Washington will remain unique and peerless until American Independence shall require to be again achieved, or the foundations of constitutional liberty to be laid anew.

Think not that I am claiming an immaculate perfection for any mortal man. One Being only has ever walked this earth of ours without sin. Washington had his infirmities and his passions like the rest of us; he would have been more or less than human had he never been overcome by them. There were young officers around him, in camp and elsewhere, not unlikely to have thrown temptations in his path, whether he ever yielded to them or not. There were treacherous men, too, whose words in council, or conduct in battle, or secret plottings behind his back, aroused his righteous indignation, and gave occasion for memorable bursts of anger. Now and then there was a disaster, like that of St. Clair's expedition against the Indians in 1791, the first tidings of which stirred the very depths of his soul, and betrayed him into a momentary outbreak of mingled grief and rage, which proved how violent were the emotions he was so generally able to control.

He made no boast of virtue or of valor, and no amount of flattery ever led him to be otherwise than distrustful of his own ability and merits. As early as 1757, when only 25 years of age, he wrote to Governor Dinwiddie:

That I have foibles, and perhaps many of them, I shall not deny; I should esteem myself, as the world also would, vain and empty were I to arrogate perfection.

On accepting the command of the Army of the Revolution, in 1775, he said to Congress:

I beg it may be remembered, by every gentleman in the room that I this day declare, with the utmost sincerity, I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with.

And, in 1777, when informed that anonymous accusations against him had been sent to Laurens, then President of Congress, he wrote privately to beg that the paper might be at once submitted to the body to which it was addressed, adding these frank and noble words:

Why should I be exempt from censure, the unfailing lot of an elevated station? Merit and talents which I can not pretend to rival have ever been subject to it. My heart tells me it has been my unremitted aim to do the best which circumstances would permit; yet I may have been very often mistaken in my judgment of the means, and may, in many instances, deserve the imputation of error.

And when at last he was contemplating a final retirement from the Presidency, and in one of the draughts of his Farewell Address had written that he withdrew "with a pure heart and undefiled hands," or words to that effect, he suppressed the passage and all other similar expressions, lest, as he suggested, he should seem to claim for himself a measure of perfection which all the world now unites in according to. For I hazard little in asserting that all the world does now accord to Washington a tribute, which has the indorsement of the Encyclopædia Britannica, that, "of all men that have ever lived, he was the greatest of good men, and the best of great men." Or, let me borrow the same idea from a great English poet, who gave his young life and brilliant genius to the cause of liberty in modern Greece. "Where," wrote Byron—

Where may the wearied eye repose
When gazing on the great,
Where neither guilty glory glows,
Nor despicable state!
Yes, one—the first, the last, the best,
The Cincinnatus of the West,
Whom envy dared not hate—
Requented the name of Washington,
To make men blush there was but one!

To what other name have such tributes ever been paid by great and good men abroad as well as at home? You have not forgotten the language of Lord Erskine in his inscription of one of his productions to Washington himself:

You are the only being for whom I have an awful reverence.

You have not forgotten the language of Charles James Fox, in the House of Commons:

Illustrious man, before whom all borrowed greatness sinks into insignificance.

You have not forgotten the language of Lord Brougham, twice uttered, at long intervals, and with a purpose, as Brougham himself once told me, to impress and enforce those emphatic words as his fixed and final judgment:

Until time shall be no more will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and virtue be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington!

Nor can I fail to welcome the crowning tribute, perhaps from our motherland, reaching me, as it has, at the last moment of revising what I had prepared for this occasion, in a published letter from Gladstone, her great prime minister, who, after saying in casual conversation that Washington was "the purest figure in history," writes deliberately, "that if, among all the pedestals supplied by history for public characters of extraordinary nobility and purity, I saw one higher than all the rest, and if I were required at a moment's notice to name the fittest occupant for it, I think my choice, at any time during the last forty-five years, would have lighted, and it would now light, upon Washington!"

But if any one would get a full impression of the affection and veneration in which Washington was held by his contemporaries, let him turn, almost at random, to the letters which were addressed to him, or which were written about him, by the eminent men, military or civil, American or European, who were privileged to correspond with him, or who ever so casually found occasion to allude to his career and character. And let him by no means forget, as he reads them, that those letters were written a hundred years ago, when language was more measured, if not more sincere, than now, and before the indiscriminate use of the superlative, and the exaggerations and adulations of flatterers and parasites, sending great and small alike down to posterity as patterns of every virtue under heaven, had tended to render such tributes as suspicious as they often are worthless.

What, for instance, said plain-speaking old Benjamin Franklin?

My fine crab-tree walking-stick, with a gold head curiously wrought in the form of the cap of Liberty—

These are the words of his will, in 1789—

I give to my friend and the friend of mankind George Washington. If it were a scepter, he has merited it, and would become it.

Happy, happy America—

Wrote Gouverneur Morris from Paris, in 1793, when the French revolution was making such terrific progress—

Happy, happy America, governed by reason, by law, by the man whom she loves, whom she almost adores. It is the pride of my life to consider that man as my friend, and I hope long to be honored with that title.

I have always admired—

Wrote to him Count Herzburg, from Berlin, where he had presided for thirty years over the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, under Frederick the Great—

I have always admired your great virtues and qualities, your disinterested patriotism, your unshaken courage and simplicity of manners—qualifications by which you surpass men even the most celebrated of antiquity.

I am sorry—

Wrote Patrick Henry, then Governor of Virginia, in allusion to the accusations of one of the notorious faction of 1777—

I am sorry there should be one man who counts himself my friend who is not yours.

Thomas Jefferson, who, we all know, sometimes differed from him, took pains, at a later period of his life, to say of him in a record for posterity:

His integrity was most pure; his justice the most inflexible I have ever known; no motives of interest or consanguinity, of friendship or hatred, being able to bias his decision. He was, indeed, in every sense of the word, a wise, a good, and a great man.

If I could now present myself—

Wrote Edmund Randolph, who had made injurious imputations on Washington before and after his dismissal from the Cabinet in 1795—

If I could now present myself before your venerated uncle—

He wrote most touchingly to Judge Bushrod Washington in 1810—

It would be my pride to confess my contrition that I suffered my irritation, let the cause be what it might, to use some of those expressions respecting him, which, at this moment of indifference to the world, I wish to recall, as being inconsistent with my subsequent conviction. My life will, I hope, be sufficiently extended for the recording of my sincere opinion of his virtues and merit in a style which is not the result of a mind merely debilitated by misfortune, but of that Christian philosophy on which alone I depend for inward tranquillity.

And far more touching and more telling still is the fact that even Thomas Conway, the leader of that despicable cabal at Valley Forge, but who lived to redeem his name in other lands, if not in our own, when believing himself to be mortally wounded in a duel, in 1778, and "just able," as he said, "to hold the pen for a few minutes," employed those few minutes in writing to Washington to express his "sincere grief for having done, written, or said anything disagreeable" to him, adding these memorable words:

You are, in my eyes, the great and good man. May you long enjoy the love, veneration, and esteem of these States, whose liberties you have asserted by your virtues!

From his illustrious friend Alexander Hamilton I need not cite a word. His whole life bore testimony, more impressive than words, to an admiration and affection for his great chief, which could not be exceeded, and which no momentary misunderstandings could shake.

But listen once more, and only once more, to La Fayette, writing to Washington from Cadiz in 1783, when the glad tidings of the treaty of peace had just reached him:

Were you but such a man as Julius Caesar, or the King of Prussia, I should almost be sorry for you at the end of the great tragedy where you are acting such a part. But, with my dear general, I rejoice at the blessings of a peace in which our noble ends have been secured. * * * As for you, who truly can say you have done all this, what must your virtuous and good heart feel in the happy moment when the Revolution you have made is now firmly established!

Rightly and truly did La Fayette say that his beloved general was of another spirit and of a different mold from Caesar and Frederick. Washington had little, or nothing, in common with the great military heroes of his own or any other age—conquering for the sake of conquest—"wading through slaughter to a throne"—and overrunning the world at a countless cost of blood and treasure to gratify their own ambition, or to realize some mad dream of universal empire. No ancient Plutarch has furnished any just parallel for him in this respect. No modern Plutarch will find one. In all history, ancient and modern alike, he stands, in this respect, as individual and unique as yonder majestic needle.

In his eulogy on Washington before the Legislature of Massachusetts the eloquent Fisher Ames, my earliest predecessor in Congress from the Boston district, said, eighty-five years ago, that in contemplating his career and character, "Mankind perceived some change in their ideas of greatness. * * * The splendor of power, and even the name of conqueror, had grown dim in their eyes. * * * They knew and felt that the world's wealth, and its empire too, would be a bribe far beneath his acceptance." Yes, they all saw that he bore ever in his mind and in his heart, as he said in Philadelphia on his way to Cambridge, in 1775, that "as the sword was the last resort for the preservation of our liberties, so it ought to be the first thing laid aside when those liberties were firmly established." And they saw him lay down his sword at the earliest moment, and retire to the pursuits of peace, only returning again to public service at the unanimous call of his country, to preside for a limited period over a free constitutional republic, and then eagerly resuming the rank of an American citizen. That was the example which changed the ideas of mankind as to what constitutes real greatness. And that example was exhibited for all nations and for all ages, never to be forgotten or overlooked, by him who was born one hundred and fifty-three years ago to-morrow in that primitive little Virginia farm-house.

I am myself a New Englander by birth, a son of Massachusetts, bound by the strongest ties of affection and of blood to honor and venerate the earlier and the later worthies of the old Puritan Commonwealth, jealous of their fair fame, and ever ready to assert and vindicate their just renown. But I turn reverently to the Old Dominion to-day, and salute her as the mother of the pre-eminent and incomparable American, the Father of his Country, and the foremost figure in all merely human history. In the words of our own poet, Lowell:

Virginia gave us this imperial man,
Cast in the massive mold
Of those high-statured ages old
Which into grander forms our mortal metal ran;
She gave us this unblemished gentleman:
What shall we give her back but love and praise?

Virginia has had other noble sons, whom I will not name, but whom I do not forget. When I remember how many they are, and how great they have been, and how much our country has owed them, I may well exclaim, "Felix prole virum." But, as I think of her Washington—of our Washington let me rather say—I am almost ready to add, "Læta Deum partu!"

A celebrated philosopher of antiquity, who was nearly contemporary with Christ, but who could have known nothing of what was going on in Judea, and who alas! did not always "reck his own rede"—wrote thus to a younger friend, as a precept for a worthy life:

Some good man must be singled out and kept ever before our eyes, that we may live as if he were looking on, and do everything as if he could see it.

Let me borrow the spirit, if not the exact letter, of that precept, and address it to the young men of my country: "Keep ever in your mind and before your mind's eye the loftiest standard of character. You have it, I need not say, supremely and unapproachably, in Him who spake as never man spake and lived as never man lived, and who died for the sins of the world. That character stands apart and alone. But of merely mortal men the monument we have dedicated to-day points out the one for all Americans to study, to imitate, and, as far as may be, to emulate. Keep his example and his character ever before your eyes and in your hearts. Live and act as if he were seeing and judging your personal conduct and your public career. Strive to approximate that lofty standard, and measure your integrity and your patriotism by your nearness to it or your departure from it. The prime meridian of universal longitude, on sea or land, may be at Greenwich, or at Paris, or where you will. But the prime meridian of pure, disinterested, patriotic, exalted human character will be marked forever by yonder Washington obelisk!"

Yes, to the young men of America, under God, it remains, as they rise up from generation to generation, to shape the destinies of their country's future; and woe unto them if, regardless of the great example which is set before them, they prove unfaithful to the tremendous responsibilities which rest upon them!

Yet, let me not seem even for a moment to throw off upon the children the rightful share of those responsibilities which belongs to their fathers. Upon us, upon us it devolves to provide that the advancing generations shall be able to comprehend and equal to meet the demands which are thus before them. It is ours, it is yours especially, Senators and Representatives, to supply them with the means of that universal education which is the crying want of our land, and without which any intelligent and successful free government is impossible.

We are just entering on a new olympiad of our national history—the twenty-fifth olympiad since Washington first entered on the administration of our Constitutional Government. The will of the people has already designated under whom the first century of that Government is to be closed, and the best hopes and wishes of every patriot will be with him in the great responsibilities on which he is about to enter. No distinction of party or of section prevents our all feeling alike that our country, by whomsoever governed, is still and always our country; to be cherished in all our hearts, to be upheld and defended by all our hands!

Most happy would it be if the 30th of April, on which the first inauguration of Washington took place in 1789, could henceforth be the date of all future inaugurations (as it might be by a slight amendment to the Constitution), giving, as it would, a much-needed extension to the short sessions of Congress, and letting the second century of our constitutional history begin where the first century began.

But let the date be what it may, the inspiration of the centennial anniversary of that first great inauguration must not be lost upon us. Would that any words of mine could help us all, old and young, to resolve that the principles and character and example of Washington, as he came forward to take the oaths of office on that day, shall once more be recognized and revered as the model for all who succeed him, and that his disinterested purity and patriotism shall be the supreme test and standard of American statesmanship! That standard can never be taken away from us. The most elaborate and durable monuments may perish. But neither the forces of nature, nor any fiendish crime of man, can ever mar or mutilate a great example of public or private virtue.

Our matchless obelisk stands proudly before us to-day, and we hail it with the exultations of a united and glorious nation. It may or may not be proof against the cavils of critics, but nothing of human construction is proof against the casualties of time. The storms of winter must blow and beat upon it. The action of the elements must soil and discolor it. The lightnings of heaven may scar and blacken it. An earthquake may shake its foundations. Some mighty tornado, or resistless cyclone, may rend its massive blocks asunder and hurl huge fragments to the ground. But the character which it commemorates and illustrates is secure. It will remain unchanged and unchangeable in all its consummate purity and splendor, and will more and more command the homage of succeeding ages in all regions of the earth.

God be praised, that character is ours forever!

The reading of the above was frequently interrupted by general applause.

Then followed music by the Marine Band.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Gentlemen, an oration will now be delivered by Hon. John W. Daniel, of Virginia. [Applause.]

ORATION.

Mr. JOHN W. DANIEL. Mr. President of the United States, Senators, Representatives, Judges, Mr. Chairman, and my Countrymen, alone in its grandeur stands forth the character of Washington in history; alone like some peak that has no fellow in the mountain range of greatness.

"Washington," says Guizot: "Washington did the two greatest things which in politics it is permitted to man to attempt. He maintained by peace the independence of his country, which he had conquered by war. He founded a free government in the name of the principles of order and by re-establishing their sway." Washington did indeed do these things. But he did more. Out of disconnected fragments he molded a whole and made it a country. He achieved his country's independence by the sword. He maintained that independence by peace as by war. He finally established both his country and its freedom in an enduring frame of constitutional government, fashioned to make liberty and union one and inseparable. These four things together constitute the unexampled achievement of Washington.

The world has ratified the profound remark of Fisher Ames, that "he changed mankind's ideas of political greatness." It has approved the opinion of Edward Everett, that he was "the greatest of good men, and the best of great men." It has felt for him, with Erskine, "an awful reverence." It has attested the declaration of Brougham that "he was the greatest man of his own or of any age." It is matter of fact to-day as when General Hamilton, announcing his death to the Army, said:

The voice of praise would in vain endeavor to exalt a name unrivaled in the lists of true glory.

America still proclaims him, as did Col. Henry Lee in the House of Representatives:

The man first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

And from beyond the sea the voice of Alfieri, breathing the soul of all lands and all peoples, still pronounces the blessing:

Happy are you who have for the sublime and permanent basis of your glory the love of country demonstrated by deeds.

Tell me, ye who have unrolled the scrolls that bear the records of the rise and fall of nations; ye before whose eyes has moved the panorama of man's struggles, achievements, and progression, find you anywhere the story of one whose life work is more than a fragment of that which in his life is set before you?

Conquerors who have stretched your scepters over boundless territories; founders of empires who have held your dominions in the reign of law; reformers who have cried aloud in the wilderness of oppression; teachers who have striven to cast down false doctrine, heresy, and schism; statesmen whose brains have throbbed with mighty plans for the amelioration of human society; scar-crowned vikings of the sea, illustrious heroes of the land, who have borne the standards of siege and battle, come forth in bright array from your glorious fanes, and would ye be measured by the measure of his stature? Behold you not in him a more illustrious and more venerable presence? Statesman, soldier, patriot, sage, reformer of creeds, teacher of truth and justice, achiever and preserver of liberty, the first of men, founder and saviour of his country, father of his people—this is he, solitary and unapproachable in his grandeur!

Oh, felicitous Providence that gave to America our Washington!

THE MONUMENT.

High soars into the sky to-day, higher than the pyramid or the dome of St. Paul's or St. Peter's—the loftiest and most imposing structure that man has ever reared—high soars into the sky to where the monument which "We the people of the United States" have uplifted to his memory. It is a fitting monument, more fitting than any statue. For his image could only display him in some one phase of his varied character. So art has fitly typified his exalted life in your plain lofty shaft. Such is his greatness, that only by a symbol could it be represented. As Justice must be blind in order to be whole in contemplation, so History must be silent that by this mighty sign she may disclose the amplitude of her story.

Earth highest yearns to meet a star.

MASSACHUSETTS AND HER ORATOR.

It was fitting that the eminent citizen who thirty-seven years ago spoke at the laying of the corner-stone should be the orator at the consummation of the work which he inaugurated. It was Massachusetts that struck the first blow for Independence; it was her voice that made the stones of Boston to "rise in mutiny;" it was her blessed blood that sealed the covenant of our salvation. The firmament of our national life she has thickly sown with deeds of glory.

JOHN ADAMS.

John Adams of Massachusetts was among the first to urge the name of Washington to the Continental Congress when it commissioned him as Commander-in-Chief of the American forces; it was upon her soil that he drew the sword which was sheathed at Yorktown, and first gave to the battle-breeze the thirteen stripes that now float in new galaxies of stars.

And meet it was that here in the Capitol of the Republic, at the distance of more than a century from its birth, the eloquent son of that illustrious State should span the chasm with his bridge of gold, and emblazon the final arch of commemoration.

And I fancy, too, that in a land where the factious tongues of the elder nations are being hushed at last, and all rival strains commingled in the blood of brotherhood, the accomplished mission of America finds fitting illustration in the Sage descended from the Pilgrims crowning the Hero sprung from the Cavaliers.

VIRGINIA.

It has seemed fitting to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the commission, that a citizen of the State which was the birthplace and the home of Washington; whose House of Burgesses, of which he was a member, made the first burst of opposition against the stamp act, although less pecuniarily interested therein than their New England brethren, and was the first representative body to recommend a general congress of the Colonies; of the State whose Mason drew that Bill of Rights which has been called the Magna Charta of America; whose Jefferson wrote, whose Richard Henry Lee moved, the Declaration that those Colonies be "free and independent States;" whose Henry condensed the Revolution into the electric sentence, "Liberty or death;" of the State which cemented union with the vast territorial dowry out of which five States have been carved, having now here some ninety Representatives; of that State whose Madison was named "the Father of the Constitution," and whose Marshall became its most eminent expounder; of the State which holds within its bosom the sacred ashes of Washington, and cherishes not less the principles which once kindled them with fires of Heaven descended—it has seemed fitting to you, gentlemen, that a citizen of that State should also be invited to deliver an address on this occasion.

Would with all my heart that a worthier one had been your choice. Too highly do I esteem the position in which you place me to feel aught but solemn distrustfulness and apprehension. And who indeed might not shrink from such a theater when a Winthrop's eloquence still thrilled all hearts, with Washington the theme?

Yet, in Virginia's name I thank you for the honor done her. She deserved it. Times there are when even hardihood is virtue; and to such virtue alone do I lay claim in venturing to abide your choice to be her spokesman.

None more than her could I offend did I take opportunity to give her undue exaltation. Her foremost son does not belong to her alone, nor does she so claim him. His part and her part in the Revolution would have been as naught but for what was done so gloriously by his brothers in council and in arms and by her sister Colonies, who kept the mutual pledge of "life, fortune, and sacred honor."

GREETINGS TO SISTER STATES.

New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia—your comrade of the days that tried men's souls salutes you in honor and affection! No laurel could be plucked too bright for Virginia's hand to lay upon your brows!

And ye, our younger companions, who have sprung forth from the wilderness, the prairie, and the mountain, and now extend your empire to the far slopes where your teeming cities light their lamps by the setting sun, what grander tribute to the past, what happier assurance of the present, what more auspicious omens of the future could Heaven vouchsafe us than those which live and move and have their being in your presence? What heart could contemplate the scene and not leap into the exclamation, "I, too, am an American citizen!"

WASHINGTON A VIRGINIAN BEFORE AN AMERICAN.

But may I not remind you that Washington was a Virginian before he became an American, to tell his countrymen that "the name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations?" And may I not seek the fountains from which sprung a character so instinct with love of country?

THE PURITANS AND THE CAVALIERS.

The Puritans of England, who from the landing at Plymouth in 1620 to the uprising against Charles I in 1640, "turned to the New World," in the language of Canning, "to redress the balance of the Old," were quickly followed to America by a new stream of immigration that has left as marked an impress upon our civilization between the South Atlantic and the Mississippi as the sons of the Pilgrims have made between the North Atlantic and the Lakes.

When Charles I was beheaded in 1649, and when his son, the second Charles, was beaten at Worcester in 1651, multitudes of the King's men turned their faces also to the new land of hope, the very events which checked the emigration of the Puritans to New England giving impulse to the tide which moved the Cavaliers to the Old Dominion.

Intense loyalists were these new Virginians, who "would defend the crown if it hung upon a bush;" and when indeed its substance vanished with the royal head that wore it, these "faithful subjects of King and Church" held allegiance to its phantom and to the exiled claimant. But they were not inattentive to their liberties. And if Virginia was the last of all the countries belonging to England to submit to Cromwell, yet she was also "the first state in the world composed of separate boroughs, diffused over an extensive surface, where representation was organized on the principle of universal suffrage."

As in New England the Pilgrim Colony grew apace, so in Virginia prospered that of the Cavaliers. With the love of landed estates which is an instinct of their race, they planted their homes in the fertile lowlands, building great houses on broad acres, surrounded by ornamental grounds and gardens.

The family became a government within itself—the mistress a rural queen, the master a local potentate, with his graziers, seedsmen, gardeners, brewers, butchers, and cooks around him. Many of the heads of families were traveled and accomplished men. The parishes were ministered to by the learned clergy of the Established Church. In the old college of William and Mary ere long were found the resources of classic education, and in the old capital town of Williamsburg the winter season shone resplendent with the entertainments of a refined society.

Born almost to the saddle and to the use of fire-arms, they were keen hunters, and when the chase was over they sat by groaning boards and drank confusion to the Frenchman and Spaniard abroad and to Roundhead and Prelate at home. When the lurking and predatory Indian became the object of pursuit, no speed of his could elude their fiery and gallantly mounted cavalry.

VIRGINIA AND VIRGINIANS OF OLDER TIME.

This was the Virginia, these the Virginians, of the olden time. If even in retrospect their somewhat aristocratic manners touch the sensitive nerve of a democratic people, it may at least be said of them that nothing like despotism, nihilism, communism, or dynamite was ever found amongst them; that they cherished above all things honor and courage, the virtues preservative of all other virtues; that their homes became the nurseries of men, and leaders of men, who could cope with great forces, resolve great problems, and assert great principles. And it is at least true that their habits of thought and living never proved more dangerous to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" than those of others who in later days corrupt the suffrage in the rank growth of cities; build palaces and pile up millions amid crowded paupers; monopolize telegraphic and railway lines by corporate machinery; spurn all relations to politics, save to debauch its agencies for personal gain; and know no Goddess of Liberty and no Eagle of Country save in the images which satire itself has stamped on the Almighty Dollar.

LINEAGE OF WASHINGTON.

In 1657, while yet "a Cromwell filled the Stuart's throne," there came to Virginia with a party of Carlisle who had rebelled against him John Washington, of Yorkshire, England, who became a magistrate and member of the House of Burgesses, and who distinguished himself in Indian warfare as the first Colonel Washington on this side of the water. He was the nephew of that Sir Henry Washington who had led the forlorn hope of Prince Rupert at Bristol in 1643, and who, with a starving and mutinous garrison, had defended Worcester in 1649, answering all calls for surrender that he "awaited His Majesty's commands."

And his progenitors had for centuries, running back to the Norman Conquest, been men of mark and fair renown.

Just pride and modesty of individuality alike forbid the seeking from any source of a borrowed luster, and the Washingtons were never studious or pretentious of ancestral dignities. But "we are quotations from our ancestors," says the Philosopher of Concord—and who will say that in the loyalty to conscience and to principle, and to the right of self-determination of what is principle, which the Washingtons have ever shown whether as loyalist or rebel, was not the germ of that deathless devotion to liberty and country which soon discarded all ancient forms in the mighty stroke for Independence?

ANGLO-SAXON TRAITS.

Two traits of the Anglo-Saxon have ever been equally conspicuous: respect for authority, resistance to its abuse.

A very Tempe had Virginia been, sheltering the loyal Cavaliers in their reverence for authority. The higher trait of the Anglo-Saxon was about to receive more memorable illustration, and she uprose, Olympian-like, in her resistance to its abuse.

And the instrument of Providence to lead her people and their brethren, had he lived in the days when mythic lore invested human heroes with a godlike grace, would have been shrouded in the glory of Olympian Jove.

MOUNT VERNON.

One hundred and fifty-three years ago, on the banks of the Potomac, in the county of Westmoreland, on a spot marked now only by a memorial stone, of the blood of the people whom I have faintly described, the fourth in descent from the Col. John Washington whom I have named, there was born a son to Augustine and Mary Washington. And not many miles above his birthplace is the dwelling where he lived and now lies buried.

Borne upon the bosom of that river which here mirrors Capitol, dome, and monumental shaft in its seaward flow, the river itself seems to reverse its current and bear us silently into the past. Scarce has the vista of the city faded from our gaze when we behold on the woodland height that swells above the waters—amidst walks and groves and gardens—the white porch of that old colonial plantation home which has become the shrine of many a pilgrimage.

Contrasting it as there it stands to-day with the marble halls that we have left behind us, we realize the truth of Emerson: "The atmosphere of moral sentiment is a region of grandeur which reduces all material magnificence to toys, yet opens to every wretch that has reason the doors of the universe."

The quaint old wooden mansion, with the stately but simple old-fashioned mahogany furniture, real and ungarnished; the swords and relics of campaigns and scenes familiar to every school-boy now; the key of the Bastille hanging in the hall incased in glass, calling to mind Tom Paine's happy expression, "That the principle of the American Revolution opened the Bastille is not to be doubted, therefore the key comes to the right place;" the black velvet coat worn when the farewell address to the Army was made; the rooms all in nicety of preparation as if expectant of the coming host—we move among these memorials of days and men long vanished, we stand under the great trees and watch the solemn river, we gaze upon the simple tomb whose silence is unbroken save by the murmur of the waters or the wild bird's note, and we are enveloped in an atmosphere of moral grandeur which no pageantry of moving men nor splendid pile can generate. By the tumulus of Marathon the Greeks have the tradition that in the gloom of night may yet be heard the neighing of horses and the clash of arms. In the spell that broods o'er the sacred graves of Vernon, patriotism, honor, courage, justice, virtue, truth seem bodied forth—the only imperishable realities of man's being.

YOUTH OF WASHINGTON.

There emerges from the shades the figure of a youth over whose cradle had hovered no star of destiny, nor dangled a royal crown—an ingenuous youth, and one who in his early days gave auguries of great powers; the boy whose strong arm could fling a stone across the Rappahannock; whose strong will could tame the most fiery horse; whose just spirit made him the umpire of his fellows; whose obedient heart bowed to a mother's yearning for her son and laid down the midshipman's warrant in the British navy which answered his first ambition's dream; the student transcribing mathematical problems, accounts, and business forms, or listening to soldiers and seamen of vessels in the river as they tell of "hair-breadth 'scapes by flood and field;" the early moralist in his thirteenth year compiling matured "Rules for behavior and conversation;" the surveyor of sixteen, exploring the wilderness for Lord Fairfax; the incipient soldier studying tactics under Adjutant Muse, and taking lessons in broadsword fence from the soldier of fortune, old Jacob Van Braam; the major and adjutant-general of Virginia frontier forces at nineteen—we seem to see him yet as there he stood, a model of manly beauty in his youthful prime, a man in all that makes a man ere manhood's years have been fulfilled standing on the threshold of a grand career, "hearing his days before him and the trumpet of his life."

THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

The scene changes. Out into the world of stern adventures he passes, taking as naturally to the field and the frontier as the eagle to the air. At the age of twenty-one he is riding from Williamsburg to the French post at Venango, in Western Pennsylvania, on a mission for Governor Dinwiddie which requires "courage to cope with savages and sagacity to negotiate with white men"—in that mission which Edward Everett recognizes as "the first movement of a military nature which resulted in the establishment of American Independence." At twenty-two he has "fleshed his maiden sword," has heard the bullets whistle, and found "something charming in the sound;" and soon he is colonel of the Virginia regiment in the unfortunate affair at Fort Mifflin, and is compelled to capitulate and retreat, losing a sixth of his command. He quits the service on a point of military etiquette and honor, but at twenty-three he reappears as volunteer aid by the side of Braddock in the ill-starred expedition against Fort Duquesne, and is the only mounted officer unscathed in the disaster, escaping with four bullet-holes through his garments, and after having two horses shot under him. The prophetic eye of Samuel Davies has now pointed him out as "that heroic youth, Colonel Washington, whom I can but believe Providence has hitherto preserved in so signal a manner for some important service to his country." Soon the prophecy is fulfilled. The same year he is in command of the Virginia frontier forces. Arduous conflicts of various fortunes are ere long ended, and on the 25th of November, 1759, he marches into the reduced fortress of Fort Duquesne—where Pittsburgh now stands, and her Titans of industry wage the eternal war of toil—marches in with the advanced guard of his troops, and plants the British flag over its smoking ruins.

That self-same year, Wolfe, another young and brilliant soldier of Britain, the Wolsely of his time, has scaled and triumphed on the Heights of Abraham—his flame of valor quenched as it lit the blaze of victory. Canada surrenders. The Seven Years' War is done. The French power in America is broken. The vast region west of the Alleghanies, from the Lakes to the Ohio, embracing its valley and tributary streams, is under the scepter of King George. America has been made whole to the English-speaking race, to become in time the Greater Britain.

RETIREMENT.

Thus, building wiser than he knew, Washington had taken no small part in cherishing the seed of a nascent nation. Mount Vernon welcomes back the soldier of twenty-seven, who has become a name. Domestic felicity spreads its charms around him with the "agreeable partner" whom he has taken to his bosom, and he dreams of "more happiness than he has experienced in the wide and bustling world." Already, ere his sword had found its scabbard, the people of Frederick County had made him their member of the House of Burgesses. And the quiet years roll by as the planter, merchant, and representative superintends his farm, ships his crops, posts his books, keeps his diary, matures schemes of internal improvement, leaps on his horse and chases the fox for amusement, or rides over to Annapolis and leads the dance at the Maryland capital—alternating between these private pursuits and serving his people as member of the Legislature and justice of the county court.

REVOLUTION.

But ere long this happy life is broken. The air is electrical with the currents of revolution. England has launched forth on the fatal policy of taxing her colonies without their consent. The spirit of liberty and resistance is aroused. He is loth to part with the motherland which he still calls "Home." But she is deaf to reason. The first Colonial Congress is called. He is a Delegate, and rides to Philadelphia with Henry and Pendleton. The blow at Lexington is struck. The sons of the Cavaliers spring to the side of the sons of the Pilgrims.

He becomes Commander-in-Chief of the American forces. After another Seven Years' War he is the deliverer of his country. The old Confederation passes away. The Constitution is established. He is twice chosen President of the United States and renounces further service. Once again Mount Vernon's grateful shades receive him, and there the world-crowned hero now becomes again the simple citizen, wishing his fellow-men "to see the whole world in peace and its inhabitants one band of brothers, striving who could contribute most to the happiness of mankind," without a wish for himself, but "to live and die an honest man on his farm." A speck of war spots the sky. John Adams calls him forth as Lieutenant-General and Commander-in-Chief to lead America once more. But the cloud vanishes.

PEACE—DEATH.

Peace reigns. The lark sings at heaven's gate in the fair morn of the new nation. Serene, contented, yet in the strength of manhood, though on the verge of three-score years and ten, he looks forth—the quiet farmer from his pleasant fields, the loving patriarch from the bowers of home—looks forth and sees the work of his hands established in a free and happy people. Suddenly comes the mortal stroke with severe cold. The agony is soon over. He feels his own dying pulse—the hand relaxes—he murmurs, "It is well;" and Washington is no more. While yet Time had crumbled never a stone, nor dimmed the lustrous surface, prone to earth the mighty column fell!

Washington, the Friend of Liberty, is no more!

The solemn cry filled the universe. Amidst the tears of his people, the bowed heads of kings, and the lamentations of the nations, they laid him there to rest upon the banks of the river whose murmurs were his boyhood's music—that river which, rising in mountain fastnesses among the grandest works of nature, and reflecting in its course the proudest works of man, is but a symbol of his history—which in its ceaseless and ever-widening flow is but a symbol of his eternal fame.

CHARACTER OF WASHINGTON.

No sum could now be made of Washington's character that did not exhaust language of its tributes and repeat virtue by all her names. No sum could be made of his achievements that did not unfold the history of his country and its institutions—the history of his age and its progress—the history of man and his destiny to be free. But, whether character or achievement be regarded, the riches before us only expose the poverty of praise. So clear was he in his great office that no ideal of the leader or ruler can be formed that does not shrink by the side of the reality. And so has he impressed himself upon the minds of men, that no man can justly aspire to be the chief of a great free people who does not adopt his principles and emulate his example. We look with amazement on such eccentric characters as Alexander, Caesar, Cromwell, Frederick, and Napoleon, but when Washington's face rises before us, instinctively mankind exclaims, "This is the man for nations to trust and reverence and for rulers to follow."

Drawing his sword from patriotic impulse, without ambition and without malice, he wielded it without vindictiveness and sheathed it without reproach. All that humanity could conceive he did to suppress the cruelties of war and soothe its sorrows. He never struck a coward's blow. To him age, infancy, and helplessness were ever sacred. He tolerated no extremity unless to curb the excesses of his enemy, and he never poisoned the sting of defeat by the exultation of the conqueror.

Peace he welcomed as a Heaven-sent herald of friendship; and no country has given him greater honor than that which he defeated; for England has been glad to claim him as the scion of her blood, and proud, like our sister American States, to divide with Virginia the honor of producing him.

Fascinated by the perfection of the man, we are loth to break the mirror of admiration into the fragments of analysis. But, lo! as we attempt it every fragment becomes the miniature of such sublimity and beauty that the destructive hand can only multiply the forms of immortality.

Grand and manifold as were its phases, there is yet no difficulty in understanding the character of Washington. He was no Veiled Prophet. He never acted a part. Simple, natural, and unaffected, his life lies before us—a fair and open manuscript. He disdained the arts which wrap power in mystery in order to magnify it. He practiced the profound diplomacy of truthful speech—the consummate tact of direct attention. Looking ever to the All-Wise Disposer of events, he relied on that Providence which helps men by giving them high hearts and hopes to help themselves with the means which their Creator has put at their service. There was no infirmity in his conduct over which Charity must fling its veil; no taint of selfishness from which Purity averts her gaze; no dark recess of intrigue that must be lit up with colored panegyric; no subterranean passage to be trod in trembling lest there be stirred the ghost of a buried crime.

A true son of nature was George Washington—of nature in her brightest intelligence and noblest mold; and whatever difficulty, if such there be in comprehending him, is only that of reviewing from a single standpoint the vast procession of those civil and military achievements which filled nearly half a century of his life, and in realizing the magnitude of those qualities which were requisite to their performance—the difficulty of fashioning in our minds a pedestal broad enough to bear the towering figure, whose greatness is diminished by nothing but the perfection of its proportions. If his exterior—in calm, grave, and resolute repose—ever impressed the casual observer as austere and cold, it was only because he did not reflect that no great heart like his could have lived unbroken unless bound by iron nerves in an iron frame. The Commander of Armies, the Chief of a People, the Hope of Nations could not wear his heart upon his sleeve; and yet his sternest will could not conceal its high and warm pulsations. Under the enemy's guns at Boston he did not forget to instruct his agent to administer generously of charity to his needy neighbors at home. The sufferings of women and children, thrown adrift by war, and of his bleeding comrades, pierced his soul. And the moist eye and trembling voice with which he bade farewell to his veterans bespoke the underlying tenderness of his nature, even as the storm-wind makes music in its under-tones.

Disinterested patriot, he would receive no pay for his military services. Refusing gifts, he was glad to guide the benefaction of a grateful State to educate the children of his fallen braves in the institution at Lexington which yet bears his name. Without any of the blemishes that mark the tyrant, he appealed so loftily to the virtuous elements in man, that he almost created the qualities of which his country needed the exercise; and yet he was so magnanimous and forbearing to the weaknesses of others, that he often obliterated the vices of which he feared the consequence. But his virtue was more than this. It was of that daring, intrepid kind that, seizing principle with a giant's grasp, assumes responsibility at any hazard, suffers sacrifice without pretense of martyrdom, bears calumny without reply, imposes superior will and understanding on all around it, capitulates to no unworthy triumph, but must carry all things at the point of clear and blameless conscience. Scorning all manner of meanness and cowardice, his bursts of wrath at their exhibition heighten our admiration for the noble passions which were kindled by the aspirations and exigencies of virtue. Invested with the powers of a Dictator, the country bestowing them felt no distrust of his integrity; he, receiving them, gave assurance that, as the sword was the last resort of Liberty, so it should be the first thing laid aside when Liberty was won. And keeping the faith in all things, he left mankind bewildered with the splendid problem whether to admire him most for what he was or what he would not be. Over and above all his virtues was the matchless manhood of personal honor, to which Confidence gave in safety the key of every treasure—on which Temptation dared not smile, on which Suspicion never cast a frown. And why prolong the catalogue? "If you are presented with medals of Caesar, of Trajan, or Alexander, on examining their features you are still led to ask, what was their stature and the forms of their persons; but if you discover in a heap of ruin the head or the limb of an antique Apollo, be not curious about the other parts, but rest assured that they were all conformable to those of a god."

THE GENERAL.

As a general, great; as a commander, it may not be said of him as of Marlborough, that "he never formed the plan of a campaign that he did not execute; never besieged a city that he did not take; never fought a battle that he did not gain." But it can be said of him that, at the head of raw volunteers, hungry to the edge of famine, ragged almost to nakedness, whose muniments of war were a burlesque of its necessities, he defeated the trained bands and veteran generals of Europe; and that, when he had already earned the name of the American Fabius, destined to save a nation by delay, he suddenly displayed the daring of a Marcellus. It can be said that he was tried in a crucible to which Marlborough was never subjected—adversity, defeat, depression of fortune bordering on despair. The first battle of his youth ended in capitulation. The first general engagement of the Revolution at Long Island opened a succession of disasters and retreats. But with the heroic energy that remolds broken opportunities into greater ones, with "the firmness of mind that can not be unlocked by trifles but which when unlocked displays a cabinet of fortitude," he wrenched victory from stubborn fortune, compelling the reluctant oracle to exclaim as to Alexander, "My son, thou art invincible." So did he weave the net of war by land and sea, that at the very moment when an elated adversary was about to strike the final blow for his country's fall, he surrounded him by swift and far-reaching combinations, and twined the Lilies of France with the Stars and Stripes of America over the ramparts of Yorktown. And if success be made the test of merit, let it be remembered that he conducted the greatest military and civil enterprises of his age, and left no room for fancy to divine greater perfection of accomplishment.

WASHINGTON IN ACTION.

Great in action as by the council board, the finest horseman and knightliest figure of his time, he seemed designed by nature to lead in those bold strokes which needs must come when the battle lies with a single man—those critical moments of the campaign or the strife when, if the mind hesitates or a nerve flinches, all is lost. We can never forget the passage of the Delaware that black December night, amidst shrieking winds and great upheaving blocks of ice which would have petrified a leader of less hardy mold, and then the fell swoop at Trenton. We behold him as when at Monmouth he turns back the retreating lines, and galloping his white charger along the ranks until he falls, he leaps on his Arabian bay, and shouts to his men: "Stand fast, my boys, the Southern troops are coming to support you!" And we hear La Fayette exclaim, "Never did I behold so superb a man." We see him again at Princeton dashing through a storm of shot to rally the wavering troops; he reins his horse between the contending lines, and cries: "Will you leave your general to the foe?" then bolts into the thickest fray. Colonel Fitzgerald, his aid, drops his reins and pulls his hat down over his eyes that he may not see his chieftain fall, when, through the smoke he reappears waving his hat, cheering on his men, and shouting: "Away, dear colonel, and bring up the troops; the day is ours." "Cœur de Lion" might have doffed his plume to such a chief—for a great knight was he, who met his foes full tilt in the shock of battle and hurled them down with an arm whose sword flamed with righteous indignation.

WASHINGTON AS A STATESMAN.

As children pore over the pictures in their books ere they can read the words annexed to them so we linger with tingling blood by such inspiring scenes, while little do we reck of those dark hours when the aching head pondered the problems of a country's fate. And yet there is a greater theater in which Washington appears, although not so often has its curtain been uplifted.

It was as a statesman that Washington was greatest. Not in the sense that Hamilton and Jefferson, Adams and Madison, were statesmen; but in a larger sense. Men may marshal armies who can not drill divisions. Men may marshal nations in storm and travail who have not the accomplishments of their cabinet ministers. Not so versed as they was he in the details of political science.

His pen did not possess the facile play and classic grace of their pens, but his vigorous eloquence had the clear ring of our mother tongue. "I will not say that he was so astute, so quick, so inventive as the one or another of them—that his mind was characterized by the vivacity of wit, the rich colorings of fancy, or daring flights of imagination. But with him thought and action like well-trained coursers kept abreast in the chariot race, guided by an eye that never quailed, reined by a hand that never trembled. He had a more infallible discrimination of circumstances and men than any of his contemporaries. He weighed facts in a juster scale, with largerequity, and firm equanimity. He best applied to them the lessons of experience. With greater ascendancy of character he held men to their appointed tasks; with more inspiring virtue he commanded more implicit confidence. He bore a truer divining-rod, and through a wilderness of contention he alone was the unerring pathfinder of the people.

GENIUS.

There can, indeed, be no right conception of Washington that does not accord him a great and extraordinary genius. I will not say he could have produced a play of Shakespeare or a poem of Milton, handled with Kant the tangled skin of metaphysics, probed the secrecies of mind and matter with Bacon, constructed a railroad or an engine like Stephenson, wooed the electric spark from heaven to earth with Franklin, or walked with Newton the pathways of the spheres. But if his genius were of a different order, it was of as rare and high an order. It dealt with man in the concrete—with his vast concerns of business stretching over a continent and projected into the ages; with his seething passions; with his marvelous exertions of mind, body, and spirit to be free. He knew the materials he dealt with by intuitive perception of the heart of man; by experience and observation of his aspirations and his powers; by reflection upon his complex relations, rights, and duties as a social being. He knew just where between men and states to erect the monumental mark to divide just reverence for authority from just resistance to its abuse. A poet of social facts, he interpreted by his deeds the harmonies of justice.

Practical yet exalted, not stumbling in the pit as he gazed upon the stars, he would "put no man in any office of consequence whose political tenets were opposed to the measures which the General Government was pursuing." Yet he himself, by the kingliness of his nature, could act independently of party, retain the confidence and affections, use the brains and have thrust upon him the unanimous suffrage of all parties—walking the dizzy heights of power in the perfect balance of every faculty, and surviving in that rarefied atmosphere which lesser frames could only breathe to perish.

Brilliant I will not call him, if the brightness of the rippling river exceed the solemn glory of old Ocean. Brilliant I will not call him, if darkness must be visible in order to display the light; for he had none of that rocket-like brilliancy which flames in instant corruscation across the black brow of night and then is not. But if a steady unflickering flame, slow rising to its lofty sphere, high hung in the heavens of contemplation, dispensing far and wide its rays, revealing all things on which it shines in due proportions and large relations, making right, duty, and destiny so plain that in the vision we are scarce conscious of the light—if this be brilliancy, then the genius of Washington was as full-orbed and luminous as the god of day in his zenith.

THE WORK OF WASHINGTON.

The work of Washington filled the rounded measure of his splendid faculties. Grandly did he illustrate the Anglo-Saxon trait of just resistance to the abuse of power, standing in front of his soldier-husbandmen on the fields of Boston, and telling the general of earth's greatest empire, who stigmatized them as "rebels" and threatened them "with the punishment of the cord," that "he could conceive of no rank more honorable than that which flows from the uncorrupted choice of a brave and free people, the original and purest fountain of all power," and that, "far from making it a plea for cruelty, a mind of true magnanimity and enlarged ideas would comprehend and respect it." Victoriously did he vindicate the principle of the Declaration of Independence, that to secure the inalienable rights of man "governments are instituted amongst men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it." By these signs he conquered. And had his career ended here none other would have surpassed, whose could have equaled, it?

TRANSIT TO CIVIL LIFE.

But where the fame of so many successful warriors has found conclusion, or gone beyond only to be tarnished, his took new flight upward.

If I might venture to discriminate, I would say that it was in the conflicts of opinion that succeeded the Revolution that the greatness of Washington most displayed itself; for it was then that peril thickened in most subtle forms; that rival passions burned in intestine flames; that crises came demanding wider-reaching and more constructive faculties than may be exhibited in war, and higher heroism than may be avouched at the cannon's mouth.

And it was then that the soldier uplifted the visor of his helmet and disclosed the countenance of the sage. Passing from the fields of martial fame to the heights of civil achievement still more resplendent, he became the world-wide statesman; like Venus in her transit, sunk the light of his past exploits only in the sun of a new-found glory.

POINTS OUT DEFECTS OF CONFEDERATION.

First to perceive and swift to point out the defects in the Articles of Confederation, they became manifest to all long before victory crowned the warfare conducted under them. Charged by them with the public defense, Congress could not put a soldier in the field; and charged with defraying expenses, it could not levy a dollar of imposts or taxes. It could indeed borrow money with the assent of nine States of the thirteen, but what mockery of finance was that when the borrower could not command any resource of payment!

The States had indeed put but a scepter of straw in the legislative hand of the Confederation. What wonder that it soon wore a crown of thorns! The paper currency ere long dissolved to nothingness; for four days the Army was without bread, and whole regiments drifted from the ranks of our hard-pressed defenders. "I see," said Washington, "one head gradually changing into thirteen; I see one army gradually branching into thirteen, which, instead of looking up to Congress as the supreme controlling power, are considering themselves as dependent upon their respective States." While yet his sword could not slumber, his busy pen was warning the statesmen of the country that unless Congress were invested with adequate powers or should assume them as matter of right, we should become but thirteen States pursuing local interests until annihilated in a general crash; the cause would be lost and the fable of the bundle of sticks applied to us.

In rapid succession his notes of alarm and invocations for aid to union followed each other to the leading men of the States North and South. Turning to his own State, and appealing to George Mason, "Where," he exclaimed, "where are our men of abilities? Why do they not come forth and save the country?" He compared the affairs of this great continent to the mechanism of a clock, of which each State was putting its own small part in order, but neglecting the great wheel or spring which was to put the whole in motion. He summoned Jefferson, Wythe, and Pendleton to his assistance, telling them that the present temper of the States was friendly to lasting union, that the moment should be improved and might never return, and that "after gloriously and successfully contending against the usurpation of Britain we may fall a prey to our own folly and disputes."

How keen the prophet's ken, that through the smoke of war discerned the coming evil; how diligent the patriot's hand, that amidst awful responsibilities reached future-ward to avert it!

By almost a miracle the weak Confederation, a "barrel without a hoop," was held together perforce of outside pressure; and soon America was free!

FOLLIES AND DISSENSIONS.

But not yet had beaten Britain concluded peace, not yet had dried the blood of Victory's field ere "follies and disputes" confounded all things with their Babel tongues and intoxicated Liberty gave loose to license. An unpaid army with unsheathed swords clamored around a poverty-stricken and helpless Congress. And grown at last impatient even with their chief, officers high in rank plotted insurrection and circulated an anonymous address, urging it "to appeal from the justice to the fears of government, and suspect the man who would advise to longer forbearance." Anarchy was about to wreck the Arch of Triumph; poor, exhausted, bleeding, weeping America lay in agony upon her bed of laurels.

Not a moment did Washington hesitate. He convened his officers, and going before them he read them an address, which, for home-thrust argument, magnanimous temper, and the eloquence of persuasion which leaves nothing to be added, is not exceeded by the grandest utterance of Greek or Roman. A nobler than Coriolanus was before them, who needed no mother's or wife's reproachful tears to turn the threatening steel from the gates of Rome. Pausing as he read his speech he put on his spectacles and said: "I have grown gray in your service and now find myself growing blind."

This unaffected touch of nature completed the master's spell. The late fomenters of insurrection gathered to their chief with words of veneration; the storm went by; and, says Curtis in his History of the Constitution, "Had the Commander-in-Chief been other than Washington, the land would have been deluged with the blood of civil war."

PEACE AND APPEALS FOR UNION.

But not yet was Washington's work accomplished. Peace dawned upon the weary land, and parting with his soldiers he pleaded with them for union. "Happy, thrice happy, shall they be pronounced," he said, "who have contributed anything in erecting this stupendous fabric of freedom and empire; who have assisted in protecting the rights of human nature, and establishing an asylum for the poor and oppressed of all nations and religions." But still the foundations of the stupendous fabric trembled, and no cement held its stones together. It was then that with thickening peril Washington rose to his highest stature. Without civil station to call forth his utterance, impelled by the interpid impulse of a soul that could not see the hope of a nation perish without leaping into the stream to save it, he addressed the whole people of America in a circular to the Governors of the States: "Convinced of the importance of the crisis, silence in me," he said, "would be a crime. I will therefore speak the language of freedom and sincerity." He set forth the need of union in a strain that touched the quick of sensibility, he held up the citizens of America as sole lords of a vast tract of continent, he portrayed the fair opportunity for political happiness with which Heaven had crowned them; he pointed out the blessings that would attend their collective wisdom; that in their fate was involved that of unborn millions; that mutual concessions and sacrifices must be made, and that supreme power must be lodged somewhere to regulate and govern the general concerns of the Confederate Republic, without which the Union would not be of long duration, and he urged that happiness would be ours if we seized the occasion and made it our own.

In this, one of the very greatest acts of Washington, was revealed the heart of the man, the spirit of the hero, the wisdom of the sage, I might almost say the sacred inspiration of the prophet.

But still the wing of the Eagle drooped; the gathering storms baffled his sunward flight. Even with Washington in the van the column wavered and halted—States straggling to the rear that had hitherto been foremost for permanent union, under an efficacious constitution. And while three years rolled by amidst the jargon of sectional and local contentions, "the half-starved Government," as Washington depicted it, "limped along on crutches, tottering at every step." And while monarchical Europe with saturnine face declared that the American hope of union was the wild and visionary notion of romance, and predicted that we would be to the end of time a disunited people, suspicious and distrustful of each other, divided and subdivided into petty commonwealths and principalities, lo! the very earth yawned under the feet of America, and in that very region whence had come forth a glorious band of orators, statesmen, and soldiers to plead the cause and fight the battles of Independence—lo! the volcanic fires of rebellion burst forth upon the heads of the faithful, and the militia were leveling the guns of the Revolution against the breasts of their brethren. "What, gracious God! is man?" Washington exclaimed:

It was but the other day that we were shedding our blood to obtain the constitutions under which we live, and now we are unsheathing our swords to overturn them.

But see! there is a ray of hope. Maryland and Virginia had already entered into a commercial treaty for regulating the navigation of the rivers and great bay in which they had common interests, and Washington had been one of the commissioners in its negotiation. And now, at the suggestion of Maryland, Virginia had called on all the States to meet in convention at Annapolis to adopt commercial regulations for the whole country. Could this foundation be laid, the eyes of the nation-builders foresaw that the permanent structure would ere long rise upon it. But when the day of meeting came no State north of New York or south of Virginia was represented, and in their helplessness those assembled could only recommend a constitutional convention, to meet in Philadelphia in May, 1787, to provide for the exigencies of the situation.

THE DARK HOUR AND THE DAWN.

And still thick clouds and darkness rested on the land, and there lowered upon its hopes a night as black as that upon the freezing Delaware; but through its gloom the dauntless leader was still marching on to the consummation of his colossal work, with a hope that never died, with a courage that never faltered, with a wisdom that never yielded that "all is vanity."

It was not permitted the Roman to despair of the Republic, nor did he our Chieftain. "It will all come right at last," he said. It did. And now let the historian, Bancroft, speak:

From this state of despair the country was lifted by Madison and Virginia.

Again he says:

We come now to a week more glorious for Virginia beyond any in her annals or in the history of any republic that had ever before existed.

It was that week in which Madison, giving effect to his own long-cherished wishes and the still earlier wishes of Washington, addressing it were the whole country and marshaling all the States, warned them "that the crisis had arrived at which the people of America are to decide the solemn question whether they would reap the fruits of Independence and of Union, or would renounce the blessings prepared for them by the Revolution," and conjuring them "to concur in such further concessions and provisions as may be necessary to secure the objects for which that Government was instituted, and make the United States as happy in peace as they had been glorious in war."

THE UNION AND THE CONSTITUTION.

In such manner, my countrymen, Virginia, adopting the words of Madison and moved by the constant spirit of Washington, joined in convoking that Constitutional Convention, in which he headed her delegation and over which he presided, and whose deliberations resulted in the formation and adoption of that instrument which the Premier of Great Britain pronounces "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

In such manner the State which gave birth to the Father of his Country, following his guiding genius to the Union, as it had followed his sword through the battles of Independence, placed herself at the head of the wavering column.

In such manner America heard and harkened to the voice of her Chief; and now closing ranks, and moving with reanimated step, the thirteen Commonwealths wheeled and faced to the future on the line of the Union under the sacred ensign of the Constitution.

THE REPUBLIC.

Thus at last was the crowning work of Washington accomplished.

Out of the tempests of war and the tumults of civil commotion the ages bore their fruit, the long yearning of humanity was answered. "Rome to America" is the eloquent inscription on one stone of your colossal shaft—taken from the ancient Temple of Peace that once stood hard by the Palace of the Cæsars. Uprisen from the sea of Revolution, fabricated from the ruins of battered Bastilles, and dismantled palaces of unrighteous, unhallowed power, stood forth now the Republic of republics, the Nation of nations, the Constitution of constitutions, to which all lands and times and tongues had contributed of their wisdom, and the priestess of Liberty was in her holy temple.

THE FIRST CITIZEN IN THE GREAT REPUBLIC OF HUMANITY.

When Marathon had been fought and Greece kept free each of the victorious generals voted himself to be first in honor, but all agreed that that Miltiades was second. When the most memorable struggle for the rights of human nature of which time holds record was thus happily concluded in the muniment of their preservation, whoever else was second unanimous acclaim declared that Washington was first. Nor in that struggle alone does he stand foremost. In the name of the people of the United States, their President, their Senators and their Representatives, and their Judges do crown to-day with the grandest crown that veneration has ever lifted to the brow of glory him whom Virginia gave to America, whom America has given to the world and to the ages, and whom mankind with universal suffrage has proclaimed the foremost of the founders of empire in the first degree of greatness; whom Liberty herself has anointed as the first citizen in the great Republic of Humanity.

LONG LIVE OUR COUNTRY.

Encompassed by the inviolate seas stands to-day the American Republic which he founded—a freer, Greater Britain—uplifted above the powers and principalities of the earth, even as his monument is uplifted over roof and dome and spire of the multitudinous city.

Long live the Republic of Washington! Respected by mankind, beloved of all its sons, long may it be the asylum of the poor and oppressed of all lands and religions—long may it be the citadel of that liberty which writes beneath the eagle's folded wings, "We will sell to no man; we will deny to no man right and justice."

Long live the United States of America! Filled with the free magnanimous spirit, crowned by the wisdom, blessed by the moderation, hovered over by the guardian angel of Washington's example, may they be ever worthy in all things to be defended by the blood of the brave who know the rights of man and shrink not from their assertion; may they be each a column, and all together, under the Constitution, a perpetual Temple of Peace, unshadowed by a Cæsar's palace, at whose altar may freely commune all who seek the union of liberty and brotherhood.

Long live our country! Oh, long through the undying ages may it stand, far removed in fact as in space from the Old World's feuds and follies, alone in its grandeur and its glory, itself the immortal monument of him whom Providence commissioned to teach man the power of truth and to prove to the nations that their redeemer liveth.

The delivery of the above was repeatedly interrupted with loud applause.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. In accordance with the programme, benediction will now be pronounced by Rev. Dr. LINDSAY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DUNHAM, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the condition of affairs, not desiring to keep gentlemen here, and with the view of continuing Monday, I now move that the House adjourn.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to continue during the recess the investigations authorized by the resolutions of the Senate of June 11 and of December 3, 1884, in the manner and to the extent and with the same authority contained in said resolutions, and with the further authority to inquire what changes, if any, are necessary and proper in the boundary lines of any of the reservations therein described; and that they report the result of such examinations to the next regular session of Congress.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this includes the lease question?

Mr. DAWES. It does. I will say that the matter of investigation of leases has been continued by the committee during almost the entire session, but at great expense by bringing witnesses from a great distance and under very great limitations. It is impossible to thoroughly investigate the matter unless we go upon the ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII, the first bill in order being Senate bill 1886. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to add to section 2 what will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 2 the following:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to such of the lands referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided validated the titles of bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa or its grantees prior to the passage of said joint resolution.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to modify that amendment, putting it in a little different form, which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York modifies his amendment. The proposed modification will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:
 Sec. —. The provisions of this act shall not apply to those lands covered by the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, which the Supreme Court has decided by that resolution rendered valid the title to bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa or its grantees prior to the adoption of said joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me a moment that I may ask unanimous consent to consider a House bill that it will be necessary to send back to the other branch if it passes here at all. It will not take any debate.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for what?

Mr. DAWES. To consider Order of Business 1271.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senate now consider Order of Business 1271. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, the object of this amendment in the form in which I have now presented it is to prevent this legislation from having the effect, provided it shall become a law and be carried into operation, of interfering with the solemn judgments of the Supreme Court which have already been pronounced.

It would hardly seem necessary for me to stand here in the advocacy of a proposition so self-evident as the one I have advanced in support of this amendment. In the interesting proceedings which took place in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Saturday last my attention was attracted especially, in view of this very bill, to the extract embodied by Mr. Winthrop in his eloquent oration from the letter of General Washington to the governors of the States in the year 1783:

There are four things—

Said Washington—

which, I humbly conceive, are essential to the well-being—I may even venture to say, to the existence—of the United States, as an independent power: First, an indissoluble Union of the States under one Federal head; second, a sacred regard to public justice.

I need read no further. I am addressing these considerations to the most august legislative tribunal in the world. We should tread carefully when we are asked to legislate in a manner which will in any way trench upon or interfere with the adjudications of our highest judicial tribunal. No motive of policy or expediency or favoritism should receive any consideration at our hands in determining a question of this grave character. We ought to look solely, impartially, and exclusively to the effect of our legislation, uninfluenced by any considerations other than the certain and inevitable effect of our enactments.

Sir, if the repeal of the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, as is conceded on all hands, as was stated in the letter of Senator Wright from which I have read and in the letter of Mr. Carpenter from which I have read, would not affect in any way the rights of those who purchased from the grantees of the State of Iowa the lands in question, can we by indirection, as this bill proposes, not only disregard the force of that enactment but practically reverse the decisions already made by the Supreme Court as to its effect? Unless we can do that this amendment ought to be enacted upon the bill. I indulge the hope that Senators will pause and reflect before they decide to pass the bill without exempting from its operation the class of cases upon which the Supreme Court has pronounced its solemn judgments.

The sole purpose of this amendment, and the only purpose which induced me to offer it, is to preserve in full force the judicial determinations already made, and to subject all prosecutions under the bill to that wholesome and necessary restriction.

In considering a question of this magnitude the Senate should not act hastily or inconsiderately, but with great deliberation and care. If it be the office of this bill to thus interfere with adjudications, then it ought not to receive our sanction. If it be not in the power of the Senate to interfere with the adjudications, then above all other considerations it ought not to receive our sanction. For us to undertake to burden the public Treasury and to charge the officials of the Government with the exercise of a power which must in the end prove abortive is a proposition, it seems to me, too plain to need any discussion when I say that we ought to reject any effort of that kind.

I have, therefore, in the modified form of the amendment drawn it expressly so that in the event of the passage of the bill litigations which are to take place in pursuance of it, if any, shall be in subordination to the legitimate effect of the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, and the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I can not dwell longer upon this subject. I am addressing those to whom I am sure considerations of the nature I have now suggested will have their due weight in the votes which they are to cast. I trust the amendment which I have now offered will receive the sanction of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BROWN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. The provisions of this act shall not apply to those lands covered by the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, which the Supreme Court has decided by that resolution rendered valid the title to bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa or its grantees prior to the adoption of said joint resolution.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am requested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] to state that he is detained from the Senate by sickness. I have not paired him on this amendment, for I do not know how he would vote on it.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 38; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was one amendment made in Committee of the Whole. The question is on concurring in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. LAPHAM. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. WALKER. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], or I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 24; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate under the special order passed on the 14th of February Order of Business 542, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made."

Mr. PLUMB. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. In regard to the bill the title of which was announced, I wish to enter an objection to its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. What became of the preamble to the Des Moines bill; has that been agreed to? I think that had better be agreed to or struck out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not advised that there was a preamble to the bill just passed. The preamble will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the preamble to Senate bill 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the bill examined to see whether there is anything in the bill referring to the preamble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will examine the bill, and the Chair will again call the attention of the Senate to the bill if it is found to contain a reference to the preamble.

Mr. ALLISON. I will look at it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Properly in the order of business a bill was laid before the Senate and that was the time for objection to its consideration under the eighth rule. I rose to make objection to that, because I may not be in my seat when it shall be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] had risen previously, however, and had been recognized to make a motion that was in order; therefore the Chair recognized his motion as being the one to be put. If the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his motion—

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to withdrawing the motion for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his motion, and the Senator from Michigan objects to the consideration of Order of Business 542, being House joint resolution 170.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that joint resolution, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this joint resolution notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the title of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title has been read. It will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made.

Mr. PLUMB. Will it be in order for me, pending that motion, to move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8138?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it will.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8138.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion of the Senator from Alabama, the Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out all after the word "five," in line 136, to and including the word "postage," in line 138, as follows:

And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

Mr. MAXEY. I stated on Saturday that my recollection was that the Post-Office Committee had recommended, and the Senate had concurred in, an amendment to the law authorizing the marking of an article in a paper sent by one individual to another.

Mr. PLUMB. I should be glad to have order in the Chamber; I can not hear a word the Senator says.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please cease conversation.

Mr. MAXEY. I was just saying that I had on Saturday, when this same question was up, not having the book then before me, given my recollection of the passage of such an act as is contained here. I find by reference to the laws this:

And the sender of any article of the third class of mail-matter may write his or her name or address therein, or on the outside thereof, with the word "from" above or preceding the same, or may write briefly or print on any package the number and names of the articles inclosed.

That embraces every character of mail matter of the third class sent by one person to another. It did not extend to newspapers forwarded from the office of publication, but then we gave them this right in the next following clause:

Publishers of newspapers and periodicals may print on the wrappers of newspapers or magazines sent from the office of publication to regular subscribers the time to which subscription therefor has been paid.

That was as far as we thought it necessary or proper to go; and I think the law now goes just as far as it ought to go. There is no reason for giving to an office of publication the right to mark articles. There is a reason where an article is sent from one person to another to give the right to mark it, because the only object of sending the paper is on account of the particular article. Hence I see no reason for the clause now moved to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the words which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill, before we leave the part we are now at, to lines 106 to 117. I wish to avoid what is evidently a confusion.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the proper way I think would be to go through with the committee's amendments, and then we can return to this, and in the mean time I will have an opportunity to examine what is there.

Mr. MAXEY. Very well; I only want to have the confusion removed.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to inquire whether or not the order made or the understanding is that the committee amendments shall first be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause, from line 139 to line 151, inclusive:

That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties: But provided, That the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties, and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust this provision will not be stricken out. It simply provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may put in propositions from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the printing of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, &c. The reason for it is manifest. The cost of printing stamps and stamped envelopes is estimated at $1,300,000. The history of the Department work has shown that without a provision of this sort there is a combination made by engravers throughout the country which largely enhances the cost of this work. The Government has an immense establishment here with a corps of efficient employes able to do this work, and if they are permitted to put in a bid it will prevent combination and save hundreds of thousands of dollars.

A similar provision was made in an appropriation bill one year ago in regard to blanks for the Post-Office Department, by which the Government Printing Office was enabled to put in a bid, and the result was a very large saving to the Government.

From my examination of this matter I believe that two or three hundred thousand dollars will be saved to the Government if you permit your own engraving department, which is already organized with skilled mechanics, now half the time without employment, to compete with private parties for this work. That is all there is in the provision, and I trust it will be retained in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee recommended the striking out of this provision for two reasons: In the first place because it is legislation, and in the next place because, as they believe, it is bad legislation. I hope every Senator will take the bill and read this provision now in order to understand fully its scope. I will read it:

That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities.

I hope the Senate will note the full scope of the provision. It not only refers to the manufacture of postal stamps, but of stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties: But provided, That the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties, and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so.

It will be observed that that is a very peculiar provision. In the first place it would commit the Government, if a contract was awarded for the manufacture of envelopes, not to the mere printing of a stamp upon them but to the manufacture of the envelopes and the manufacture of postal cards and of every other form of postal security, as well as postage-stamps. In addition to that it requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a bid not stating the cost to the Government of doing this work, but he shall make such bid as he sees fit, and after he has made the bid the Postmaster-General, without considering the question of the relative cost to the Government under the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury and under bids of private parties, may, if in his judgment he thinks it best, without reference to the question of cost at all, or considering that also if he pleases, give the bid to the Secretary of the Treasury instead of to private parties. In other words, the Postmaster-General is to pass upon the general question of public policy as to whether he thinks it is a good idea for the Government to erect paper-mills and enter on the manufacture of envelopes. There is not to be found so wide a discretion in the statute-book conferred on any executive officer.

But, Mr. President, it is obnoxious even if it were guarded on that point. In the first place there is practically no way of telling exactly what the cost of any article is that is manufactured at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. We can tell the gross cost of all the work done there, but no estimate can properly be made by the head of that bureau or by anybody else which will state to a fraction the cost of doing any part of that work, because all the elements can not be separated. The elements of cost on account of the use of capital, the wear and tear of machinery engaged in the manufacture of a particular thing covering a brief period of time can not be told; and even if it could be told there is no guarantee that it will be told in a bid of this kind. The Secretary of the Treasury might inadvertently or designedly bid one-half the price that private parties would bid for this work, and the Government would not be the gainer thereby, because that one-half the cost would have to be made up by appropriations which would nominally go into the expense of printing other securities of the Government that that bureau is engaged in printing now.

Mr. President, I think I speak for the entire committee when I say that not a single member of it believed, in the absence of any allegation that we were paying too much for the postal securities we are getting now, in the absence of any allegation that we are paying too much for stamped envelopes which are being furnished the Government now, it was wise for the Government to enter upon this experiment under any circumstances whatever. I believe I may go further and say that committee is unanimously of the opinion that the Government ought not to undertake the manufacture of this or any other thing where private capital and private skill are willing and able to do a good job at a fair price. I do not see any reason why the Government should manufacture paper in competition with private capital carrying on that same business, and neither did any other member of the committee; and so, for all these reasons, any one of which is conclusive to my mind, the committee reported in favor of striking out the provision.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I have but a word to say in answer to the Senator from Kansas. As to the policy of this Government engaging in this work of engraving and printing, I suggest that it is too late a day to raise that question. The fact is the Government has found it necessary on the score of economy to establish an immense printing-office, in which all the printing for the Government Departments is now being done. It permitted that office, by the action of this body and with the consent of the Senator from Kansas and the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations one year ago, to enter into competition with all the private establishments in this country to do the printing for the Post-Office Department. The result of that legislation on an appropriation bill one year ago has decreased the cost of printing of the ordinary blanks used by the Post-Office Department.

You have in addition to that established a Printing and Engraving

Bureau for the purpose of printing notes and bonds and all the various stamps used by the Internal Revenue Bureau. It is here, with a well organized corps of thorough and efficient men, with an expensive building, and with machinery already paid for by the Government. There is not sufficient work now to keep those employés constantly engaged or the machinery constantly in motion. The proposition as it comes from the House is to enable the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to compete for postage-stamps and stamped envelopes precisely as you permit the Government Printing Office to compete for blanks used in the Post-Office Department.

The suggestion of the Senator from Kansas that the Secretary of the Treasury would put in a bid much below the cost I think is without force. The fact is that every bid that has ever been made by any printing department of the Government has been based on the exact cost, and they would not attempt to put in a bid for less. If this provision is adopted, judging by the experience in the Printing Department, it will prevent a combination of engravers and printers to add largely to the price paid by the Government. The effect of this provision is that it operates as a check, and prevents the combination of a few engravers of this country to rob the Government, to use a strong expression, as has been done before.

It is not a new question. When you printed the immense quantity of greenbacks that were issued by the Treasury Department and the national-bank notes and revenue stamps the same condition of affairs existed, and it was of such an extraordinary character that Congress determined to construct a building for engraving and printing Government securities and to establish this corps. The only question now is whether you shall use that organization already provided for by law to prevent extortion on the Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senate will give some attention to this provision, because I regard it as one of considerable importance. I am heartily in favor of striking it out. In the first place, upon the ground of general policy it is not well for the Federal Government to enlarge its already vast number of employés—of workmen alone, I mean. The necessary enlargement due to the growth of the country is quite sufficient. The proposition is here to let the Government be a bidder against private manufacturers in a matter which private manufacturers understand perfectly well and in which there is no difficulty whatever.

The Senator from Maryland referred to the fact that we have established a Bureau of Printing and Engraving where we print bank notes and bonds. Other considerations come in there. It is not a mere question of economy there; it is one of safety to the securities of the Government. But the envelope is not a complicated affair; neither is the engraving upon it. That is a contemptible trifle of the cost, just preparing the die for the little stamp on the corner of the envelope. The main business is a simple one, the manufacturing, of course expensive when you reflect on the hundreds of millions of envelopes that are made. The Government can not be a fair competitor in private business in the first place. The Government may just as well say now first as last we will take this whole business of manufacturing envelopes, a very simple business, into the Government office, as to pretend to bid against private manufacturers.

The Government officers in making this bid will take no account of rent, and yet there will be really a charge against this work of rent, or should be. They will find it necessary to enlarge their public buildings in order to do it. The officers of the Treasury in making a bid will take no account of insurance. The Government is its own insurer. It will take no account of taxes; it will take no account of the depreciation of machinery, which is 10 per cent. a year upon a very costly set of machinery. It will take no account of the percentage of the compensation of supervising officers that ought to be charged to the envelope agency. The Government can not be held to any particular sum if it bids to do the work at a certain rate, because it must go on and finish the work whether it costs twice that or not. There is nobody to sue upon a bond, nobody to keep within certain fixed limits. The result of this thing will be to destroy very largely the business of making envelopes in the country. The chief thing will be the envelope and not the little security stamped on one corner of it.

There are many large manufacturing establishments in the country that make envelopes. The result of the Government printing the stamped envelope will be that the stamped envelope will be put on the market for a less price than any private person can make an envelope, because the Government will not take into account the proper elements of cost; therefore all Government envelopes, unless they be the fanciful, the elegant ones that are intended for purely social purposes, will be made at the Government works. It will absorb those establishments that now require many thousands of workmen in various large manufacturing establishments. The demand in one year for stamped envelopes would be such that there would be no envelopes going into the mail practically except those made at the Government works and a few invitations to parties and announcements of funerals and various things that people would want to send in an envelope of a peculiar pattern. What would be the result? Several hundred thousand dollars' worth of machinery would be useless, and an honest private business, in which there is no necessity in the world for you competing, would be destroyed.

I know something of these establishments. I know one that does some Government work. I know of several of them; one that has $130,000 worth of envelope machinery. That would not be one-half what the Government would require if it went into the business. They charge 10 per cent. a year for depreciation and repairs of that machinery. Then they have the salaries of their officers to pay, and they expect to make a dividend. The Government would not expect to make any dividend. There is 5 or 6 or 7 per cent. of the capital involved, in favor of the Government. There is no necessity for this in the world. You might just as well go to work and make all the paper you want, instead of opening bids as you do every year for the Government Printing Office; you might as well set up the whole range of manufacturing industry in this city of Washington to the destruction of many private concerns in order to carry on business under the Government. The result is that the Government does not make as cheaply, and as a rule it can not make as cheaply as a private establishment. It works only eight hours a day in the first place. I find no fault with that, but private establishments that give heavy bonds to do work do work more hours than that and get the work done.

Everybody knows that as to certain branches of Government work it is necessary that the Government do them anyhow whether they cost the same or not, for security and for convenience. For the security of the bonds and the notes of the Government, the valuable moneyed securities, it is right that it should do its own engraving. So, too, we must have a Government Printing Office rather than sublet the work to forty establishments, because it is a very large work and you could hardly get private capital to put in so heavy a plant as is required. It is the largest printing office in the world, and we must have something at our command from which we can order a job to be finished over night. No private establishment, unless you gave it three or four or five million dollars capital, would undertake to do the work that the Government Printing Office does, in my opinion. I do not know the exact worth of the plant; but it has done what has never been done by any establishment in the world anywhere else, and I do not think it could be done by any two establishments in the world put together. It took this great volume, the Revised Statutes, printed and bound and laid it on the table of the Speaker in twenty-four hours. It is necessary to the carrying on of this great Government that it should own some such things; but the making of an envelope, a simple matter of folding with the insignificant work of stamping the money value on one corner, is a purely mechanical operation. It requires costly machinery. I think it is a great mistake for the Government to go into this line of business.

Mr. MORGAN. I hold to the doctrine that where the Government is the only customer of certain descriptions of work the Government ought always to have some arrangement by which it can come into competition for that work; and that is the doctrine which pervades almost all the statutes where public work is done under act of Congress. For instance, in the river and harbor bill we provide always, or at least we always should provide, that the Government may let out contracts to bidders, or in the event that bidders can not be found at a suitable rate that the Government should be enabled to do the work. I can recall instances in my own State where 50 per cent. of the money was saved upon contracts where lettings were made on the work in the bay of Mobile.

It is true throughout the country. If we should take the whole river and harbor improvement bill and let it out alone to private contract, without reserving to the Government a right to interpose and have the work done on its own account, we should not get perhaps more than 50 or, at most, 75 per cent. of the same amount of work done for the same money. So in making ships and in making guns the Government desires to have its work, for which it is the only customer, done for a reasonable sum of money. It should keep down combinations among manufacturers. It has to resort to this system of allowing itself or its own institutions to bid for these contracts.

The words of this bill that are proposed to be stricken out by the committee are:

That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties.

Every one of these designated stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and postal securities stand in the place of money. They are a description of currency by which postage is paid on the letters and other mail matter that traverses the country. It seems to me that the Government of the United States being the only party that can possibly have any demand for this description of money or this description of stamps, it ought to have the privilege of putting in a bid through its own organized department in order to create the spirit of competition that is necessary to have the Government treated fairly. Nobody desires anything more than that; nobody wishes to cut down the prices below a fair and legitimate standard, but still we ought not to put the Government in the power of combinations among those who happen to have the money or the machinery that may be necessary for the manufacture of these articles. We have our establishments here; they have been organized at great expense; we have the machinery; we have every facility for manufacturing these articles, so far as I am informed. I do not understand that we should have to enlarge our establishments in order to make this bid.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. It would take a very large sum of money to buy all the envelope-folding machines needed. They would take a large space. It would be necessary to have buildings and a heavy investment for machinery, and a very large roll of employes to make the hundreds or thousands of millions of envelopes that would be required.

Mr. MORGAN. Then they can not bid because we have not any appropriation for it. Nothing in this bill would authorize any expenditure of that kind, and of course the Government would only bid for those things it was competent to do. I grant you that the Government has not any establishment here for the manufacture of envelopes, but that is not what is meant by this clause as I understand: it is putting the impress, the imprimatur of the Government upon an envelope.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no; the manufacturing of the envelopes, the folding of them.

Mr. MORGAN. It reads:

That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, &c.

Not envelopes without stamps, not envelopes to be sold in the general market of the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator; but it would be supremely ridiculous to fold the envelope by private contract and bring it here and have a little insignificant stamp put upon it. It had better all be done at one establishment. There can be no doubt the contemplation of this provision is to have the envelope made here.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose we are not fully equipped to manufacture these envelopes. I suppose it would require an additional expenditure. Then, of course, the Secretary of the Treasury would not put in a bid for that part of the work; he would separate it and put in a bid for the parts he is able to do with the machinery we have already on hand. But, as I remarked before, there is no appropriation here for the increase of the establishment in any way; none is required by this bill, and none will be brought up, I dare say, on the sundry civil or any other bill.

The whole question resolves itself, in my judgment, into this proposition: Shall the Government, being the only consumer, the only party that can have a demand for this work, be permitted through its established agencies and institutions to compete for the work?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, a stamped envelope is made precisely as any other envelope is, by a single motion of a machine. The paper comes from blank paper in the ordinary sheet into a stamped envelope by one single, solitary motion of a machine, and when the Government proposes to make a stamped envelope it must have all the machinery that is required to make envelopes without stamps with the only difference of attaching to that machinery a die. When the Government makes that kind of envelope without putting into the cost of the envelope the expenses of the plant necessary or the interest upon the plant, or the insurance upon the plant, or the rent of the plant or any other incidental expense, being nearly 40 per cent. of the whole expense, no private establishment can compete with it. When the Government makes an envelope without taking these items into account, the Government must make all the envelopes, for nobody else can make envelopes in competition with the Government when the Government furnishes a stamped envelope at less than half the difference between the stamp and the envelope that would be necessary, if you bought an unstamped envelope. So then it involves necessarily the extinguishment of the private manufacture of envelopes of any kind, unless it may be possibly those alluded to by the Senator from Connecticut. Therefore the Government must understand that if it undertakes to manufacture all the stamped envelopes it must manufacture all the envelopes that go into commerce and that at this moment there are more than 5,000 men at that work, and it is importing into the city of Washington and around the Bureau of Engraving and Printing that number of additional employes.

I have always understood it to be considered a matter of regret that we were under the necessity of maintaining such a vast establishment as the Printing Office; but the considerations that enter into the maintenance of that are such that it can not be obviated, and it is a necessity to carry on that vast establishment because of the nature of the work. But none of those considerations enter into this matter. The stamped envelopes, the postal cards, and the stamps themselves that are made separately can be, so far as convenience or necessity or use is concerned, made at one place as well as another. It is only a question of cost. Now, the Government does not save at all, because it does not charge to the cost of the manufacture of an envelope the cost of the plant, or the interest on the plant, or the insurance, or anything like that. It does not save that because it pays it in another way; it all comes out of the Treasury, although it is not charged off against the cost of each envelope. So while the Government by thus disregarding what must in the end come out of the Treasury as an element of cost can put upon the market envelopes so much cheaper than the private person can that they at once must take the whole business and must, as I have said, gather all this plant. There are to-day hundreds of these plants fully employed to supply the demand of the country.

The Senator from Alabama says that as to that of which the Government is the sole consumer the Government should be a bidder or should be able to manufacture. The Government is the sole consumer of the materials out of which the uniforms of the Army are made, the uniforms of the cadets at West Point and at Annapolis. The Government is the sole consumer of very many things that it has no idea of manufacturing; as establishing a woolen-mill to manufacture the cloth, or a tailor's shop to make up the clothes, or a button factory to manufacture the buttons. As to that which from the nature of the thing itself it is wisest and safest that the Government alone should manufacture, like its bond paper and like its postal securities (and it may possibly be like the engraving of the separate postage-stamps), the Senator from Alabama is correct, but as to that which can just as well be made in the country at large by private enterprise, it is assuming on the part of the Government a paternal character and a universality of business that is quite out of the question; and in the end, after having broken down all private enterprise in this kind of business, it would result disastrously. But this the Senator had not alluded to, nor did the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts for what purposes the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was established? What do we expect to do with it if it is not to be used for business like this?

Mr. DAWES. It was not established to see how large we could make it. It was not established to see how many homes could be made in it. It was established to perform that kind of work which in its nature ought to be performed by the Government under safeguards and exclusiveness, in the making of which there was no propriety in letting all the world participate, because all the world would be likely to throw upon the markets the products of such industry. That I always considered was the reason why we created it. First it originated with the greenback. It is perfectly apparent that the Government could not let out to all the world the engraving pertaining to the greenback. From the greenback it became enlarged into other matters, the engraving of the stamps of the Government and things of that kind. It does not do private work. It does not do any kind of engraving unless it may be the hands of Senators at some time, except that which the Government itself uses and ought to have entirely within its control, so that it may have in itself all safeguards and prevent all liability of counterfeiting.

But I wish to know what the last clause in the paragraph means if it does not mean that you offer to the public an invitation to bid for the doing of this work, and you invite them to put themselves down to the lowest possible point and to accommodate their machinery, their capital, and their investment to it, and when it is done we will do as we have a mind to; we will crush you out entirely and go into the manufacture of private productions along with you.

The Senator from Alabama is mistaken when he says the Government is the sole consumer of stamped envelopes. The people are the consumers of stamped envelopes. The stamp is all that the Government furnishes. The stamped envelope, like every other envelope, is for the use of the people, and the people are to pay the cost of it, and it is wise and proper that no more than the cost and a decent profit upon that cost should be attached to the envelope. It should be brought as low as it possibly can be and continued. It seems to me that when you embark in the manufacture of all these postal cards and envelopes and work of that kind you might just as well set up a woolen-mill, a hatter's shop, a shoemaker's shop, and turn the city of Washington into a grand center of manufacturing of which the Government will furnish the capital and the Government will furnish the employes.

Mr. PLUMB. It ought to be understood that if we commence this thing we shall never quit it. The Government has never entered upon a domain or manufacture or a creation of anything that it has ever ceased it. If this year the Treasury Department should bid to do this work at half the cost and supply itself with the plant and go on to do it, next year it will do the work if it costs twice or even three times as much as private enterprise would do it for. We would simply be entering upon a new scope and system and plan of operations in regard to carrying on this business.

It is not cognate to that of the public printing generally, because there after great experience Congress determined that it would be practicable to always have on hand the facilities to do the work and not to submit to the general scuffle of bidding; but in this case there has been no complaint anywhere either of the quality of the work or the price at which it was done. Private parties have not only been ready and willing to do this work, as they have been to carry the mails and do other things, at a reasonable price, but there have been built up great establishments which the Government now would practically break up if it were to enter upon the matter in this way. I do not mean to say that necessarily it would result in that being done by the Government, but by the dangerous power vested in the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General by this section, it does not limit them to accepting the lowest bid or the best bid, but simply says to the Postmaster-General, "If you think on the whole, without reference to what private parties may have bid, that the Government ought to enter upon this manufacture as a public policy, then you can give the bid to the Secretary of the Treasury and reject those of all the private parties."

Mr. GORMAN. I can not allow the vote to be taken without saying a word further in reply to the Senators from Kansas and Connecticut. It seems to me that it is too late to raise the question as to the propriety of the Government entering upon this work.

The history of this bureau, as I have once before stated, is perfectly well known. When we began printing the greenbacks and the stamps used in the Internal Revenue Bureau, it was found that a combination of engravers in the country, comparatively a few establishments, it is true, had been made, and they so extorted upon the Government that it was found absolutely necessary to establish a Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the purpose of preventing the Government from being robbed. The work of that department heretofore has been confined to the manufacture of greenbacks and national-bank notes and the stamps used in the Internal Revenue Bureau. One year ago, when the law was changed affecting the Post-Office Department so as to require an entirely different stamp, it is perfectly well known that a combination was made, and extraordinary prices have been paid by the Government for the stamps and stamped envelopes that are now used.

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that the Government will of necessity, if this provision is retained, be compelled to bid for all this work. I grant that it has not facilities to-day to make the stamped envelopes entirely, but it has the facilities for making the stamps, which is more than half of the amount that is covered by this item, or, in other words, about $750,000.

The effect of the provision, if it is passed, will be to prevent the combination of outside parties, and, in the judgment of many who have examined the question, it will save the Government a large amount of money without increasing the cost of our plant or without increasing the expenditures of the department a dollar; but on the other hand would save several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, just a word. The Senator says extraordinary prices are being paid for stamped envelopes. I traverse that. It is wholly a mistake. It is a kind of business that can not be got into the hands of monopolists, because it is a simple thing to buy the folding-machine and set up the envelope manufactory. It is not as it was in the case of engravers. The engravers of fine bond plate or fine plates for bank notes are few in number. Very few men can do that, and it is easy for them to combine. The other is a simple branch of manufacture.

As my friend from Massachusetts says, you might just as well set up a tailor-shop as to go into the envelope manufacture. I make the prophecy that if you enter upon this branch of business you will have a great building within three years and many hundreds, perhaps a thousand or more, employes, and in three years from that time you will be paying more money for your stamped envelopes and postal cards than you pay now.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not examine this question with very great care because it impressed me in committee, as I believe it did the whole committee, that the work was being done pretty cheaply now. We heard of no combinations. It seems there was fair competition and very open competition in regard to all these matters, and it was thought we should not undertake it, especially under the latter clause of the paragraph, which provides "that the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties, and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so." That would be giving a power to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Postmaster-General to increase the employes of this Government almost ad infinitum.

I am one of those who believe that the Government ought to employ its own agencies, where frauds might be committed upon it and where embarrassments might follow in the carrying on of the Government unless it had those agencies, such as the Printing Office, where the Record is to be printed every morning and where our public documents have to be printed, so that combinations can not be made against it by printing unions and other things. We have got to keep all those things under our control; but wherever the people can do anything, such as the making of the envelopes that the people buy to use on their letters, and postal cards, or anything else of that kind, we are no more under the necessity of going into that business than, as the Senator from Massachusetts very well said, there is for the Government to make the cloth that is worn in the uniforms of the Army or Navy or the flags that float from the masts of our ships.

My experience has been that nothing is ever as cheaply done when it is administrative as when it is done by competition as a commercial transaction. The Government never does carry on anything as cheaply as private people can do it.

The committee were advised further, and I believe it will turn out to be so, that before a plant sufficient can be put down to start this business, a building twice as large as that of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will have to be built, and five or six hundred, perhaps a thousand, employes will have to come in. I, for one, believe that no greater calamity can happen to poor people than to tempt them to come here to work for the Government under influences that may change every two or three years, and to be dependent on patronage and upon the power of political men or political parties. Whenever work can be done otherwise, I want to see it done.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Kentucky has had large experience here, and I ask him if in the establishment of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, with the employes paid fair prices and working eight hours a day, it is not a fact that the Government has saved thousands of dollars in the manufacture of greenbacks and bank notes and stamps used in the Internal Revenue Bureau over the prices formerly paid to contractors?

Mr. BECK. I am not prepared to answer that; but I do not believe it will be found to be the case if the Government is charged for the buildings it has erected, for the plant, and for everything else. No part of that ever enters into the calculation of a comparison between what is paid out under one system and under the other. I have no idea whatever that we have done the work anything like as cheaply. To illustrate: The Patent Office claimed that it was laying up immense sums in addition to all its expenses. An investigation showed that last year one hundred and seventy or one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars for printing and other things were never charged to that bureau at all. While perhaps it pays its own expenses, all the surplus that is claimed was paid out by us in other forms that we knew nothing about. So it is in a variety of other things.

You must recollect that in any private establishment making stamps the cost of the building is a very great item and the cost of the machinery is a great item. All these things enter into the calculation in that case; but when you merely compare the pay of the employes and give the building for nothing, give the machinery for nothing, the fuel and all the other things, with no rent charged, perhaps the comparison may be in favor of the Government. I am not sure in regard to that. However, I know the fact, and we all know it, that we ought not, unless we are compelled by self-protection, to drive out the competition of our citizens by having Government employes here to convert such business into administration. There is enough of administration, there is enough of embarrassment, and there are enough people drawn here who according to my experience become more and more dependent, less and less self-reliant, less and less useful citizens the longer they stay here, dependent as many of them are upon the changes of the wheel of fortune in politics. We ought not to encourage any great increase of those classes of people if we can help it; and we can keep a very large number away by allowing this competition to go on in the manufacture of envelopes, which has been done satisfactorily before and I think it will be done satisfactorily again.

The last clause of the paragraph I say alarmed me more than any other provision in it. I do not want the Postmaster-General, or the Secretary of the Treasury, I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, to have the right to disregard bids and say what shall be abolished. At any rate I was in favor of striking it out after all the information we had, so that we may hear from the House as to why it was put in, and that our conferees may hear in regard to it; whereas if we agree to retain the clause now we shall hear nothing and it will have passed out of our hands altogether.

Mr. MORGAN. I should dislike very much to see the last clause of the paragraph stricken out in regard to any contract that the Government makes:

That the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties, and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so.

I understand that the right to reject bids is always reserved to the Department in every contract, and unless that right is reserved of course the Government is only to be victimized by whoever chooses to combine against it. I should not like to see that stricken out of any measure in regard to the making of contracts for any manufactures connected with the Government.

I presume from the tenor of the debate here this morning that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is doomed. What are we to do with it? We have got it here established at very large cost. It may have been a very imprudent and unwise arrangement when we established it, but there it is. We seem to have no use for it. We are not printing any bonds; perhaps we are renewing a few. We are printing a few greenbacks and a few national-bank notes to renew those which are going out of circulation. The business of the bureau has fallen away until there must be a large amount of idle capital and idle plant there that is doing no good at all. If Senators want it abolished, I shall vote to abolish it, but while it is there and while it must be maintained at a heavy annual expense, I should like to see that bureau brought in as a competitor for public work in order that we may insure the getting of work done at moderate or fair prices for which we are compelled to make contracts.

The Senator from Kansas said that this would be the breaking down of some great establishment or great establishments. That may be so.

I do not know where those establishments are or how great they are. What I do know, however, is that the business of manufacturing postal stamps, postal cards, postal envelopes, postal money, is not a business that can be distributed about over the country into various hands. It requires a large establishment to carry it on. It requires a large plant, large capital to carry it on. The consequence is that there are very few bidders. I suppose that any Senator here acquainted with the business could understand perfectly well from this moment forward if this measure is passed into whose hands the work would fall. I suppose there is no doubt about that. The competition, if we will have competition, is really between one or two large establishments in the United States and the Government office. Now, shall we dispense with that competition? Shall we allow those great establishments to take this work at their own prices? That is the question. If we treat the matter precisely as it exists under the state of facts as they exist, that is the question.

If it was a business that could be distributed about into various hands, if we could put up real commercial competition about it, I should not care, because then I should know that the Government would be safe or at least largely so; but inasmuch as this work will be done by one or two great establishments, and only by those establishments, it seems to me to be our duty as far as we can go in the matter to have this competition through the agency of the Government Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] assumes that it is necessary to employ three or four hundred additional persons for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect. That can not be done unless Congress authorizes it. The effect of the provision is to bring the Government into competition for this work only so far as it is prepared to do it, and that the Secretary of the Treasury will perfectly well know when he comes to have the bidding submitted to the country by publication. That is the whole effect of it. It will not increase necessarily the expenditures of the Government one dollar except to get the material that is necessary to be manufactured into the stamped envelopes, stamps, and postal currency. That is all of it.

Now, I insist again that it is the duty of Congress to put it in the power of the Government of the United States to have its work done at fair prices, and that is a duty which we can not accomplish under existing circumstances, it seems to me, unless we avail ourselves of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing as a competitor for these contracts.

Mr. PLUMB. It ought to be stated here as a fact, as it is, that this work has been done for the Government at a lower price every year, showing that competition has its full effect in this as it has in ordinary branches of business. If the statement with which the Senator from Alabama concluded his speech is to apply, then the Government ought to have horses and wagons so that in cases where it should be necessary to enlarge the star-route service it may supply from headquarters at Washington or elsewhere the mail service with the necessary machinery to carry it on. If we can not rely upon private competition, let us carry it out to the logical conclusion; let the Government have all these things on hand and a plant ready to carry on the manufacture not only in regard to mail matter, but, as the Senator from Kentucky says, the clothing for the Army, and things of that sort, if private parties do not meet its expectations.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, I was about to say to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] while he was speaking—I did not like to interrupt him—that on one branch of his argument there need be no apprehension in regard to the use of buildings because of the diminishing service, because the building used by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is one of our own, and in addition to all the public buildings we have in Washington now we are paying rents to private owners which last year amounted to $186,000, so that if that building is not sufficiently employed hereafter because of the diminution of bonds and other things, we can diminish the enormous rents that we are now paying for the leased buildings by occupying part of that building for something else.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have listened to some of the most extraordinary arguments touching this question that it has ever been my privilege to listen to in the Senate upon any question. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] seems to go upon the idea that if we can consistently and properly employ the Government forces and the Government property for the manufacture of stamps and things of that kind and character used by the Post-Office and other Departments of the Government, we can with the same propriety institute some new proceeding as to the conveyance of mails, &c.

It seems to me that if there is one thing that the Government of the United States ought to take upon itself to do, it is to print all the stamps that the Government uses in every Department, in the Post-Office Department as well as in the Internal Revenue Department. In order that we might be able to print the bank notes and other evidences of debt of the United States, the Government proceeded to put up an expensive building, to put in expensive machinery, and, as I understand, at great saving to the Government in point of expense. The necessity does not exist longer for this vast creation of machinery and for the large building constructed by the Government, for that purpose, and it can just as well as not proceed to make the post-office stamps, the internal-revenue stamps, and every stamp issued by the Government.

No particle of paper upon which the bonds, the bank notes, or any issues of the Government are made, should ever be allowed to leave the custody of the Government officers until it is prepared and printed. No post-office stamp should ever be permitted to be printed in any other place except at a Government office and under the supervision and control of Government officers.

With the vast expenditure of money by the Government for a plant, for machinery to-day lying out of use, it is now proposed to continue the contract system, under which the postage-stamps have been heretofore printed at a great profit—I know whereof I speak; I say at a great profit—to the contractors who have had the contracts heretofore.

It is time that some reforms were made in the Government, particularly with regard to its stamps. How do we know whether they are all returned to the Government or not? When you have made a contract to print a certain quantity, and a very large quantity, of postage-stamps in some establishment in the city of New York, how can the Government know except under the supervision of a Government officer whether they have ever been returned to the Government or not?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will observe this bill he will find that at every place where these envelopes and stamps are manufactured the Government has its agents and assistants who are there for the purpose of inspecting the manufacture and indicating whatever is necessary for the safety of the product.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the Government makes a contract with some party to make the stamps, and employs a horde of Government officers to go there and watch the Government contractors. It is just as easy to have that work done here in Washington under the supervision of officers already in the employment of the Government without any extraordinary cost. The Government of the United States, in its own establishment, under the control and direction of its own officers, by its own machinery, and under its own supervision, should make every stamp issued by the Government for any and every purpose. That is one of the things that can not reasonably or properly be trusted to any establishment outside of Government control absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 172, to insert the subheading:

Office of Superintendent of Foreign Mails.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That a special stamp of the face valuation of 10 cents may be provided and issued, whenever deemed advisable or expedient, in such form and bearing such device as may meet the approval of the Postmaster-General, which, when attached to a letter, in addition to the lawful postage thereon, the delivery of which is to be at a free-delivery office, or at any city, town, or village containing a population of 4,000 or over, according to the last Federal census, shall be regarded as entitling such letter to immediate delivery within the carrier limit of any free-delivery office which may be designated by the Postmaster-General as a special-delivery office, or within one mile of the post-office at any other office coming within the provisions of this section which may in like manner be designated as a special-delivery office.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the committee had any objection to this provision upon its merits, or whether the committee reported to strike it out merely because it was new legislation?

Mr. PLUMB. It was stricken out chiefly because it was general legislation and because the committee had not time to investigate the matter and determine whether it was wise legislation. There are some things about it which are attractive on the face, but there were some suggestions also that it might not work very well, and it was thought best not to try an experiment of this kind on an appropriation bill, but that it should go to the appropriate committee and receive consideration first from that committee, and then come to the Senate and be discussed in all its bearings, as it was manifest it could not be on this bill, because, in the first place, there is no time, and, in the next place, because it not being relevant to this bill those who would be chiefly interested in it and in the subject-matter might not be present to discuss it.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course if the committee did not have time to consider it, that is a good objection to the section. Being a new system with which they were not satisfied, which is not under consideration or has not been passed in review before the Senate, that fact ought to be a good objection to it; but I hope when it comes back from the conference committee, if it ever should come, that it will not then be adopted, for we shall have certainly no time to discuss it when it comes back from the committee of conference. I understand that we can not amend it under our rules; that all we can do is to strike it out or let it stay in. I shall not object to it if it is going out, but I wanted to understand the manner in which it was to be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. The remark made by the Senator from Alabama induces me to say at this point that if this provision is to be entertained in the committee of conference, it ought to be debated here. I am decidedly opposed to it. I think it would make "confusion worse confounded." The introduction of a 10-cent postage-stamp for special delivery would create all the embarrassments of the transportation or express companies. I think therefore the Senate ought to vote understanding that it is to vote against the proposition on its merits. I have looked at it sufficiently to believe that it would create very serious embarrassment. I do not know anybody who is in favor of it in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Speaking for myself, I will say that I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio, but it is not within the purview of my authority, present or prospective, to speak of what may happen as the result of a conference. Conferences are supposed to be free conferences, and consequently those who enter them enter them free from instructions, and they are supposed to be also free from any predisposition to agree or disagree to a particular thing. All I can say is that if this conference is constituted in such a way as that I should happen to be a member of it, as it may be, it will not make any report to the Senate the full scope and purpose of which the Senate will not be advised of. To the extent to which the conference may insist on this or other amendments, I can not say anything about, but certainly I was not convinced that this was a proper provision to put on the bill and I can see a great many things in it as a reason why it would be in itself in practice cumbersome and lead to a great deal of confusion in the administration of the Post-Office system. We have now a very fair system, and if it is to be extended at all it ought to be extended only upon the very fullest consideration, and certainly not in any way by a provision upon an appropriation bill.

I will take this occasion to move, in line 155, to strike out the word "nine" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read: "For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper-wrappers and letter-sheets, $745,000," instead of $749,000. I move that amendment on the suggestion of the Postmaster-General. An amendment which will probably be put on the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill will relieve the necessity of that branch of expenditure to that amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas will be received if there be no objection. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out section 3, for this reason: An examination of the section will show that there is a very great probability of a considerable additional expenditure to be incurred if it is adopted. It has never been placed before the Post-Office Committee of the Senate. There has never been any information given to that committee on that question, nor has that committee ever reported any information in regard to it to the Senate. It may be a very good thing; but I do not know that there is any emergency which requires its immediate passage. I think, therefore, the Committee on Appropriations is entirely right in striking out this section and leaving it for future examination. If it is a good thing it can be referred to the Post-Office Committee and be there investigated, and by their report the Senate can be guided in acting upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That such specially stamped letters shall be delivered from 7 o'clock a. m. up to 12 o'clock midnight at offices designated by the Postmaster-General under section 3 of this act.

Mr. MAXEY. That goes out necessarily, as section 3 went out.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the following sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That to provide for the immediate delivery of letters bearing the special stamp, the postmaster at any office which may come within the provisions of this act may, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, employ such person or persons as may actually be required for such service, who, upon the delivery of such letter, will procure a receipt from the party addressed, or some one authorized to receive it, in a book to be furnished for the purpose, which shall, when not in use, be kept in the post-office, and at all times subject to examination by an inspector of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That to provide for the payment of such persons as may be employed for this service, the postmaster at any office designated by section 3 of this act shall keep a record of the number of letters received at such office bearing such special stamp, which number shall correspond with the number entered in the receipt-books heretofore specified; and at the end of each month he may pay to such person or persons employed a sum not exceeding 80 per cent. of the face value of all such stamps received and recorded during that month: Provided, That in no case shall the compensation so paid to any one person exceed $30 per month: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall in any way interfere with the prompt delivery of letters as now provided by law or regulation of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MAXEY. Section 6 is in the same line, and I hope the action of the committee will be concurred in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Postmaster-General be directed to instruct his subordinates to publish on the foreign bulletin board in the corridor of the post-office building in the city of New York the news of the sighting or arrival of foreign mail steamers, to the end that the public shall have such news in advance: And provided also, That no cost or charge to the Government shall be incurred in consequence of such instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask if all the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Committee on Appropriations any further amendments to propose to the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. No further amendments on the part of the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to an amendment which I propose to perfect the text. In line 114, after the word "thereof," I move to insert "and reduced by the act of March 3, 1883, to 2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof." The wording of the bill refers to a repealed act whereby the postage was fixed at 3 cents. This brings it up to the existing act of March 3, 1883, and is explanatory of that. It is a mere correction of the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 114, page 6, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert:

And reduced by the act approved March 3, 1883, to 2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question whether this amendment is in order. The Senators who are of the opinion that the amendment is in order will say ay—

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose the Senator really asks unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas made a motion to amend the bill by inserting words. The Chair submits the question of order on that amendment to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent to move the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent for the reason that the reading of the bill will show us that it describes the act which is proposed to be amended as that making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, by which act certain postage was declared to be at the rate of 3 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof. That act has been repealed. There is no such act now. That provision of it was repeated in the act of March 3, 1883; and by putting in the words I propose "and reduced by the act approved March 3, 1883, to 2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof," we bring this act up to connect with the modified act now in force.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the amendment of the Senator from Texas entirely unnecessary, because the bill before us goes on to say, in a line or two thereafter, "shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof." The lines he refers to simply describe the letters. The old law did say that they should be charged 3 cents a half ounce, but that is used here simply as language of description in referring to an old statute. It goes right on in line 117:

Shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

No mistake can arise from the language of the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. The act of March 3, 1883, says "2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof," and this simply changes the maximum of weight from a half ounce to an ounce. I care nothing about it, but this will leave it in an awkward situation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the fewer references to old acts the better; the shorter the description the better.

Mr. MAXEY. The Post-Office Committee—I do not know whether I have unanimous consent or not—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be amended as has been suggested. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the amendment is a wise one. I do not want to object merely on a point of order, but I think the amendment will tend to make obscure what is now very clear.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that when I first read the provision—and I read it very carefully—I was in great doubt what it meant. I went to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]; and he said the committee was troubled as to what it meant. The act mentioned here has been repealed, and by putting in the words I propose it is made perfectly plain. The amendment refers to the act now in force reducing the postage to 2 cents for a half ounce. You simply by this legislation strike out the word "half," and that is an amendment of the law of March 3, 1883.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not object to it except that I think it is using an unnecessary reference.

Mr. MAXEY. I think it makes the matter clear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to be allowed to offer this amendment. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear it reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 114, after the word "thereto," it is proposed to insert:

And reduced by the act of March 3, 1883, to 2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof.

So as to read:

And by that act declared subject to postage at the rate of 3 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof, and reduced by the act of March 3, 1883, to 2 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof, postage shall be charged on and after the 1st day of July, 1883, at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that is at all necessary, but I do not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. By direction of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I offer an amendment to come in on page 3, lines 50 and 51.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 50, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" after the word "first," and to insert in line 51, after the word "second," the words "and third;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Postmaster-General may lease premises for use for post-offices of the first, second, and third classes at a reasonable rental, to be paid quarterly, &c.

Mr. MAXEY. In support of that amendment I call attention—

Mr. ALLISON. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. PLUMB. This amendment was before the committee, and seemed to involve the Government in a very large sum of money, and I feel instructed by the committee to raise whatever point of order may lie against the amendment, which I now do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas makes the question that this amendment is not in order. The Chair submits the question to the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Is that question debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I call the very serious attention of the Senate to this proposition. I believe that if they would hear me there would be probably not a dissenting voice in the Senate to the amendment which I offer by direction of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

First, the Senate by a unanimous vote, there being not a dissenting voice, passed a bill during the present Congress, on the 5th of March, 1884, authorizing the Postmaster-General to lease premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second and third classes, which is precisely what is proposed by the amendment. That bill passed the Senate on the 5th of March last, and is now in the House. That is the first point.

In the second place, at the present session the Post-Office Committee of the Senate unanimously request the adoption of the amendment which is now offered by that committee.

Third, and on the point of order, it is shadowy whether or not the Postmaster-General to-day has any authority to rent offices for post-offices of the first and second classes. If this clause remains in the bill as sent by the House allowing premises to be leased for post-offices of the first and second classes, it is as much legislation as to provide for post-offices of the third class.

The Postmaster-General in his last annual report, sent to us at the beginning of the present session, says:

I again invite the particular attention of Congress to the subject-matter of leasing buildings and premises for post-offices.

The Department has been greatly embarrassed for the want of a well-defined law on this subject. I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the Government to provide buildings and proper facilities for the transaction of postal business. The records show that roomy, well-arranged, and well-furnished offices not only facilitate the transaction of business, but very largely increase the revenues of the Department. Suitable rooms with suitable fixtures can only be secured by leasing for a term longer than that now authorized by law, and longer delay in giving this authority will prove embarrassing to the Department and hurtful to the service.

Now in respect to the point which is made by the Post-Office Committee in the amendment which I offer in its behalf, he says:

I renew the recommendation made last year that Congress provide for the office-rent, fuel, light, stationery, and miscellaneous items at third-class post-offices. I know of no reason why these expenses should not be paid at third-class post-offices as well as at first and second class offices.

In addition to that, in response to a letter which I wrote to him, the Postmaster-General on the 11th of February, the present month, writes a letter which I send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 10th instant, with inclosures as stated, and in reply I beg to state that I have no hesitancy in saying, as a matter of simple justice, that the law should be so amended as to authorize the allowance for rent, fuel, and light at post-offices of the third class, and I have so recommended in my annual report (a copy of which is herewith submitted), to which your attention is respectfully invited.

Under the act of March 3, 1883, the compensation of postmasters at offices of the third class is determined by the amount of gross receipts, the same as at offices of the first and second classes; the gross receipts in all cases including the box rents collected, whether the boxes are owned by the Government or the postmaster; and in addition to this, at offices of the third class postmasters are required to furnish the room and fixtures necessary to transact the business of their offices. Such being the case, I am of the opinion that the law should authorize the leasing of suitable buildings or the allowance of rent at all Presidential post-offices.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. SAMUEL B. MAXEY, United States Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senate will observe that the Postmaster-General says first that no reason exists in favor of the leasing of an office for the use of a first or second class post-office, which does not in like manner exist for the renting of a third-class office, and next he says that the mode and manner of computing the pay of a third-class postmaster is precisely the same as the mode and manner of computing the pay of a first or second class postmaster. There is therefore no conceivable reason why the same privilege should not be extended to a third-class office that is extended by the bill to a first or second class office, and upon that point the Senate undoubtedly thought so, for on a bill that was duly considered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and presented to this body the Senate without a dissenting voice sustained that position and passed the bill making provision for first, second, and third class offices, and sent it to the House.

In every portion of the country, and especially in the growing sections of the West and Southwest, we find a large number of offices are passing from fourth-class offices to third-class offices. A third-class office is one where the salary of the postmaster is between one thousand and two thousand dollars; the second between two thousand and three thousand dollars, and the first above three thousand dollars. These are the divisions. All these are Presidential offices, as they are called. Here is a distinction made without any reason between the larger offices and the smaller offices, although all are salaried offices, and all the postmasters have to be nominated by the President and the nominations acted on by the Senate. It is a fact within the knowledge of most of us that in many of the towns, in order to get a suitable building for a post-office, the people have to get together and raise a purse out of their own pockets, rent a building for the office to go into, and yet the Government gets all the revenue. The net revenue in offices above a thousand dollars makes the offices self-sustaining.

Now I would ask, as a matter of common justice, why the Government of the United States should ask its citizens to pay their postage and at the same time pay for the houses to put their letters in? The Government is not a pauper.

I would ask again, is there any reason why the larger towns should have the benefit of this and the lesser towns not have it? If there is none, and if the Postmaster-General says there is none, the Post-Office Committee says there is none, and the Senate by its act made no distinction between first, second, and third class offices, surely no reason can be assigned why there should be a distinction.

I have presented this subject after very careful consideration, because I had the matter under charge in the Post-Office Committee, and there was not a dissenting voice there. I presented it to the Senate in a bill, and there was none here. It seems to me the reasons are as good now in favor of its propriety as they were in March, 1884.

Mr. BECK. I voted to retain all that the House sent to us in regard to extending the present law as to the renting of post-offices, but the House limited it to first and second class offices. The question was before the committee, and many of us, I think, would be glad to do what we did before, vote to extend this provision to third-class offices; but our rule positively prohibits any new legislation. We have a right to act on such legislation as comes to us from the House, and we have acted favorably as far as they have given us an opportunity to do so.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator will permit me to interrupt him. If this is not germane and in fact a correction of what the House has done, what is it? Will you deprive the Senate of the power of making an amendment to any bill whatever that comes from the House? You can not do it under the Constitution. If the amendment is germane and relevant, cognate to the bill before the Senate, we have a right to adopt it.

Mr. BECK. I have contended for that so often and said it—of course not as well as the Senator from Texas has said it—on so many occasions and been overruled every time I made the suggestion, as I shall be, I suppose, as long as we have a parliamentarian in the chair, that I have no confidence in the argument. If I could get into the chair the Senator from Texas he might rule otherwise; but the question I understand now is this: The Chair having said that in his opinion this is new legislation, and submitted it to the Senate to say whether it is or not—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has expressed no opinion on the subject. After the recent action of the Senate, the Chair thinks it better to leave these questions of order to the Senate itself.

Mr. BECK. I thought the Chair had expressed its opinion, and then submitted it to the Senate. I was not able to hear very distinctly. I believe it is new legislation and I thought the Chair had submitted the question after a ruling. I felt bound to sustain the ruling of the Chair if such had been the case; but as there is no ruling by the Chair and we are all left to do what we please, and as the only rule I have observed is to do what we want, rule or no rule, I think I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Is the debate proceeding upon the merits of the amendment or upon the question of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of order, but as the Senator from Maine well knows there is no right in the Chair to restrain Senators in respect to what they consider relevant to any question under consideration.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Senator from Texas to debate the merits of the proposition. I only want to say, Mr. President, that the Senate ought to understand the force and operation of this amendment. It is simply increasing the pay of a large class of postmasters throughout the United States who fill what are called third-class offices. There are, or were, in July last—and the number is increasing rapidly from week to week—1,838 of these third-class offices. There has never been the time in my knowledge or observation when there was any difficulty in procuring good men to hold these places and take the pay under the law of a third-class office, each postmaster furnishing a suitable building for the use of the public. The Government has never paid the rent of all this great number of offices, and if we embark upon the scheme presented by the Senator from Texas it will be no light additional demand upon the Treasury. The offices are, as I have said, increasing rapidly, but take the present number, nearly 2,000, and if an average rate of $500 a year was paid that would amount to a million dollars a year, added, in fact, to the salaries of postmasters. If the rent was half that of course the amount would be half in the aggregate. If the Senate is ready, with all the carefulness that it exhibits upon other matters in raising salaries, in this wholesale way to raise the pay of offices of the third class in the Post-Office Department, let it be fully understood what we are doing.

I have not found, so far as my observation goes, that any inconvenience arises to the public from the present rule and the present law. No doubt the postmasters, the 1,800 or 1,900 of them, in the different States would like to have the Government furnish buildings; undoubtedly they proffer their requests to the Postmaster-General, who naturally believes in aggrandizing his Department, and so we get the recommendation to put this in with the other classes, which are comparatively small in number, and we have the authority of the Post-Office Department cited to the Senate as a reason why we should grant this request.

I am opposed, for one—entirely, absolutely, earnestly—to inaugurating this new expense to the Government. It is no time to do it. There is no necessity for it, and it is a wanton waste of money to do it. I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Maine uses very strong language. He says there is no necessity for it, and it is a wanton waste of public money. I have already stated what was the opinion of the Post-Office Department on that subject in the official report of the Postmaster-General favoring this very proposition, of the Post-Office Committee favoring it, of the Senate favoring it, and with all this testimony I am of the opinion that they are perhaps as well prepared to say whether or not this is useless and a wanton waste of money, as the Senator from Maine says. I prefer this accumulated evidence from the highest sources to his single opinion. So much for that.

Now I would ask if there is any reason on earth why the people anywhere should be compelled to rent a building for the use of the Government and let the Government receive the revenues of the business conducted in that building, and at the same time require the people to pay the postage on their letters and all other mail matter? There is no reason for it. The Government is not a pauper. There is as much reason, I will say to the Senator from Maine, why these smaller places, which appear to be regarded as significant in the eyes of some, should be cared for as your great cities where millions of dollars are expended in the erection of post-office buildings. In this Government an equitable distribution of its blessings and benefits should go to all the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas in order?

Mr. ALLISON. Before that question is decided, I should like to say one word. As I understand existing laws, it is within the power of the Postmaster-General to rent for the use of the Department buildings for first and second class post-offices. Is not that the law?

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator that that seems to have been the impression; but from the wording of the report of the Postmaster-General himself there is no distinction made between first, second, and third class offices; and it is quite shadowy where the power comes from at all.

The Department has been greatly embarrassed for the want of a well-defined law on this subject.

The subject of renting offices.

I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the Government to provide buildings and proper facilities for the transaction of postal business.

The law does not limit him now, as I understand him, to first and second class offices.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the law now to be that he can rent buildings for first and second class offices. The object of the provision in the bill is to enable the Postmaster-General to rent those offices for five years instead of renting them for one year.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator to be kind enough to turn to that law. If he will, he will find something that I think will throw great light on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I am only speaking now of the construction heretofore given to the law in the Post-Office Department. It has never been the custom of the Post-Office Department, nor have they ever supposed they had a right under existing law, to provide buildings for third-class post-offices. I submit to the Senator, therefore, that he proposes here to change existing law; and hence this amendment, under our rules, is out of order. I do not know precisely why the presiding officer has submitted this question to the Senate. It seems to me so perfectly clear that it is hardly worth while to submit the question.

Now, I desire to say one word to the Senator from Texas with reference to the expense of this proposed amendment. I think he will agree with me that if the Postmaster-General is authorized to rent buildings for third-class offices, it is a simple method or mode of increasing the compensation of third-class postmasters beyond what the law now provides for, and if so, it will result, as the Senator from Maine has said, in an additional expenditure of a million dollars. So far as I have been able to discover, these third-class post-offices are reasonably well conducted, and the third-class postmasters receive adequate compensation for the services they render.

Mr. INGALLS. What are third-class offices?

Mr. ALLISON. Those where the salaries are between $1,000 and $2,000 per annum.

Mr. MAXEY. The Postmaster-General says in the letter I have had read to the Senate, and which will appear in the RECORD, that there is no difference in the method of computation of the compensation of first, second, and third class postmasters.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. MAXEY. They are all on the same footing, and then he says there is no reason for making the distinction.

Mr. ALLISON. They are all paid on a computation of percentages, I agree. When the computation reaches $2,000 the class is changed from a third-class office to a second-class office, so that when the compensation is $1,950 the postmaster is not allowed rent, and when it amounts to $2,050 he is. You must draw the line somewhere with reference to these matters, and that arbitrary line is $2,000, as fixed.

What I object to is changing the existing law with reference to the power of the Postmaster-General to rent these offices, because if he is authorized to rent offices he will also be authorized to fit up the offices and fit them up with what are known as Yale locks. All the second-class post-offices, or nearly all of them, I believe, are now fitted up by the Government with Yale locks. The rental and the Yale-lock provision will make a range of from five to six or seven hundred dollars for each third-class post-office. I submit to the Senator from Texas that this is too large an increase of the expenditures of the Post-Office Department, unless it can be shown that these third-class postmasters do not receive a sufficient compensation for the work they perform. Under existing law as I understand it third-class postmasters are allowed clerk-hire as well as second-class postmasters, and there is a considerable allowance made by the Post-Office Department to third-class postmasters for clerk-hire. If now we allow them clerk-hire and to rent buildings for their use, it seems to me we shall very largely swell the annual appropriations for the postal service.

If the Senator from Texas can convince me that the third-class postmasters are not receiving adequate compensation under the law which we passed in 1883, which was said to be very liberal toward them and which increased their compensation beyond what they had received before, I shall admit that there is an equity in favor of some increase; but I submit that it is dangerous to allow all these third-class postmasters, whether their salary be $1,000 or $1,900, to have their respective offices fitted up with Yale locks and all the modern appliances that are used in first and second class post-offices.

So I submit again to the Senate that this amendment is an absolute change of existing law; that there has never been a time when the Post-Office Department under existing law could allow third-class postmasters any sum whatever for rent. So it seems to me that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, after all, the argument which has been presented has not been met. The whole argument of the Senator from Iowa is simply that this ought not to be done because it will cost money. That is all there is in it. Not one single argument has been offered or can be offered why this provision should extend to first and second class offices that does not equally apply to third-class offices. So says the Postmaster-General, whose duty it is to investigate to the bottom of these things.

We have already on this bill reduced, and in my judgment very considerably reduced, the revenues of the Post-Office Department. When you come to the method of computing the salary of the third-class offices it is exactly the same as for the second and the first class, and the Postmaster-General—a point which the Senator seems altogether to have overlooked—has said:

The records show that roomy, well-arranged, and well-furnished offices not only facilitate the transaction of business, but very largely increase the revenues of the Department.

That is the opinion of the Postmaster-General, and in respect to this particular thing he says:

I know of no reason why these expenses should not be paid at third-class post-offices as well as at first and second class offices.

Besides, I ask the Senator to point out the law which authorizes the Postmaster-General to lease for a term of years offices for post-offices of the first and second class and which excluded the third-class offices. Is there anything now which would prohibit him from leasing for one year, because it can not be for a longer term, premises for a post-office of either the first, second, or third class?

Mr. ALLISON. Now will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Is not the effect of his proposed amendment to increase the compensation of third-class postmasters to the extent of the rent paid?

Mr. MAXEY. I can not see that it has the slightest effect on the third-class offices that does not apply equally to the first and second classes, because all three are paid precisely in the same way; and at last the only argument which can be used is that it will cost money. So it costs money for the first-class offices, so it does for the second-class offices; but why, I ask, should these privileges be extended to one portion of the community and not in like manner to the other portions of the community where especially the Postmaster-General, who ought to know, says that there is no difference in the method of computing the pay, and no reason which applies to one that does not apply to the others?

I have not been able to see that the point of order would apply at all. If it be that this is original legislation sent to us by the House on an appropriation bill, then the Senate has a right to propose or to concur with amendments as on other bills. If the amendment be relevant, pertinent, germane, cognate to the text, we have the right to do it in my judgment; and this is simply carrying out and making plain that which the Postmaster-General tells us is shadowy—that is the right to rent offices at all.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose it is in order to discuss the merits of this proposition upon the point of order; and therefore I want to say a few words about the merits.

I have no doubt some better rule should be established than that obtaining now in regard to the allowance of rent and the making of leases for buildings for the accommodation of the postal service in the matter of buildings for post-offices; but any rule we are likely to make by statute is arbitrary, and there will always be found exceptions to the rule which will constitute arguments for a change. Certainly there is one thing we ought to consider in connection with this matter at the present time, that this is going to add very largely to the expense of the service. As the Senator from Texas says, that probably is not the strongest argument against it; but it should be borne in mind that we have recently very largely reduced the cost of the service to the people of the United States by the reduction of letter postage, and the Senate has lately voted by an overwhelming majority to reduce the postage on second-class matter one-half, which will make a deficit of at least $500,000 in addition to that which otherwise would exist.

Mr. MAXEY. We have also increased from a half ounce to an ounce the weight of letters carried at the single rate, thereby taking away some postage we get on letters.

Mr. PLUMB. The deficit last year was over $2,000,000. The deficit this year will be probably something like $3,000,000 as now estimated. If we add to that a half million dollars as the diminished receipts from newspaper postage, we shall have a deficit of about three and a half millions.

Mr. INGALLS. What were the revenues last year?

Mr. PLUMB. The postal revenues last year were about $48,000,000. For the postal service proper the expenses and revenue run about together; they vary from 8 to 12 per cent. As to this amendment it is pretty hard to tell how much it will add, but I think it will be safe to say it will add, in the ordinary way of administration, at least half a million dollars to the expenditure, and it may add more. The number of third-class offices is very much in excess of the number of second-class offices. Of course if the business were carried on as a private individual would carry on his business, a large number of offices would not be rented. The theory on which this classification was originally fixed, or rather on which the allowance of rent was originally fixed, was that the smaller offices would largely be stationed in stores and other places of business.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Postmaster-General is not required to lease. He may do it. It is left in his discretion. He will only lease such offices as may be for the good of the service.

Mr. PLUMB. I have a great deal of respect for the executive branch of the Government; but I do not know of any powers that it is authorized to exercise that it does not find occasion to exercise in the course of the fiscal year.

There is this other thing which ought to be understood about it: If the Government rents an office it must rent the entire room. It submits to no partnership and can not submit to any partnership, especially in reference to a room to be occupied for postal purposes. It will not do to have a man in the office who has not a legal right to be there, to stay at night, and consequently to have access to the mail as much as the postmaster perhaps. That would have the effect either to entirely take away from the postmaster any responsibility as to the sacredness of the mail, or it would have the effect to add to him a responsibility which no postmaster would assume. Therefore, if this provision is to be adopted and carried out, it will result in the Government renting rooms in large numbers of places where now there is adequate accommodation in connection with such other business as the postmaster himself, having a due regard to his own responsibility and the security of the mails intrusted to him, permits to be carried on in the same room with his post-office.

But, as I was saying, there are many reasons why there might be some exception to this right. There are a great many third-class post-offices where the merit of the proposition is very plain to me; but it seems to me that now, having so largely diminished the revenues of the Post-Office Department, we could permit this matter to go over for a year or two longer until the revenues have approached the expenditures before we enter upon any new experiments, and especially upon such as we know will inevitably largely increase the expenses of the service. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not adopt this proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas in order?

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 7.

Mr. PLATT. Evidently the only way to obtain a quorum is to have the yeas and nays. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decides that the amendment of the Senator from Texas is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out lines 171, 172, and 173, and to insert in lieu thereof:

For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $600,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip, each way, actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on the American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. BAYARD. I raise the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware submits the question of order that this amendment is not in order. The Chair submits the question to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. In connection with that I wish to say that section 4009 of the Revised Statutes provides:

SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

And this provision clearly annuls that statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine in order?

Mr. FRYE. In the first place I join issue with the Senator from Kentucky; an issue has been joined with him on that very point not at a far distant day from this in another body which I have no authority to mention by name. Take the very provision which the Senator suggests, and let him look at the last clause of that provision and he will see the distinction between the first clause and the second clause very clearly. One says the vessel shall be allowed under the contract the sea and inland postage; how much is that? How much was it last year, will the Senator state?

Mr. BECK. I do not know; I have not the figures.

Mr. FRYE. It was about $1,500,000. Under the second clause it says, "shall not exceed the sea and inland postage on the mail so transported," the words "on the mail so transported" being a clear limitation of the right and power of the Postmaster-General; and that is not contained in the first clause to which the Senator referred.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another thing. I find that it is very common in the United States Senate in stating the Senate rule to misstate it by confounding it with the House rule. The Senator from Iowa, in making the point made a few moments ago, used the language of the House rule, "changing existing law." The House rule is that legislation changing existing law shall not be in order. There is no such language as that in the Senate rule, and none such can be found there. The Senate rule is that general legislation shall not be permitted on appropriation bills. There may be legislation on appropriation bills which is not general legislation, and a proposition may be entirely in order which does change existing law. The Senate ought to bear that in mind in determining this question.

I am sorry that the question has been submitted to the Senate. I prefer very much that a presiding officer, with the responsibility upon him of deciding according to the rule, should determine upon this question, because I believe I have some familiarity with the rules of the Senate and the rules of the House, and I declare that this amendment which I have offered, by any fair construction of the Senate rule, is strictly in order.

I do not cite the fact here that the Senate over and over again has decided it to be in order. When the proposition has been before the Senate, going to a much greater length than this amendment goes, one that made provision for expending $1,700,000; when it provided that it should be in 4,000-ton ships; when it provided for a charter for those ships; when it provided for $200,000 for a line between here and Brazil, mentioning it by name, the United States Senate three times over declared it to be in order by an overwhelming majority. I do not cite that in favor of this amendment now, because I am aware, as Senators are, that the Senate is apt to determine a rule as it thinks best for the Government at the time when the point of order is suggested. The presiding officer, on the contrary, is bound to rule as he believes the rule to be, and recognizing that fact I repeat I am sorry that he has felt obliged to-day to submit the question of order to the Senate in this case.

Now, sir, only one point has been made, that this is general legislation. Everybody admits that it is open to no other point of order. There are three or four that could be raised, but nobody raises one of them, and therefore I address myself to the question whether or not this is general legislation under the Senate rule, and I contend, with great respect, that it is not. I contend that there never was an appropriation bill passed by the Senate, there never has been one submitted to the Senate by the Senate committee holding themselves bound by the rule, which has not had more in it subject to the point that it was legislation than this amendment has. I will take the very bill we are now considering. I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to this part of it:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $5,150,000. And postmasters are authorized, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, to assign at any time any clerk or employé of their respective post-offices to duty in any branch thereof: Provided always, That any employé shall be paid from money-order funds for such time as he is engaged in money-order work.

Just exactly as open to the objection of being general legislation as this amendment which I have proposed now.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I should be glad to ask him if his amendment does not change a provision in the Revised Statutes, does not establish a different legal rule than the one prescribed by the section of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. FRYE. I say it does not, very respectfully.

Mr. HARRIS. It does not?

Mr. FRYE. It does not.

Mr. HARRIS. With what particular object then does the Senator offer it if it does not change existing law?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator asked if it changed any existing rule regulating the administration of affairs of this kind. I say it does not. There is only one question, and that is whether or not it changes the existing law touching the amount of compensation which may be given. That is the only point raised, because there is authority given now to make contracts by law.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, my question was a little broader than he chooses to recognize. Does his amendment change a general existing law that exists to-day? That is the question that I desire to propound.

Mr. FRYE. It has been determined, not a thousand miles from here, by the presiding officer of a body as important as this, that it did not.

Mr. HARRIS. I was asking for the opinion of the Senator who offered the amendment. Other bodies are governed by their own rules of order, as this body ought to be governed by its rules of order. We have a rule which prohibits receiving an amendment which is legislative in its character upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. Not precisely.

Mr. HARRIS. Well, to be precise, it prohibits general legislation to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. That is it exactly.

Mr. HARRIS. If we have a general law upon the statute-book on the subject, and the Senator's amendment modifies or changes that general law, is it not legislation such as is prohibited by the rule?

Mr. FRYE. Not necessarily at all; and I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the provision of the statutes in section 4009, cited by the Senator from Kentucky, and it is the only provision under which any question can be raised even as to whether or not it changes the law, because the Postmaster-General is to-day by law authorized to make contracts for carrying this very mail.

The first part of section 4009 says that whenever the Postmaster-General makes these contracts "for transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port," if in an American steamship the compensation shall not exceed "the sea and United States inland postage." That, last year, was from $1,200,000 to $1,500,000. The next clause goes right on and says, after a semicolon:

And if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

And those words are nowhere a qualification upon the first clause of the section.

Mr. BECK. So that the Senator from Maine may answer what I propose to show, if I can, is the construction of that statute, I want to ask him to allow me to suggest now what my construction of it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. BECK. I desire the Senator to have full opportunity to answer my proposition; therefore I suggest it to him now. When he asked me the question if I knew what was the total amount of sea and inland postages last year, I, of course, said no; I did not even know what he meant by the question; and even after he announced it was from a million and a quarter to a million and a half of dollars I failed to comprehend what he meant by that. My construction of the statute is that the million and a quarter or million and a half of surplus has nothing to do with the construction of the law or the pay steamships are entitled to receive for services. The law provides that when the mail is transported by a United States steamship the Postmaster-General may allow that steamship "any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage" upon the mail so carried by that particular ship. He can not allow the million and a half of surplus or any part of it to any one American steamship that carries a single letter. He can only give the ocean and land postage on the mail it carries. I repeat that the Revised Statutes limit his authority to allowing to an American ship, or any number of ships that may carry the mail, the ocean postage on the mail carried and the inland postage added; the sum is in proportion to the amount of mail carried, or in other words to the service done, and the total amount of surplus has no connection with the question we are now considering at all.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. President, for the sake of the argument, I am going to admit that the Senator from Kentucky is right. I knew, of course, he would make that point. It is the only point that there is touching this legislation. Now, if the Senator from Kentucky will observe, there is no repeal of that section in this amendment.

Mr. BECK. It does not repeal it in so many words, but it repeals it by making contradictory provisions.

Mr. FRYE. It does not repeal it in any sense whatever; it suspends it for one year, and that is not general legislation by any manner of means. General legislation is that which lives until repealed; general legislation is that which stands upon your statute-book and requires a repealing clause to get rid of it; and there is no such thing as general legislation on an appropriation bill which dies with the appropriation bill.

The Senator from Kentucky is always consistent about this; he has always endeavored to prevent anything being done for American shipping, I admit. I call his attention to another item in this appropriation bill beginning on line 79, on page 4, which also passed the scrutiny of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky:

For inland transportation by steamboat routes, $615,000. The Postmaster-General is authorized to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than two hundred miles distant from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service.

There is a provision deliberately left in this appropriation bill by the Senator from Kentucky, who objected to this provision when before the committee that it contained general legislation. There is a provision more open to the charge of being general legislation, and providing for a payment for this class of service in American lines of 66 cents a mile instead of 50, to which the limitation is in my amendment. How is it that the Senator from Kentucky closes his eyes to a certain portion of what he claims is general legislation and keeps them sharply open every time a proposition is here made to help the American steamship carry the flag of the country on the ocean?

Now I call the attention of the Senate to probably the most carefully considered ruling that has ever been given in the United States Senate to this question of general legislation. I admit that on an examination of the authorities the question has been submitted almost invariably to the Senate and that the Senate every time it has been submitted but once has declared it to be in order. But it was last year in the month of April considered by the presiding officer on an appropriation where an amendment was proposed of over $3,000,000—an appropriation which was contested as violently, as determinedly as any appropriation ever was before the United States Senate; and that was on a naval appropriation bill, fresh in the memory of every Senator here last April. An appropriation was proposed to enable the President to strengthen the naval establishment of the United States, with provisions of limitation, of qualification, of description, of power to contract, of power to build, occupying one entire column of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the ordinary fine print of the RECORD. The point of order was raised by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. He saw the general legislation in that just as plainly as he sees it in this, and very promptly he raised the point that it was not in order because it was general legislation. But the presiding officer ruled it in order; and he stated to the Senate that he had given the subject the carefulest attention, that he knew the question would be raised, that he had reviewed the decisions, and that he came deliberately to his conclusion; and his ruling was in these words, which I commend to the United States Senate as a distinct, clear statement of what the term "general legislation" means when used in Rule XVI of the Senate:

Mr. BECK. I submit that the amendment just read is new legislation, and not in order under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the amendment is in order, for the reason that it is a provision like the provisions in all the appropriation bills for increasing the establishment the bill provides for, as an appropriation bill in respect of the Treasury Department provides for more clerks, provides for new furniture, and all things that relate to the subject of the bill and the execution of the purpose of the establishment. The Chair therefore feels obliged to rule that this amendment is not general legislation within the sense of the sixteenth rule.

Mr. BECK. Then I suppose under that ruling we might provide for building a hundred new cruisers as an amendment to this appropriation bill, although there is no existing law on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that the number of cruisers is affected by the rule.

Mr. BECK. I just desired to know what power an appropriation committee has. I had been taught to believe heretofore that no new legislation could be proposed on an appropriation bill, and I am very sure that the present occupant of the chair held us to a very strict accountability, and not only did not allow legislation on an appropriation bill, but not even an amendment to a House provision containing legislation. But I assume the Chair knows more about the rules than I do.

Just here the Senator from Kentucky saw as much general legislation and more, costing more money, building cruisers that he did not want to build, he saw more general legislation a hundred times over than in this simple amendment that I have offered. What did the presiding officer say for the instruction of the Senator from Kentucky?

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore—

I want the Senator to hear this—

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal as to analogous amendments at former sessions, and finds himself, as he thinks, fully supported. The distinction is a very broad and obvious one between the general legislation named in the rule and a provision of this character. "General legislation," in the general sense (there are exceptions, however), is legislation that is permanent and regulates the conduct of affairs, and does not exhaust itself of its own force, as every item or provision in appropriation bills properly does.

There is the definition given by the presiding officer from a sense of duty after exhaustive examination, deliberately given on an amendment appropriating millions of dollars. It was fought determinedly in the Senate and in the other branch.

"General legislation," in the general sense (there are exceptions, however), is legislation that is permanent and regulates the conduct of affairs, and does not exhaust itself of its own force, as every item or provision in appropriation bills properly does.

He says further:

This amendment is to provide for doing an act which when once done the statutory part of it is entirely exhausted and the law is no longer in force; it has been executed.

Precisely my amendment.

That is widely different from a regulation even in respect of the conduct of officers of the Navy, which regulation would be a general provision that would continue in force until repealed. The Chair therefore thinks, however great the enactment of the subject is, that within the rule it is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

And no appeal was taken from the ruling of the presiding officer; and I submit that that ought to settle the question of order in favor of the amendment which I propose, for it is limited to an appropriation for the next fiscal year. What provisions are contained in the authority given to the Postmaster-General die a natural death with the appropriation bill. It has every element that the amendment to the naval appropriation bill objected to last year had, and in my judgment is clearly in order.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine was obliged to admit, though he said he did it for the sake of argument, that there was no relevancy between the question which he asked me so triumphantly at first—if I knew what was the surplus received from the foreign mail service; he admits now, as he is obliged to do, even for the sake of the argument, as he said, meaning of course that he could not as a fair-minded man do anything else but admit, that it has no connection with this question. He denied that the section from which I read, 4009, limited the right of the Postmaster-General to the allowance to any American steamship of the ocean and the land postage; he now agrees that if that was only ten dollars or ten hundred dollars the amount of services controlled the amount of pay, and that it had no connection at all with the million or million and a half of surplus that remained from the total service. When that fact is admitted, it follows as a necessary consequence that an amendment to this bill which allows 50 cents a nautical mile of the trip each way actually run by the ship between the terminal points, which may amount to ten times as much as the ocean postage and the land postage added, for the mail carried by that ship is a change of the existing law as absolute as if the original law had been repealed. It is a repeal of it by implication, a repeal of it in fact for a year, a change of the existing condition. He might as well contend that an act that suspended the law against murder, burglary, arson, or any other crime for a year was not a change of existing law because it operated only for a limited time. During the time to which this provision applies the law as laid down in the Revised Statutes, which is a general law and provides for all classes of ships both foreign and American, is repealed so long as the law we now seek to pass, if it is declared in order, remains in force. Whether it be for five years or for one year or for six months or for one day, during the time that the provision now sought to be ingrafted in the Post-Office appropriation bill remains in force, the general laws in the Revised Statutes of the United States are changed, altered, suspended, are not the rules to govern the conduct of citizens, nor the rules to govern the Postmaster-General, not the rule of compensation by which people carrying the mails are to be paid. If an amendment that suspends a general law does not come within the provisions of our rules, then I am at a loss to know what would.

The Senator from Maine seems to think that I have been wonderfully negligent in not noticing the provisions of the House bill inserted in the text, not inserted here. Many of them were doubtless subject to a question of order under our rules if they had been proposed to be inserted here, among them the provision whereby postmasters are allowed to employ their clerks in the money-order business as well as outside of it, which under existing law or regulations they are not authorized to do; that may be new legislation. I am asked why did I not move to strike it out? My answer is it is in the original bill; the House had a right to put it there. They did put it there. So with regard to the amendment we adopted in relation to carrying the mail to foreign offices that might be within two hundred miles of our coast; that was in the original bill sent here by the House, not subject to any point of order here.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I call the Senator's attention to pages 9, 10, 11, 6, 7, 5, containing exceedingly healthy provisions touching the carrying of mails, letter-postage, and all that sort of thing, which the Senate itself this very day has declared to be good legislation and has kept in, and I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he and the other members of the Appropriations Committee struck every word of that good legislation out which the Senate has declared to be good and put back again to-day, simply on the ground that it was general legislation—no other ground. The Senator himself admitted it was good legislation; a majority of the committee admitted that it was good legislation; and yet they said they were compelled to strike it out because it was general legislation, and now the Senator says, forsooth, that the provision touching foreign and domestic mails where they can be connected within two hundred miles came from the House of Representatives, as it had a right to come, and for that reason it was not stricken out. The rest came from the same source.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maine has a logical mind when he takes pains to be logical; but I ask him what connection has the remark that he has just made with this question? All the provisions alluded to were inserted by the House, none of them were inserted by the Senate, and being inserted by the House they were not subject to any point of order under our rules.

Mr. FRYE. But they were subject to the knife of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BECK. That does not affect the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I was replying to the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BECK. I am endeavoring to discuss this question under our rules and to show that the criticism in regard to our keeping in certain provisions with regard to money-order offices, and adopting the port of Cuba as a domestic office, has nothing to do with this question of order; and the Senator rose as though he had made a great discovery and showed a number of other things that were in the bill and met with the disapproval of the Senate committee, and with the approval of the Senate; but they were all House provisions, and a question of order could not be made against them here. I believed that the legislation of the House was good legislation, and I voted for it, in regard to the increase in the weight of letters from half an ounce to one ounce and for the reduction of the postage on newspapers. I made the motion to disagree with the committee myself, but that was as an individual Senator. I was not dealing with the rules when the question was brought before us where I had a right to vote as I pleased, the rules permitting me to vote as I chose in regard to retaining or striking out those House provisions, I voted to retain them. I see no connection between these questions and this proposition.

Now the Senator makes an effort to overthrow the provisions of the Revised Statutes and to adopt a new rule of compensation altogether to ocean mail carriers, to wit: 50 cents a mile whether a single letter be carried or not, setting at naught the provision of the Revised Statutes which limits the rate to be paid by the Postmaster-General to the sea and the land postage upon all letters carried by any particular ship. His proposition may double or quadruple, or even go a hundred-fold beyond the provisions of existing law; yet that is proposed to be done in the Senate, whose rules prohibit any change of general law on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. BECK. Any change of law is prohibited by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. BECK. All general legislation is prohibited on appropriation bills; and this general legislation reaches over the whole class of subjects to which it pertains and overthrows the laws of the land as provided in section 4009 of the Revised Statutes.

The Senator chooses to go out of his way to say in connection with this question, when I simply read the statute—the question of order having been made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]—that I am opposed to everything that aids American ships. I am not going to discuss those questions; I have argued them in the Senate before, to my own satisfaction at least. I believe I voted for every provision of the bill the Senator from Maine brought up last year, which he claimed was going to do a great deal of good to our ocean commerce. I believe it did some, but it was a very feeble effort toward accomplishing any substantial result. The only two steamships that we had then on the Atlantic in the European trade that he said his bill would enable us to maintain the American flag upon, and perhaps add others, have torn down their flag since that bill was passed.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me for saying that they would not have torn down their flag if the Senator and Senators and members of the House of Representatives who believed with him would have permitted the provision for carrying the mail to have gone into that bill.

Mr. BECK. It was said that the bill we passed would build up and add to our ships; yet instead of doing any good we have lost the only two we had on the Philadelphia line, and we had none in New York or elsewhere. The objection I have always made to all of these propositions is that this is a subsidy and nothing but a subsidy disguised under the shape of a mail contract. These ships are to have 50 cents for each mile they sail if the Postmaster-General sees fit to give it to them if they carry one letter apiece, and that sum of $400,000 is to be given to certain American steamships; but few men have American steamships; all the sailing vessels of the United States competing with these people in the same trade are to be handicapped by it. It is simply building up a favored line or lines for a few favored men. The subsidy is only to last for one year. No man can build a ship between now and the expiration of the next fiscal year to enter into competition with the men who already have those ships on those lines that are thus to be paid 50 cents a mile whether they carry mails or not. It is the old Garrison subsidy, it is the old Pacific Mail subsidy, it is the old Brazilian subsidy in a new and more insidious form.

The Senator from Maine has stricken out some words from his amendment. The proposition submitted by the Senator from Maine which our committee acted upon was different from that which he has now submitted. That now before us was submitted after the bill was reported. The first amendment which we rejected proposed to make a contract allowing 50 cents a mile to all steamships trading between the ports of the Atlantic and the ports of the Pacific through any foreign country. When the committee developed the fact and all agreed that there was not a letter carried from New York or New Orleans by way of Panama, or from Panama to San Francisco or anywhere else on our Pacific coast by any American steamship line, because we had at least three great lines of railway, from New Orleans, from Saint Louis, from Chicago, from Saint Paul, carrying all our mails across the continent to all our own ports on the Pacific, and that those ships would not carry a single letter, and it was too bald a subsidy to come before the Senate and demand 50 cents a mile for ships running between the ports of the Atlantic and the ports of the Pacific through any foreign country on the pretense of carrying the mail, when they did not carry a single letter, the Senator, after the bill was reported, I believe, amended it by striking out that portion which the committee had rejected, upon the ground that it was a subsidy pure and simple, as no mail ever goes in that way by steamships.

I repeat, the provision now is only for a year, so that the few men who hold these lines in their own hands, whether they do work or not, are to have $800,000 given to them if the Postmaster-General sees fit to give it to them, whether they do service or not.

Mr. FRYE. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BECK. It is now reduced to $400,000.

No man in the United States can build a sailing vessel to compete with them within the time allowed. I ask what is this proposition but a subsidy? What is that but an unjust discrimination? What is that but enabling a few favored men inside the United States who happen to own the only steamships that are running between the ports named $400,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for nothing, to the injury of the men who are competing with them, who also own American ships but have not ships of the character that the amendment would allow the subsidy to be given to, and, as I said, without allowing any man time to build a ship to compete with them to get any part of the $400,000?

I have contended and always will maintain, and I think maintain successfully, that the only way to aid our commerce is to do something that is to help what inherently belongs to the business itself. A proposition is now pending which I was told will be up to-morrow, that I hope to vote for and to urge, to which I call the attention of the Senate now as one of the things that I think will do good. Where foreign material is brought to this country and put into ships, into merchandise or anything, and exported afterward, we now only allow 90 per cent. drawback. The proposition which the Senate will be called to act upon to-morrow, I hope, is to allow 100 per cent.; in other words to allow them all they paid for what they afterward export. That bounty pertains to the business itself. That will help. Anything that helps an American ship-owner or ocean carrier I have been in favor of, and have advocated as urgently as any man on this floor; but when I see, or think I see, that a few men are seeking to get money out of the Treasury for nothing, whether you call it a postal contract or a subsidy or anything else, and it is not going to aid our commerce, is not going to aid our trade or do anything else but enrich the pets of Congress, I have always opposed their schemes, and I always expect to do so.

This I regard as a subject of that character. I do not care, however, to go into that. I do not want to have any controversy now in the closing days of the session in regard to my ideas of trade or commerce. There is no time for it; I do not want to take up the time of the Senate to do it, but I will say to the Senator from Maine that whenever he brings any proposition before the Senate that in my judgment will be a benefit to our trade or to our commerce he will find no man who will go further than I shall. I would give our people raw material free; I would give them everything I could that would enlarge and extend their markets abroad and enable them to buy as cheaply as possible and to sell as profitably to foreign nations as they can, and thus enable them to compete with every other people on the open high seas of the world. That is what I seek to do.

I am properly charged with being an advocate of free ships. The main reason why I have demanded free ships for our people is because we have by treaty with England, France, Prussia, Russia, with all the nations of the world except Spain, given them a right to trade to and from our ports and to carry our goods upon exactly the same terms as our own ships can carry them, prohibiting Congress as long as those treaties remain in force from giving our ships any advantage over them by rebate or discrimination in trade and commerce. We allow them to trade in ships that cost them $200,000 while our people are forced to pay $300,000 for the same kind of ships, and they are expected to compete with foreigners even for our own trade upon such terms. I insist that it can not be done. The difference in the cost makes the difference between profit and loss.

I go further and maintain that as long as we keep up a Chinese wall around ourselves in order to protect, if you please, what you call American industry the wall is as high on the one side as it is on the other, and our trade is crippled, yes, ruined by it. Germany is crying trichina against our pork; France, pleuro-pneumonia against our cattle; England is struggling to get her supplies from other countries; we are only crippling and ruining our own exporters and the laborers in the land by building up a wall that prohibits them from swapping their products and fabrics with other people. But, as I said, I am not going into these questions now.

It is because in my opinion the policy it is now proposed to pursue is merely for the benefit of a few people, to the detriment of the whole country, that I am opposed to it; and believing that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill and is in itself impolitic, especially as it does not enable all American citizens to compete for the subsidy given, because it limits it only to the few people who have ships upon certain lines now, and there can be no competition before the fiscal year runs out by any man in yet unbuild American ships, that I regard the legislation in itself as vicious even if it is in order.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I did not say anything at all about the merits of the amendment, and I did not suppose that any Senator would discuss the merits of the amendment on the question of order. The Senator from Kentucky has seen fit to devote most of his time in this direction, therefore it is necessary for me to make a few words of reply.

First, as to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company getting all of this appropriation, I do not believe if George Washington was in the United States Senate to-day and a question affecting the interests of our great merchant marine, which is dying and almost dead, was before the Senate he would attempt to frighten his colleagues with any cry about Pacific Mail Steamship or subsidy; and I do know that the Senator from Kentucky never fails in making the attempt. I suppose when a two-horse stage travels down through the blue-grass regions of Kentucky away off to some little hamlet in the mountains carrying a half-dozen letters and is paid $500 a year, more than a dollar apiece for every letter it carries, it is no subsidy and does not smack of it. I suppose when Kentucky is supported in her mail system and her post-office conveniences by the rest of the country and does not pay for such accommodations within $500,000, the $500,000 is not a subsidy. I suppose when the Senator consents and allows it to remain a law on the statute-book, under which every inland steamer plying up the rivers—the Mississippi, the Missouri, or other great rivers, on the lakes, on the coast, protected by law, too, against any interference by any other nation on the earth, by the navigation laws, a double protection—received last year 66 cents a mile for all the mails carried by them, that that is no subsidy. But when a Senator proposes to pay a vessel to-day carrying the American flag on the ocean 50 cents a mile at the outside limit, subsidy is the ghost that is summoned to kill it. Mr. President, no country on the face of this earth ever treated its commercial marine so unjustly, so outrageously, as the United States of America has treated its under the lead of such gentlemen as the Senator from Kentucky.

The Senator alludes to section 4009 as the section under which they shall receive their pay if contracted with. Let me call his attention to the history of that legislation. When that section was put on the statute-book how much does the Senator think there was permitted to be paid under it for a letter carried by an American steamship? Does the Senator know? Under that section, when it became a law, you could pay 40 cents a letter to half the foreign ports, 25 cents a letter to China and Japan, 30 cents a letter to Australia. Liberal pay for carrying United States mails when section 4009 was put onto the statute-book. How comes it now cut down to 3 or 4 or 5 cents a letter—a beggarly pittance? The great nations of the earth met at Paris and at Berne, and for the good of the whole world they agreed upon certain postal regulations and upon certain postages that should be paid upon letters and papers, and they cut it down to the sea and inland postage of to-day, about 5 cents. What did they do? They immediately doubled their mail pay to every steamer they had in their service.

Every country that met with the United States of America there at Berne has given heavy mail pay from that day down to now to every steamship carrying its mails. England last year paid $3,000,000. She has paid as high as $6,000,000 in a single year. She paid last year $1,800,000 for carrying the mail to China, Japan, and Australia, and you paid the beggarly pittance of $11,000. England paid last year $400,000 for carrying her mails to the West Indies, and you paid the miserable pittance of $3,600. Oh, your country was magnanimous at Berne and Paris when it cut down the pay for carrying mails from 40 and 30 and 25 cents to 5 cents and charged it to men who carried the American flag on the ocean. Italy did not do it, Spain did not do it, Mexico did not do it, Peru did not, France did not, Germany did not, no other country on the face of the earth did it. The United States alone, for the good of the general country and the whole world, was magnanimous and cut the carrying price down to 5 cents, and then compelled her own steamships to carry the whole burden of her munificence.

Ay, more and worse—ininitely more and infinitely worse. When your American vessels found they could not carry the United States mails for the sea and inland postage and they refused to, you went and put section 3976 upon the statute-book. It is a law which provides in terms that any American steamship may be seized by the Postmaster-General, may be detained at her wharf, at a demurrage costing her from $100 to $150 a day, until the United States mails are ready, and then shall be compelled to take them, shall carry them to the port of destination, shall land them in the post-office, and shall receive 2 cents a letter in full pay therefor. Another section, 4204, contains a provision almost exactly like it, that when your vessels are abroad, and coming home they could be detained by the United States consuls in foreign ports exposed to that enormous demurrage, compelled to wait for the consul to get his letters ready, and then bring them to the United States for 2 cents a letter; and to-day every American steamship carrying the United States mail is carrying it for 2 cents a letter.

Mr. CONGER. It can not get a clearance.

Mr. FRYE. It can not get a clearance, as the Senator from Michigan suggests to me, until it has taken the mails, no matter if it has not a dozen letters.

Mr. BECK. It will get it after the 1st of April, I believe.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; and why?

Congress at the last session proposed, believing as I do, and as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], one of the best constitutional lawyers in this body or anywhere else, declared in a speech, that those laws were unconstitutional, that the United States in its grasping process had gone beyond its rights under the Constitution to punish American steamships carrying the American flag, to repeal those two sections to take effect the 1st day of April next; and after the 1st day of April next there is no power in the United States Government to compel an American steamship to carry a mail. There is no provision for carrying United States mails anywhere on American bottoms. The necessity is upon Congress to make some provision.

You paid last year for the transporting of your mails to Mexico, to the West Indies, to the Central American States about $10,000. Mexico paid ten times that amount. You paid last year $325,000 for carrying all your foreign mails all over the world. Italy paid $2,000,000 the same year, France paid $4,500,000, England over $3,000,000. The United States made last year $1,200,000 or $1,500,000 out of her foreign mails. Did I say out of her foreign mails? Out of American steamships carrying her foreign mails at 2 cents a letter. The great overland mail for the Australian colonies going across our country by the Pacific railroads, for which the United States receives 5 cents a letter, is landed under that law on one of the Pacific Mail steamships, carried to Australia, and the United States pays 2 cents a letter. It is on rail six days, on steamer twenty-six. The Government makes a net profit of 3 cents a letter, which she puts into her Treasury, and then boasts through her Congressmen about the Post-Office Department being nearly self-sustaining. Every year for your star lines, your one-horse carriages, your two-horse coaches, your boy mounted on horseback with saddlebags carrying your mails across the plains, with a hamlet once in fifteen or twenty miles, it may be, the Government pays millions upon millions of dollars; and the Senator from Kentucky sees no subsidy in that. Two years ago she paid $50,000 for one year for carrying the mails from Galveston to Brazoria in the same State—more than she paid last year for all the mails carried in all the American bottoms over the whole world; and there is no subsidy in that. I contend there is no such thing as a subsidy in paying a fair price for services rendered.

But the Senator from Kentucky says that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is the bugaboo in this matter. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company, forsooth, called up to frighten children with. What harm is it doing? Within ten years, let me tell the Senator from Kentucky, that same Pacific Mail Steamship Company has built eighteen iron-clad steamships from 2,500 to 5,000 tons burden apiece, and to-day your flag is kept on the ocean almost alone by that company. In ten years the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has paid out $10,000,000 for ships built in American ship-yards, not in British ship-yards where the Senator from Kentucky wants so much to build them—nine millions of it going to the hard-handed men of the United States of America, not to the toilers on the Clyde, where the Senator from Kentucky longs for it to go.

How does the Pacific Mail Steamship Company get entire control of these contracts? Has she no competitors? Does the Senator from Kentucky know that she is the only competitor, for instance, from San Francisco to China? Let me tell the Senator that the Occidental and Oriental Company has one 4,000-ton iron steamship, I think the best one ever built in the United States, built by Cramp of Philadelphia, sailing directly to China and competing for the mail with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the same company has ordered another 4,000-ton American-built ship. Is there to be no competition here?

Again, from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands there are some of the finest iron steamships on the ocean to-day carrying the American flag, and they are in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the United States mails. Again, between here and Aspinwall, here and Mexico, here and the West Indies, there are ships to-day ready to compete with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the carrying of the mails; and yet, forsooth, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is to be brought up here as a great criminal.

Sir, if you had a war to-day you would take every single iron ship the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has for your Navy in less than thirty days; you would take Spreckel's two great ships from San Francisco, and you would take the Occidental and Oriental ships, and if you could not take them you would be powerless to transport your troops. Is there no benefit to the country in this?

Last year under the influence of the legislation there was a steamer built to run on a line between New York and the River Platte, a thousand-ton iron steamer. An order was given for two more. These are American ships. When it was found that the legislation was defeated the order for the two more was countermanded; but if this measure passes the Senate to-day and becomes a law a contract in less than thirty days will be made for three more steamers to run between New York and the River Platte, carrying the American flag and bearing the products of the American loom to that country.

Again, last year there was a steamer of a thousand tons built for Hayti, to run between Boston and that port. Let this measure become a law, and a line will be established between Boston and Hayti, and we will have another opportunity to send our goods under the American flag.

Dom Pedro agreed to pay $120,000 a year for carrying the mail from Brazil to the United States direct if the Congress of the United States would pay something for carrying the mail from the United States there. Congress refused to do it, and Dom Pedro finally withdrew his offer; and to-day you can not send a bale of goods from the United States to Rio Janeiro unless you send it first to Liverpool and let it lie there on the dock, it may be a month, for transshipment to Brazil.

Mr. President, any decently liberal policy toward these steamships will establish lines between here and the South American ports, the Central American ports, and the West Indies; and there is only where I wish to go. Those are the countries we must look to for opportunities to export our fabrics. We can not export them to France, nor Germany, nor England. They can beat us in making them; they have more than they want; but these other countries can not manufacture and they will not for a good many years. We want regularly established lines so as to enable our manufacturers when there is a glut in the home market to ship their goods into South American and Central American States. You can have them if you will deal with one-half the liberality that France or England or Germany, or even Italy, deals with her steamship lines; and they do not call them subsidies either.

The amendment only provides for one year. It only appropriates $400,000. It is not subsidy enough to frighten anybody. But if I could have my way I would prefer not $400,000 but $4,000,000 this very year, and I would see to it that once more the American flag should be seen in the ports of the world on other than naval ships. I would see to it that once more instead of carrying only 15 per cent. we should, as we used to, do 80 per cent. of our carrying trade under our own flag. I would not care whether the Senator from Kentucky called it subsidy or not. No country without a ship on the sea can be a great country, and in two or three years more America will be in that condition if the present policy is pursued.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say a word about the merits of the amendment. I confined myself entirely to the question of order and only felt compelled to reply briefly to the remarks made by the Senator from Kentucky on the merits. I still insist that the amendment is not open to the point of order; that it ought to be placed onto the appropriation bill and made a law.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I think it must be apparent to the Senate that the proposed amendment is of a legislative character, from the speech of the Senator from Maine. It will be observed that he complained of the laws of the United States, turning to section 4009 and to other sections of the Revised Statutes, and telling what a miserable policy had been pursued and how oppressive the laws of the United States are upon the ships sailing under our flag. He proposes to change these laws now. I do not know how to change a general law except by general legislation. The whole burden of that portion of his speech admits the proposition which I make, that the laws as they now exist (which he says are very bad, and I may be willing to admit they are just as bad as he says they are) are now to be changed by an amendment on an appropriation bill that is general legislation. That is the issue between us. I insist that under the rules of the Senate we can not by an amendment to an appropriation bill change the general laws of the United States, no matter how bad they may be. He insists that we can; that is the issue. The argument which he made showing that he was seeking to change bad laws gives up his case, as I understand it.

The object of a Post-Office appropriation bill is to provide for the service of the Post-Office Department for the next fiscal year. That is what we propose to do; that is the title of this bill, to make "appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886." The Senator is now seeking to get clear of bad laws that limit commerce, as he contends, and prevent us from carrying, as he says, our manufactured goods to Rio and to South and Central American ports. He does not complain of the mails; they go fast and cheap enough. The private man does not care how his mail goes, nor who carries it, so that he gets his mail cheaply and quickly. The Post-Office Department does not care so it goes promptly, and the spending of $400,000 or $800,000 or any sum, not to carry the mails, but under some other hidden pretense to aid commerce or build ships, is not making provision for the Post-Office Department for the next fiscal year.

The Senator from Maine asked me, with an air of triumph, why should we give a large sum of money to carry the mails from one little village in Kentucky to another? And why do we carry the mails at great cost down the Mississippi or the Ohio River, or any other stream? My answer is, every one of those mail-routes is let to the lowest bidder. Whether the carrier has a gray or white horse, a Mexican, a Canadian, or an American animal, the Post-Office Department does not care; the object is to get the mails from place to place as cheaply as possible. It is open to all competitors. They do not ask him whether he is an American citizen or where his wagon was built; whether it was built in London or Paris or Berlin or Louisville or anywhere else. The object is to carry the mails, to get the work done.

That is not this proposition. No one now complains that the work is not done; no one complains that it is not well done or that it is not cheaply done; but by indirection we are asked to do something else and call it mail service.

The little boat that goes down the Mississippi, the Ohio River, or other streams has to call, whether she has business or not, at every landing where there is a post-office. The landing, the starting, the carrying the mail to the post-office is the element that makes up most of the cost. So with the different star routes, as we call them, over the country, which are let to the lowest bidder. We have to carry the mail to our own people.

But the Senator says we pay very little for ocean postage; that England pays enormous sums. Of course she does, but we pay more than three times as much for postal service in the aggregate as England pays. We do not pay it to steamships; we pay it to railroads, to steamboats on the rivers and lakes; we pay it to the star routes. Why? Because we occupy a great continent and our people are scattered all over it; we undertake to supply them with the mails whether the particular State in which they live pays as much as some other State does or not.

The Senator from Maine says that Kentucky does not pay as much as she receives for her mails. I tell him that Kentucky pays more into the Federal Treasury in one year than Maine has paid in the last half century. We pay into the Federal Treasury from our taxes more every year than Maine has paid in the last fifty years, if I mistake not. But that is no argument on this point—does not amount to anything how much Maine or Kentucky pays each—and the citizens of each are entitled to good mail service, and they get it. The men in the far Northwest do not pay for the mails in the form of postal revenues; they pay it in other forms. They send their grain to New York to go to Liverpool; they send their cattle, their hogs, their vast surplus products; they furnish exports which bring back needed supplies not produced here, in part at least, and make the balance of trade which we boast of, so far as we are allowed to trade at all.

England, Scotland, and Ireland combined are very little more than one-third, they are nothing like half, as large as the State of Texas, yet England has 200,000,000 of people in India that she has to supply with mails that has to be done by ocean transit. She has her dominions in Canada; she has her naval stations the world over; she has over ten thousand commercial ports to which her ships run, and she has to send by vessels what we send by railroad, the mails that her people require, and she pays it in one form while we pay it in another. The Senator from Maine complains because she pays in the form that he now desires to subsidize for doing nothing large amounts. She pays her ship-owners for doing a great deal, and therefore he asserts that we are niggardly and she is liberal because we do not pay ours for doing nothing.

The difference in the conditions of the people to be supplied with mails makes the differences in the means of transportation. England can not reach the East Indies by a railway nor by a star route. She can not reach Canada except by the ocean. She can not reach her great trading ports all over the world except by her ships, and she pays the sea-going service for doing it. We can reach our people by railways, by star routes, by steamboats on lakes and rivers, and we pay the service for doing that, because that is the best way to reach the people. That is all there is in those distinctions.

I shall not attempt to reply to the suggestion that I am always struggling to have ships built on the Clyde or somewhere else than here. My views on these subjects are well known and the reasons for them. I want the ships that compete with other people furnished as cheaply to the American citizens who run them as their competitors get their ships for. That is all I ask. I do not want the people of this country to be taxed in order to give double prices to the American ship-builder, who does not run the ship, nor compete for the foreign trade.

The Senator from Maine says he would pay $4,000,000 a year instead of $400,000. Where would he exact those $4,000,000 from? He could only get it by piling taxation, already mountain high. Tariff taxation, that has already broken up our trade—he would make it still higher to raise the additional $4,000,000 to give to a few people under pretense that they were carrying mails when, very likely, they had not a letter on their ships.

He makes the humiliating confession that we have only 15 per cent. of our carrying trade when we once had 80.

Why have we only 15 per cent. of the carrying trade now when we had 80 per cent. in times gone by? When we had 80 per cent. there was a Democratic administration of the Government and a low tariff, an average of less than 20 per cent.; then our sailors and our ships and our commerce were encouraged to go all over the world. Now we have built up tariff taxation mountain high, until we are paying an average of 42 per cent., and we have been crushed in all our maritime enterprises and in all our commercial relations with foreign countries until we have 15 per cent. of the carrying trade now instead of the 80 per cent. we had in days gone by, when a more liberal policy prevailed.

The Senator may thank the administration of his party for their exclusive and prohibitory laws for being reduced down from 80 per cent. to 15 per cent. of the carrying trade. And will he tell an intelligent people that England cares where our ships are built? She is building the ships of the world now. She is building for France, for Germany, for Italy, for everybody who is doing our carrying trade. The money of the Frenchman, the money of the German, the money of the Italian, is as good to her as the money of the American. It requires just so many ships to do the carrying trade of the world. Sixty per cent. of that carrying trade is in her own hands, and she furnishes the ships to do nearly all the balance of it. Is she interested in building up American ship-owners? Will any intelligent man say so? We pay her to-day over $100,000,000 a year to do our carrying trade. We feed and clothe and maintain for her 100,000 trained sailors who will be our worst enemies whenever she orders them to be. As the Senator from Maine said once before, I think eighteen months ago, 80 per cent. of our own sailors were American citizens. We had 90,000 of them in 1859 and 1860, when the Democratic party under a low tariff and liberal provisions for commerce ruled this country. Now, as he confessed himself, we have hardly any left, and 95 per cent. of those we have are foreigners of such an indifferent character that they could not get employment on the great ships of their own nationalities.

What brought all that about? Protection, subsidy, crippling commerce, taxing the people to build up a few pets, just as this amendment proposes to do. You might subsidize them as much as you pleased and start your ship, laden with the goods that he is going to send to Rio, side by side with an English ship, and when you get the goods to Rio the people there have no money. The Englishman does not want money. He takes their copper, he takes their wool, he takes their everything, and he swaps what he has got for what they have, and he carries it back home and tells the men at home to pull off their coats and go to work and manufacture it again. We take our products there and we can not take anything but money in return, and that in exchange upon London, because we can not land any of the things our people want at home until 50 per cent. has been paid for the privilege of landing it.

But, as I said, I am not going to argue these questions. I assert here and now, that while this $400,000 may be given to a few people it will not build up our ships, it will not permanently aid our commerce; our postal facilities and service do not need it, and the rules of the Senate, in my judgment, prevent us from asserting it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to waste any time, for I consider it a waste of time, in discussing the rule of the Senate as to general or new legislation on appropriation bills. My experience in the Senate for six years has been that whenever the Senate saw fit to enact any legislation on an appropriation bill it was enacted, and the rules were swept away if those rules came in antagonism to the wish of the Senate. The question then is simply presented now, under the guise of a discussion of the rules, as to the adoption of an amendment which proposes to give $400,000 in the shape of ocean mail pay to ships in the foreign trade carrying the American flag.

Let there be no mistake about this matter. Let us understand distinctly and clearly what is the meaning of this proposition. It is proposed here for the purpose of encouraging the building of ships by Americans, the running of ships by Americans, the placing of ships under the flag of the United States. If any one thing is certain, in my judgment, in regard to the carrying trade of the United States, it is that no legislation by Congress can ever build up the carrying trade under the present conditions of commerce and production in the United States. We might as well attempt to chain the winds or the waves of the ocean, to alter the laws of nature, as to attempt by legislation to change the great current of production, of interest, of commerce which now regulates the carrying trade as it regulates everything else in the shape of commerce upon this continent and elsewhere.

We were told here—the Committee on Commerce of which I have the honor to be a member were told at our session in New York, and told again after our return to Washington, and I read upon this floor at the last session a letter from Mr. Griscom, of Philadelphia, one of the most intelligent ship-owners in the United States, at the head of the Red Star Line, that the reason why American ships can not compete with other ships in foreign trade is because of the difference in the expense of running the ships, and he said to the committee of the Senate: "Take off that provision of your shipping laws which requires us to ship a new crew as soon as we touch American soil, and we shall be enabled to compete with the ships of Great Britain and France and the other maritime powers of the world." We repealed that clause, and has it done any good? Since that time the four vessels that carried the American flag have taken it down, and are now navigating under the flag of Great Britain.

There is to-day, and that is the salient point in this whole question, but one single steamship line which was under the American flag, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and every dollar of this $400,000 will go into the pockets of the stockholders of that company. There will be no competition; there will be no bidding. It is a naked, plain donation of $400,000 to that company. It is that and nothing else.

The letters carried between the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard are carried by rail. Nobody pretends that this appropriation is necessary for mail service. It is a subsidy. I do not mention the word in order to terrify any one, for I do not propose to be frightened by it myself, but it is a subsidy naked, pure, and simple.

The experience of the world shows that subsidies will not build up commerce under unfavorable conditions. The reason why our commerce has declined is because it does not pay to own American ships. The reason why it has gone down has been because mines and railroads and stock-jobbing and agriculture pay better than the ocean. When New Englanders found that ships paid, New Englanders went to sea. When New Englanders found that it paid to go to the West and that the waves of the prairie were scenes of successful commercial venture, and not the waves of the ocean, then the young men of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, and all New England went to the West instead of going to the ocean. So it will be, in spite of our laws, until the conditions change and until Americans find that it pays better to go upon the ocean than upon the land. The man who does not know this has not read the history of shipping in other countries.

Up to 1854 the shipping trade of the United States steadily and persistently gained upon the carrying trade of Great Britain. Until 1855, when there was a discovery that iron could be used in the manufacture of sea-going vessels, the clipper-built ships of the United States dominated the ocean and were superior to those of Great Britain, notwithstanding the difference in age of the two countries. During all of that time—and I challenge contradiction from my friend from Maine—England was paying out millions of dollars in the shape of ocean postage, really as subsidies, and the United States was paying less than $300,000. Notwithstanding the enormous subsidies, for they were nothing else, paid by Great Britain, we gained upon her steadily and rapidly till about 1855 they commenced the manufacture of iron ships, and then with changed conditions our commerce and our shipping trade began to retrograde, and England commenced running in advance, and has remained so to this time.

In my judgment this $400,000, so far as building up the shipping trade is concerned, might as well be thrown into the yeast waves of ocean itself. With that opinion I can not vote for this amendment. It is useless to attempt to fight against laws which are beyond the control of Congress by any such pitiful legislation as this.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I regret to differ with Senators on this side whose lead I usually follow, but I can see a great deal of good that may possibly be accomplished, allowing them all that they claim upon their argument, by an appropriation of an amount equal if not greater than the entire sum received from our foreign postages for the encouragement of the construction of American ships and the payment of American labor engaged in ship-building. Accepting in their utmost latitude the theories of my distinguished friends from Missouri and Kentucky as to the propriety of free trade in ships, it still remains true that there may be an encouragement to American ships by a proper appropriation of the public money. There is no conflict between the two propositions.

Americans might buy ships anywhere in the world, and still it might be judicious to appropriate the public money for the encouragement of the construction of American ships and American labor engaged in that pursuit. I have great sympathy with the economic theories of the distinguished Senators from Missouri and Kentucky which would indicate a different policy by which the resources of the country could be exported to foreign countries and engage in competition with the trade of other lands, but they are not pertinent to this question, they have nothing to do with it.

We have some American ships; we have some American artisans; we have American enterprise engaged in the construction of ships; and depressed as may be the condition of that industry, why should not the entire amount received from foreign postage be appropriated to test the experiment and see whether it will not increase the number of American ships upon the ocean?

I see nothing in the theories which have been propounded to conflict with the propriety of adopting the amendment; nor do I see anything against it in a proper construction of the rule of the Senate. The words "general legislation" have no intelligible meaning. The definition which the President gave of legislation which is permanent being general and which does not exhaust itself with the provision is not, I think, a correct interpretation of the term "general legislation." If that be so, you might change the entire judicial organization of the country, you might change the entire salaries of its marshals, its attorneys, and if you limited it to a period of years—one, two, three, or five years—the legislation would be general or not general according to the limitation. There is no intelligible meaning to that. Every act of appropriation of money which concerns the permanent departments of the Government is general legislation, and you must limit it in its construction under the rule of the Senate to those things which relate to the ordinary conduct of the public service.

This amendment certainly does that. It is a provision for the appropriation of public money for the postal service, domestic and foreign, and it simply proposes to appropriate a portion of the receipts which come from the foreign service to the payment of American ships engaged in the transportation of the mails. It is a discretionary matter with the Postmaster-General, whoever he may be. He is not to be allowed to make a contract for the appropriation of the money where there is no necessity for it, nor is he allowed to contract with lines that do no work and have no mails to carry. The amendment does not propose that; it proposes to allow him in the exercise of a wise discretion to expend a reasonable sum of money for a proper payment of American ships engaged in carrying the foreign mails, and as such I shall vote for it.

Mr. PLUMB. I presume that the discussion on the point of order will perhaps exhaust the whole question, as it seems to have become a discussion on the merits of this proposition. I have before me the report of the Postmaster-General, and at page 30 he discusses this question and expresses the opinion that some embarrassment will accrue to the Department if some power is not given the Postmaster-General to pay a greater sum than he is permitted to pay under the existing law. On page 643 of that volume the Superintendent of Foreign Mails makes a very decided recommendation that some change in existing law is necessary in order that this portion of the mail service of the United States may be carried on without interruption.

I am not going to enter into the general question of the revival of the American merchant marine in this discussion, nor do I think that is so great and important a factor in this proposition as that the incoming of the Democratic administration shall be wholly relied upon to bring about a reversal of that which we mourn so much—the departure from the sea of American commerce in American bottoms. In fact I am rather fearful that American bottoms under a Democratic administration will mean ships purchased with American money but made by British workmen.

It does seem to me that there ought to be no objection whatever to paying to the ships which carry our mails, which carry the American flag, a reasonable price for that service. I have no doubt it will be said, as I think perhaps it has been said already in this debate, that many of these steamers and perhaps all of them are already running between home ports and foreign ports; that they are under a certain constraint to carry the mails, and that we can practically impose upon them and compel them to carry the mails for a less price than the actual value of the transportation, because they are thus running to and from the ports between which we desire to have our mails carried.

If that is an argument, why do we not apply it in regard to our internal transportation? There is not a railroad company in the United States to-day that is not under greater constraint to carry the mails on all its lines. We can cut down the price of mail transportation upon railroads one-half, perhaps three-quarters, and still the mails will be carried. Why? Simply because no railroad company practically would dare to refuse to carry the mails. It is such an incident to the convenience and to the comfort and to the business of the people along the line of its road that it would not under any consideration whatever fail to deliver those mails on every train on which the mails were proper to be carried, no matter whether it got more or less than it is getting now. Therefore, why do we not impose ourselves upon the internal transportation of this country to the extent of saying, "We have got you by the throat; we have got you where you can not get away; we are in a condition to impose upon you, and we intend to do it; we do not care what the service is worth, we will give you exactly what we please, and reduce the amount to the lowest possible figure in order that thereby the Government of the United States may make some profit out of private enterprises?"

All I insist is that when we come to deal with this question with reference to the transportation of mails on the high seas we shall adopt the same rule that we do with reference to the transportation of mails on the railroads, paying a reasonable price. Saying nothing about any incidental building up of our merchant marine, ought we as a matter of fairness to say to any man sailing an American ship, made in an American ship-yard, employing American seamen, that we shall require of him to carry the mails at less than a fair price? Why may we not look to the American citizen carrying on business who is living in Rio, in Yucatan, in Guatemala, in any other place in South America, or in any other foreign country, and why ought we not to look to him with as much interest as affecting the question of the growth and development of American commerce and business as we do to the man who goes into the secret and far recesses of the Rocky Mountains where, the moment he gets there, he calls upon us with a call which is never in vain to supply him with postal facilities?

I do not know as to all the elements of this problem. I do not know how much or how little may be necessary in order to accomplish this result. I do not know absolutely with reference to all these lines how much would be a fair price, but in the absence of a rule which is fair, under a condition of things in which confessedly we are requiring service which we do not pay for, I am willing to say to the Postmaster-General, and one not of my political faith, "I will give you discretion for this year," because this amendment of the Senator from Maine only applies to this year. It is a current appropriation. It begins with the 1st day of July next and ends in a year from that time. I am willing to say to the incoming Democratic Postmaster-General or to any Postmaster-General that for the purpose of correcting an acknowledged evil, for the purpose of supplying what is confessedly a lack, and in order that justice may be done, you shall, during these twelve months of time, exercise a reasonable discretion as to what is proper for the service to be rendered.

All at once, of course, here comes in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and I observe that in another place where this matter was under consideration a list of the officers of the company was read, and it was much to my edification, because I did not before know them. When the names were read upon which persons delight to dwell when they want to bring before the American people something that is especially odious and to be avoided and to get up some kind of a scare, I wonder that some one did not move to amend the bill at that time by saying that no railroad company in which those men or either of them were stockholders should have any mail-pay for the carrying of the mails of the United States upon the land.

Mr. President, I hope to live to see the time when ships owned by citizens of the United States may be prospered in their business. I hope to live to see the time when the carrying trade of the United States shall be so prosperous that men who now shun it as they shun a plague will go into it, employing not only the existing ship-yards and the ship-builders, mechanics, and laborers at existing ship-yards, but that the number of the ship-yards may be multiplied tenfold because of the profit of the business, for I know of no way whereby a people can become rich, prosperous, and powerful unless the individual members of the commonwealth are themselves rich and prosperous, because national wealth, if I know it, is not in the possessions of the Government, it is not in the savings and pinchings whereby the Government imposes itself upon its people and thereby saves to its revenues, but it is in the aggregation of the wealth of individuals.

If any man has made or is making or hopes to make money out of the plying of an American ship in foreign waters or elsewhere, I for one am willing to give him a decent chance, and to say that if our Government wants anything of him from the carrying of an officer of the Navy to a letter or a newspaper, we will give him whatever that service is worth, and we will not reflect upon him, nor bear upon him harder, nor deal with him more unjustly or ungenerously than we would if he were a foreigner.

In fact we deal in all our relations more justly and more generously with foreigners than we do with home people. We pursue a policy that builds up ships on the Clyde; we pursue a policy that makes British manufacturers and French manufacturers rich; we pursue a policy that enables Great Britain to extend her commerce into all the seas of the world, and we rejoice in that. But the very moment it is suggested that we should do something to enable our people to do that, then the cry is to hold back; the cry is that we shall make somebody rich, that we shall add something to the wealth of the United States by means of the individual fortunes to be built up in this kind of business. We draw back and say, "Oh, no; we prefer to make Great Britain rich; we prefer that she shall send her ships into all the seas and all the ports rather than that we shall send ours there;" and we thus contribute to build up, to maintain, and strengthen the commerce of one nation which, above all other nations in the world, is to be our rival if we are ever seriously to enter upon a contest for supremacy on the seas.

This is an issue which does not concern merely the people who live upon the coast; it is a question which concerns every man who raises corn or wheat in the interior of this country. He is interested in all the questions that build up not only the manufacturing interests of our country, but enable our commerce to be carried in American ships into those sections of the world where we must inevitably look for markets if we are to continue to grow more than we use at home.

As I said, however, that is merely incidental to this question. I look upon the proposition now before us as simply this: Shall we give to the Postmaster-General the right during the next twelve months to make such an agreement with the owners of American ships for the transportation of mails as shall result in giving to them a compensation which is fair as between man and man, nothing more and nothing less? We give it to the railroad companies because we say they earn it. We do not bear down upon them with a heavy hand, as we can; but our own people as they are, we are ashamed to look them in the face and say that we exercise a power which we ought not to exercise. We give them prices we do not need to give. We can take $7,000,000, we can take $10,000,000 away from the railways of this country that we now pay for carrying the mails, but to do so would be dishonorable, and we do not do it. But whenever we come to touch the question of transportation in American ships we do not scruple to say that we will exact of them a service which ought to be rendered and require them to render it for a price which is totally inadequate to the duties imposed upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is in order.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 174, 175, and 176, and to insert:

For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $800,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip, each way, actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] or I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. The Senator from Iowa would vote "yea" and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

Mr. PIKE (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I forgot at the moment that I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. SABIN. I wish to state that I am paired on general subjects with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but as I have no reason to believe that the pair should be observed on this vote, I have voted.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 20; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is held to be in order. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not say anything on the question of order that was raised on the very text of the rule with reference to legislation upon appropriation bills. I have observed that the construction placed upon that rule is that we generally vote for that legislation of which we are in favor, and antagonize that to which we are opposed whenever a question of order comes up under that rule.

In reference to the merits of this proposition of amendment, the Senator from Maine simply proposes to vest in the Postmaster-General discretion to enter into contracts to pay the owners of American ships for carrying foreign mails such amount as he may deem proper, and the Senator from Kansas has very eloquently urged the propriety of our investing the Postmaster-General with that discretion. For my part, while I have no doubt that I shall have very great confidence in the next Postmaster-General, I am not willing to give to him any such discretion. I have learned by my experience in the Senate that it is under the discretionary powers given to executive officers of this Government that much of wrong has taken place.

I remember that under the discretionary power which was given to the Postmaster-General to expedite post-routes and to multiply the number of trips that could be made upon any post-route in the country we were called upon here, a few years ago, to make an appropriation of $1,800,000 because of the exercise of that discretion vested in the Postmaster-General, and we actually did appropriate $1,100,000, which we were compelled to appropriate to prevent the stoppage of the carrying of the mails because of the manner in which that discretion had been exercised by the Postmaster-General. While I say I shall have, I have no doubt, the highest respect for and the greatest confidence in the next Postmaster-General, I am not willing to clothe him or any other executive officer with a discretion that may take out of the Treasury of the United States money that ought not to be taken out.

Now, in reference to the merits of this amendment, who are to be the beneficiaries under it? What steamship lines have we? It is said that it is not a subsidy; but who are the persons that are owning the American steamship lines to-day? The Pacific Mail Company and Mr. John Roach and nobody else so far as I know. I do not know of a single American steamship that is running to-day in foreign trade but what is owned and run either by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which, I believe, has some twenty-odd steamships upon the Pacific and one or two upon the Atlantic, and another gentleman who has been clamorous for subsidies in one form or another ever since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that Mr. John Roach owns a single steamship that will receive benefit from this. I think he does not. His ships are withdrawn from the Brazilian line. I do know that there is a large steamship company which is running ships under the American flag from California to China and Japan and the Australian colonies, outside of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I do know that there is a steamship company running lines to other ports. I do know that there is a steamship company running a steamship from New York to the River Platte; I do know that there is a steamship company running American steamers from Boston to Hayti. I do know that there are steamers running from Boston to the West Indies carrying the American flag. So, then, the Senator's knowledge is without much limit.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I confess that the Senator is possessed of information on the subject of steamship lines that I did not possess. I did know that there was another on the Pacific coast, but I had forgotten it for the time. I was not aware that there was a steamship line from Boston to Hayti, and I confess that the Senator from Maine possesses information on that subject which I did not possess. But the revelation which the Senator from Maine makes to us here is an argument against his amendment. If independent lines are springing up all over this country from Boston and from other places without the subsidies proposed by his amendment, wherefore the necessity of his amendment? The very information which he volunteers here to correct an error into which I had fallen, establishes conclusively that there is no necessity for the amendment which he has offered. Therefore I think that it is a voluntary contribution out of the public Treasury for the benefit of somebody, that is not demanded by any service to be performed to the Post-Office Department.

These drains upon the Post-Office Department are defended as not being subsidies; but has the Government ever had any trouble to get the mails of the country carried for the ocean postages? When did we first hear that there was any complaint about our not being able to carry the mails upon the ocean? I remember a few years ago that I read in the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General in which he stated that he had no difficulty in getting the ocean mails transported, and there is none to-day. Every letter and every paper that we see proper to send across the ocean will go, especially the letters will go, without any subsidy to any line or without any appropriation as proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Maine. Disguise it as you may, treat it as you may, it is nothing less than a proposition to take out of the public Treasury $800,000 and place it at the discretion of the Postmaster-General to appropriate as he pleases or as he sees proper to such lines as he in his judgment thinks it is necessary to appropriate it to to carry the mails. To that I am opposed.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator pardon me again?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It is not $800,000. It is only half as much.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The first printed copy I saw was $800,000.

Mr. FRYE. That is the whole appropriation for carrying the mail on foreign ships as well as our own.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Last year there was a proposition here to take what money was realized from the Atlantic steamship lines that did not cost all that the postage was and to appropriate that to the same lines that are to be the recipients of this beneficence on the part of the Senator from Maine, and from the time that I have had connection with the Senate in one form or another there has been a proposition to take money out of the public Treasury, not for the benefit of the public service but for the benefit of some private parties—parties, I mean, interested in steamship companies.

If there was any necessity for it, if the business of the country could not be carried on with foreign ports through the mails without this appropriation, I should be willing to vote for it as I do for the transportation of the mails by star route and by railroad. Every star-route line is subject to lively competition; advertisements are placed in the newspapers and competing parties bid for the service; but here we may say what we please about the Postmaster-General advertising for the carrying of the mails in ocean steamships, we all know that there are but very few parties who can compete for the service, because there are very few parties interested in ocean steamship navigation.

I am opposed to this proposition, as I have always opposed every subsidy that has been proposed to further the interests of private parties at the expense of the public Treasury.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment to be added at the end of it:

Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid in pursuance of any such contract to any steamship company now established and which has been paying dividends.

I suppose the amendment of the Senator from Maine is to have the effect which is attributed to protection generally; that is it is to protect infant industry; and therefore it is if this proposition to expend $400,000 in the manner proposed is to benefit, is to encourage the putting on of new steamship lines, it is well that the greater part of it should not go to a steamship company which has been, I suppose for thirty years, paying dividends—I mean the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Disguise it as you may, this proposition is substantially to benefit that steamship company, because as I say the greater part of this money proposed to be expended is to be paid into the treasury of the steamship company thus long established. Does the Senator from Maine suppose that he will induce any steamship company to organize and establish a line of vessels upon the proposition of giving them the pittance left of this $400,000, and only the assurance of that for one year? Yet we are called upon to make this appropriation to benefit our feeble, perishing commerce, and the most of it as I have said is to be bestowed liberally on this steamship company. If there be citizens of America in Japan and China and Australia needing mail facilities, they are served to-day, they are served by the service which this wealthy corporation is enabled to give them. That is all that is desired in those waters, I presume.

Why make this subsidy to this steamship company which needs it not? For years they have been reaching those ports; for years they have been amassing sufficient money in the carrying of commerce to declare liberal dividends. The Senator from Maine says that the Oriental and the Occidental lines run on the Pacific. Certainly; but the Oriental and the Occidental lines to-day are controlled by the same influences that control the Pacific Mail. All these great organizations are controlled by the same master spirits. They are in the interest of the Pacific railroad lines that cross our continent; and when the three steamships owned by the Oriental and Occidental companies were placed between California and Japan and China, it was done by Huntington and his crowd in order that they might force the Pacific Mail to obedience to their behests and demands. Huntington, that charming historian of American politics and American legislation, says so. He says so in those epistles which he wrote so elegantly to his friend Colton. Now listen for a moment and see if this was not so:

NEW YORK, December 3, 1874.

FRIEND COLTON: Yours of the 23d of November is received. I notice what you say of O. and O. S. S. Co.—

The Oriental and Occidental Steamship Company—

also of P. M.—

Pacific Mail—

If we could make just the right arrangement with the P. M. it would be well—

Listen to these words: "If we could make just the right arrangement with the Pacific Mail it would be well!"— but I think the best time for us to make an arrangement will be when we have in the Pacific say three first-class steamers. They will be good tools to make P. M. do as they agree; but I would suggest that when we do trade we do our own trading. I send with this copy of contract that I propose to make between railroads and O. and O. S. S. Co.

Then in another letter, a few days before the one I have just read, he says to his friend Colton:

But with those three we can make the prices for the old line, and I think three is enough to break them with, unless the managers of that company are changed, and then we most likely can get their steamers.

There is the inspiration, the motive, the spirit which placed the three steamships of the Oriental and Occidental Company on the Pacific—to break down the Pacific Mail, to use them as tools, to force the Pacific Mail to comply with Huntington's demands and exactions. It is barely possible that that influence which dictated these letters, that influence which stalks into the halls of legislation whenever it desires, has the impudence to come and ask that their particular pet schemes may be recognized and fostered and fed from money which we extract from the pockets of the people and put in the Treasury of the United States. That controlling spirit may account for it all, and then force the Pacific Mail to do as they agreed; and one portion of that agreement was that they would keep up the rates of freight and transportation; that they would break down competition; that they, having this great Government under their control, would pay nearly a million dollars a year to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in order to control a certain portion of their road so as to regulate freights and tariffs.

The object was to prevent competition between the Atlantic and Pacific. Here was the Pacific Mail occupying both oceans, and the enormous railroad corporations reaching from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean were determined that that competition should be checked. These organizations paid a million dollars and more yearly; they subsidized the Pacific Mail; they subsidized it more liberally than your Government can do; they subsidized it by taking a million dollars a year from their treasury, and the Pacific Mail surrendered. Huntington said that, in order to have a hold upon these men, they must have three steamships on the Pacific, and the Occidental and the Oriental lines put them there; and thus the Pacific Mail was found to be one of their instruments in fettering commerce, binding it to these three or four men who control our transcontinental trade, who seek the control of what little we have left in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and they come here to have $300,000 stolen from the Treasury to give to this wealthy corporation. If it is only for one year it will encourage no commerce, it will build no steamships, it will open no new lines. The only object is to take still more to place in the pockets of those who have overburdened this people and our commerce with taxation too grievous to be borne.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I understand the money appropriated by this amendment will go almost entirely, if not entirely, to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I hold in my hand a manual of railroad statistics, to which I desire to refer for a moment. It shows that this company last year made a profit of $1,393,000; that it is paying 6 per cent. dividends on $20,000,000, of which probably one-half is watered stock; that the company receives a "traffic guarantee," whatever that may mean, of the Pacific railroad companies of $5,000 per month; that it has no debt; and also receives foreign subsidies to the amount of $291,000.

I am unable to see why Congress should appropriate money to pay this Pacific Mail Steamship Company a subsidy for carrying the mails under these circumstances. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment and shall vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. COKE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this question, I abstain from voting. Were I permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. VAN WYCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. He is in favor of this proposition and I am opposed to it.

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. If he were here my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] is detained at home by illness. He is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not know how my colleague would vote on this question.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague [Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania] is absent on account of illness. If he were present I believe he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 18; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the amendment which I now offer. I think no possible point of order can apply to it, being in the exact line of that voted to be in order. In line 50, page 3, I move to strike out the word "lease" and insert "apply part thereof to the purpose of leasing;" at the end of the same line to strike out the word "and;" and after the word "second," in line 51, to insert "and third;" so as to read:

That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for use for post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental.

This does not increase the appropriation a farthing. It simply gives the Postmaster-General the discretion where in his judgment the interests of the public service require that a part of it should be applied to the rental of third-class offices to do so, and is in the exact line of the vote the Senate has taken.

I ask the Secretary to read the first part of the clause to make the connection. The amount of $490,000 is appropriated, and I use the words "in the disbursement of this appropriation" so as to show the connection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel, $490,000. That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for use for post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental, &c.

Mr. PLUMB. I feel constrained to raise the point of order if the point of order will lie against the amendment. This provision in its succeeding terms provides for a lease of six years, which of course would outrun the appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. On precisely a like proposition the Senator from Kansas voted "yea" on the proposition of the Senator from Maine that where an amendment regulated the disbursement of an appropriation made in the bill the point of order would not lie, and the Senate by a large vote sustained that view. It is simply proposed that in a particular disbursement the appropriation may be used for rent of third-class offices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas in order?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is declared to be in order. The question is on agreeing to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole has made sundry amendments to the bill. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection the question will be taken on all the amendments together. The Chair hears none.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to state that in lines 73 and 74, under the title of "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," there has been heretofore a provision for the payment of a certain sum of money for the transportation of mails across the Saint Louis bridge. That is not repeated in this bill upon the theory that the provision of the former bill was a continuing one; in other words, was general legislation and did not need to be repeated. In order to show that that was in contemplation in leaving out the clause I make this statement that the committee believe that the provision of last year was a continuing one, and that therefore it did not need to be repeated in this bill.

Mr. MAHONEY. Under the instructions of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I move to amend the bill on page 7, at the end of line 138, after the word "postage," by inserting:

And that reports of State boards of education, State superintendents of public institutions, and other books, circulars, forms, and blanks relating to education sent out by such shall be charged at the rates herein prescribed for second-class matter.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas makes the point that this amendment is not in order. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Senators who are of opinion that this amendment is in order will say "ay;" those of the contrary opinion will say "no." [Putting the question.] The Senate decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BROWN. This morning we struck out, I think as one amendment, from line 129 to line 138, inclusive, on pages 6 and 7. I think the latter portion of that clause ought to have been retained. I am not quite sure whether I can have a vote taken on the latter portion, or move that it be reinstated, or vote against the amendment in the Senate, or whether I may offer that portion of it as an amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has agreed to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The words referred to by the Senator from Georgia are therefore in the bill now as before the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. Then I propose to offer that portion that I referred to, the latter part of it, as a separate amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator name the lines he wishes inserted?

Mr. BROWN. The portion I desire to have inserted in the bill as it came from the House is that found in lines 136, 137, and 138, as follows:

And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

That is done every day, and it is a great convenience when we get a newspaper that there shall be a mark on it to put the eye on the subject-matter to be read. I will reserve that if I can do so, and offer it as a separate amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported to the Senate and the amendments have been agreed to. The Senator can now move any amendment he desires to have inserted.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move that those three lines, commencing at the word "and" in line 136, and ending with the word "postage" in line 138, be inserted as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 128, after the word "law," it is proposed to insert:

And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

Mr. PLUMB. This matter was discussed at some length at a previous session of the Senate and the Senate struck out the clause, as I thought upon a fully-defined principle applicable to this bill, that it would not enter upon legislation other than that which simply affected the rate of postage now existing and would not introduce new elements. I therefore feel constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. This is a portion of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, language that was passed by the House of Representatives. I think it is a wise provision. I think nine-tenths of the people of the United States understand now that they have the right to draw a pencil mark at the head of an article so as to attract the eye of the person to whom it is sent. I do not see any harm whatever in it; and as all of us know, who receive newspapers containing articles to which our attention is desired, it is quite convenient. It saves us from looking through the newspaper, because the eye catches at the object of the friend who sends it; and if there is nothing printed or written I see no good reason why the simple pencil mark should not be made.

Mr. MAXEY. I think the Senator from Georgia was not in this morning when the subject came up. This is now the law:

And the sender of any article of the third class of mail matter may write his or her name or address therein, or on the outside thereof, with the word "from" above or preceding the same, or may write briefly or print on any package the number and names of the articles inclosed.

That is the law and has been.

Mr. BROWN. On the outside of the package.

Mr. MAXEY. And mark the article itself.

Mr. BROWN. I did not understand the reading correctly then. What I desire to get at is the privilege to draw a pencil mark at the head of an editorial or communication or anything a friend sending a paper desires one to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia in order?

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read. The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. It is simply in the language of the bill as it came from the House, retaining the provision about the mark at the head of an article.

Mr. HARRISON. Is there not also a question of order about that, arising under Rule XVI? In Committee of the Whole these words were stricken out of this section, and the Senate has agreed to that amendment. Is it in order to move to insert them again?

Mr. BROWN. That was not stricken out as a separate amendment. The clause that was stricken out commenced on line 129, with the words "Provided, however," &c.

Mr. HARRISON. There was a separate vote upon these particular words in Committee of the Whole. The whole clause was divided upon my demand, and the Senate has agreed with the Committee of the Whole in striking out these words. Now I inquire whether it is competent after that action to move to insert the same words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted the whole question of order to the Senate; not only the point made by the Senator from Kansas, that it is legislation, but also every other point that can be raised on the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry in order to get the opinion of the Chair whether the point I stated was not well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits that point to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if he is sure that the question of striking out the particular words now offered as an amendment by the Senator from Georgia was taken separately. My understanding is—but I am not confident that I am correct—that they in connection with many other words appearing prior to them in the bill were stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly sure that the question was taken separately, because the division was made on my own suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the question was taken separately on these identical words.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I quite concur with the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana. If that be so they can not now be offered in order.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move a reconsideration of the vote by which they were stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not now in order, the Senate having agreed to the action of the Committee of the Whole. The simple question now is whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia is in order. The Chair will put that question.

The question being put, it was decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HILL. I offer the following amendment to be inserted after line 128—

Mr. BROWN. I will inquire now—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor and offers an amendment which will be read, after which the Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 128 it is proposed to insert:

That Sunday-school publications shall be entitled to free transportation through the mails.

Mr. HILL. I wish to say just a word in regard to this amendment. There is no other one agency that is productive of so much good as the Sunday-school, and as we have now agreed in this bill to transmit through the mails at 1 cent a pound such publications as the Police Gazette, the organs of socialists and infidels, and all other kinds of injurious publications, I think we may afford to transmit Sunday-school publications free.

Mr. PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has offered an amendment. The question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill should be called to the fact—

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment, I understood, was to the same effect as that of the Senator from Virginia, which was ruled out. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas submits a point of order that this amendment is not in order. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Senators who are of opinion that the amendment is in order will say "ay," those of the contrary opinion will say "no." [Patting the question.]

The question was decided in the negative.

Mr. HILL. I will now offer one other amendment, which I hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to, allowing these publications to go through the mails at the same rate as newspapers. At the end of line 128, I move to insert:

That Sunday-school publications shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent per pound, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas makes the point of order that this is in violation of the rules of the Senate. The question is, Is this amendment in order?

The question being put, it was decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that I correctly understood the decision of the Chair, and I simply make the inquiry. I understood the Chair to say that I was not now in order in moving to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the three lines I have referred to already were stricken out of the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not make any such ruling.

Mr. BROWN. Then I misunderstood the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order for the Senator to move to reconsider the vote of the Senate agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the following language was stricken out of the House bill: "And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator must submit his motion to reconsider the vote as it was taken. It was taken in gross. He must move to reconsider all the amendments, and not a part.

Mr. BROWN. It is necessary then, as I understand the Chair to rule, although this was a distinct vote as the Chair stated—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not a distinct vote on agreeing to this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole; but there was one distinct vote on agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. Did I misunderstand the Chair a while ago to state that this was stricken out of the bill by a distinct vote on these very words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was in Committee of the Whole. When the bill was reported to the Senate the Senate took a vote on all the amendments agreed to as in Committee of the Whole together.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move to reconsider that vote that I may get at this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has always been customary in the Senate when a question has been taken by inadvertence, and a Senator says that, to grant him a reconsideration as a matter of courtesy. I hope, therefore, the Senate will do it in this case.

I do not know what the question is that the Senator from Georgia desires to present, but it has always been done. I have been caught in this way several times. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not deny to the Senator from Georgia that which has always been conceded, that the vote may be reconsidered as a matter of form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question again on the motion of the Senator from Georgia. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on reconsidering the vote agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if this vote is reconsidered, the particular language that the Senator from Georgia wants to retain in the bill having been stricken out as a distinctive proposition, the result will be that the Senator from Georgia will then demand a separate vote upon that particular clause, and that is the end of it.

Mr. BROWN. That is all.

Mr. HARRIS. He certainly is entitled to that separate vote.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will ask for that I have no objection to giving unanimous consent to having that done.

Mr. BROWN. That is all I desire.

Mr. PLUMB. But I do not wish to go to work and go over all the subjects we have had under consideration. I have some responsibility as in charge of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to assure the Senator that it involves no such consequence. The Senator from Georgia will simply demand a separate vote on that particular language, and when that vote is taken there is the end of the matter.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have unanimous consent that the vote may be taken on the proposition desired by the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the question be taken now separately on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out the words in lines 136, 137, and 138 that have been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out those words.

Mr. BROWN. A negative vote retains the words in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A negative vote retains the words in the bill. The question is on concurring in the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the words be stricken out of the bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 21.

Mr. PLUMB called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate, as I supposed, struck out that clause according to the recommendation of the committee, because that was a change of the law separate and distinct and entirely apart from the changes involved in the other provisions of this legislation inserted by the House. This changes the general run of the post-office law; it authorizes certain matter to be transmitted in a way that is not now permitted. The other legislation simply affected the weight of letters and the postage on newspapers, and was a plain proposition. I care nothing about it except to preserve as far as I can the consistency of the Senate in regard to the question of legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not see why a black mark should not be permitted to be drawn at the head of an article in a newspaper without the paper being subjected to additional postage, for it is a great relief to us as every member of the Senate must know. With the large number of papers sent to us from every section of the country, drawing our attention to particular articles in the papers, it saves us a vast amount of trouble in hunting through the entire papers to have marks drawn around the articles to which our attention is desired. It is not only an advantage to the editors but a great convenience to the reading public.

Mr. PLUMB. The thing can be done now, only this changes the rate of postage.

Mr. BROWN. It is no more a change of the law than many other provisions we have retained in the bill. There are several there that change the law quite as much as this.

As I understand, to vote "yea" strikes this out, and to vote "nay" retains it in the bill. ["Yes."]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 38; as follows:

PETITION.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of S. M. Davis and others, of Washington, D. C., praying for legislation to provide means of taking testimony at public expense on applications for pardons for criminal offenses. The petition goes on to set forth that one John W. Langston is confined in the United States jail in Washington, D. C., awaiting execution on sentence of death, having been convicted of murder; that there is strong evidence that there was in fact a mistrial and that this man, who is to be executed within a month, is innocent. The parties set forth that they find great difficulty in obtaining the evidence, and it will be attended with much expense, and they wish the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary to be turned to this subject to see if the general law does not need some rectification, and if there may not be suggestions from some source that will lead to justice in that direction.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2154) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to make a statement. It was my purpose to-day—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed with his statement. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was my intention to-day to ask the Senate to consider private pension bills; but the day has been consumed by the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. Now, my purpose is to ask the Senate to consider those bills to-morrow immediately after the formal business of the morning hour is concluded.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

Mr. LE FEVRE, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, In view of the continued proscription of American pork by Germany, the recent imposition of additional duty on wheat and rye imported from the United States, and certain measures now threatened hostile to American petroleum, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into and report whether the interests of the United States do not demand the adoption of like discriminating measures against such principal articles imported from the German Empire as are grown or manufactured in the United States.

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS, MORRISTOWN, N. J.

The SPEAKER. The hour set apart for motions under the special rule of the House begins at nine minutes past 11 o'clock. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has a motion pending upon which the time for debate, except one minute, has been exhausted.

Mr. KEAN. I yield that minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] yields the remaining minute of his time, and the Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 197) authorizing the Secretary of War to assist in canceling the debt and in enlarging and improving the grounds and collections of Washington's headquarters in Morristown, N. J., and in securing suitable ground in which to gather the remains of the revolutionary soldiers there buried and in erecting a monument over the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, has the time for debate been exhausted?

The SPEAKER. It has been, except one minute.

Mr. WELLER. Well, I object.

The question was taken; and eighteen gentlemen objected—more than a sufficient number under the rule.

So the joint resolution was not considered.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MACON, GA.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent, under the rule, for the present consideration of a bill (S. 1117) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States circuit and district courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Macon, Ga. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $125,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Georgia shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, ten minutes are allowed for debate, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is entitled to five.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall content myself with a mere statement of the facts. There is a Federal court held at Macon. The population of the city is a little over 26,000, as shown by the enumeration of last year. The accommodations and facilities are very inadequate, and have been permitted to remain so up to this time by reason of the fact that the matter of erecting a public building there has been reported upon by several Congresses and the Department of Justice has not seen fit to make any improvement, or to attempt to better the existing accommodations, believing that a public building ought to be erected. The amount proposed to be appropriated is less than we have paid for our own local court-house, and I think this is one of the most moderate bills of this character that has been at any time reported to this House.

Mr. STORM. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is a Senate bill. I believe there are several reports on this subject. I reserve the residue of my time.

The report (by Mr. YOUNG) on House bill 162 was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 162) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Ga., having considered the same, respectfully report:

That United States courts are held at Macon, Ga., and are located on the third floor, in a badly heated and poorly ventilated room, which is reached by noisy flights of iron stairs, there being no elevator in the building. For these uncomfortable and inadequate accommodations the Government is paying $1,000 a year.

That the post-office, for its 19,000 citizens, is equally discreditably located, being in a room entirely too small, although rented at a cost of $900 a year. There are also leased, for internal-revenue offices, rooms at a cost of $100 a year, making the total annual outlay of the Government for rent at Macon, $2,000.

In view of these representations, satisfactorily verified, your committee respectfully recommend the passage of a bill providing for the erection of a public building in said city, to meet the demands of its present wants and commensurate with its importance as a thriving and rapidly growing center. We accordingly submit herewith a substitute, limiting the amount to $100,000.

Mr. STORM. I observe that this report names as the amount of the appropriation $100,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think that must be a typographical error. At any rate the report just read relates to a House bill of similar purpose to the Senate bill which I have called up. I believe $125,000 is the amount which has uniformly been reported in previous Congresses. I trust that the House will see fit to pass the Senate bill appropriating this sum which has been previously recommended, and which, as I have stated, is less than we have paid for our own court building.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would the gentleman from Georgia object to an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve any plan which will involve an expenditure for this building of a greater sum than the residue of this appropriation after the site has been paid for?

Mr. BLOUNT. I appreciate the purpose of the gentleman in limiting the cost of public buildings to the amount of the appropriation; and I would have no objection to such an amendment but for the fact that we are now almost at the close of this session, and if this bill should be returned to the Senate with an amendment it might be difficult to get it taken up for concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a Senate bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not press the amendment.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORADO INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1695) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That actual settlers on lands subject to pre-emption under existing laws within the late Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indian reservation, in Colorado, shall be entitled to purchase the same, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each, in accordance with the general principles of the pre-emption laws: Provided, That no bona fide settler as aforesaid shall be denied the right to purchase land under the provisions of this act on the ground that he may have previously had the benefit of pre-emption on other public land of the United States without said reservation, nor on the ground that he may have removed from his own land elsewhere within the State of Colorado to settle upon land in said reservation: And provided further, That proof of actual inhabitation and improvement of the land for not less than one year shall be made to the satisfaction of the register and the receiver, under each regulation as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Sec. 2. That the payment for these lands may be made in three installments, as follows, to wit: Twenty-five cents per acre at the date of entry, and 50 cents per acre, respectively, in one and two years from such date.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules ten minutes are now allowed for debate—five minutes in support of this motion and five minutes in opposition. [A pause.] If no gentleman desires to occupy the time—

Mr. McMILLIN. Before objections are asked for, let us have the report read or some statement made, so that we may understand how we ought to vote on this question. It would appear that this bill proposes to change the law as to how these lands shall be paid for and who are to get the benefits of the sale. The House ought certainly to know why this change is to be made.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, if I can be heard I will try to explain the provisions of this bill. Some years ago we passed, under a suspension of the rules, a bill opening up what is called the Ute reservation—a tract of territory equaling in area New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. After that bill was passed a number of people, aggregating thousands, went upon that Ute reservation and took up their homes. That bill provided that when the land was pre-empted the money should go to the Indians. This bill makes no change whatever in that respect; it simply allows these people to pay their money into the Treasury; and this money is to go to the support and maintenance of these Indians.

If we do not pass this bill a large class of people occupying homesteads in the Ute reservation are practically left without any title whatever. Many of these men have had pre-emption rights in other States and have now forfeited them, having gone to these reservation lands to seek a new home. This thing of forfeiting pre-emption rights is not exceptional. I have once myself been obliged to abandon such a right because I found I was not able to bring water upon the ground. So it is with thousands of other people. I can state truthfully and candidly that there is no "steal" in this measure.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask the gentleman, if I may, whether the provisions of this bill are confined entirely to homestead or pre-emption settlers?

Mr. BELFORD. The bill is confined absolutely to those who have their homes there.

Mr. WELLER. Is the bill in its terms confined to that class?

Mr. BELFORD. It is confined to that class, because under the original bill nobody can take any tract of land except by pre-emption. The bill is designed to protect the people who have their homes on this vast tract of land.

Mr. WELLER. And that alone?

Mr. BELFORD. And that alone. The bill passed the Senate without objection.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] whether this bill has been considered by any committee of this House?

Mr. BELFORD. No; but it has been considered by a Senate committee, and passed by the Senate without objection. It has not been considered by a committee of the House because during the early part of the session I was not here to ask its reference to a committee. Now is my only chance for salvation in getting it through. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COBB. I object.

The SPEAKER. Members objecting to the consideration of this bill will rise and be counted.

Thirteen members objected.

So the bill was not considered.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT RICHMOND, VA.

Mr. GEORGE S. WISE. I desire to call up from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1473) to enlarge the United States custom-house at Richmond, Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the enlargement of the United States custom-house at Richmond, Va.

Sec. 2. That said sum shall be expended upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under his direction, upon plans, specifications, and estimates previously made and approved according to law.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule ten minutes are allowed for debate—five minutes on each side.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reference to this bill that it makes the small appropriation of $100,000 to enlarge the custom-house at Richmond, Va. Both the United States circuit and district courts are held in that city. I need not say to the House that it is the capital of the State. The necessity for the enlargement will be apparent when I tell the members of the House that the present building was erected when the city contained a population of only about 25,000. Many of the records of our courts are kept in a lumber-room entirely unfit for the purpose. There are no rooms for grand or traverse juries, and no suitable accommodations for the judges.

Since the erection of this building the number of employes of the post-office has been increased from eight to sixty. And we have in addition to that the offices of collector of customs and of internal revenue. I will state also that some $1,700,000 was collected in this internal-revenue district at Richmond city alone during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883. The gross receipts from the post-office during the same period were nearly $120,000, and over $2,000,000 are handled and counted annually by the clerks engaged in the money-order department.

Mr. COOK. What was the cost of the original building?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I can not say as to that, but it was built in 1850 when the city had a population of only about 25,000.

I have also a letter from the Postmaster-General in which he recommends the enlargement of this building as necessary for the accommodation of the post-office at that city. I hope there will be no objection to this Senate bill.

Mr. NICHOLLS. What is the present population of Richmond?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Over 80,000 inhabitants.

Mr. COOK. The committee of the House recommended $79,000.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. One hundred thousand dollars is appropriated in the Senate bill. The Architect of the Treasury was asked to make an estimate, and he recommended that sum as necessary.

Mr. COOK. But the committee of the House only recommend $79,000.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I know that. This Senate bill is in accordance with the recommendation of the Architect of the Treasury Department. I took the pains to have the estimate made by the Architect of the Treasury Department. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STORM. I understand the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend only $79,000. I should like to have the report of the committee read.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Here it is.

Mr. STORM. Will the Clerk read it?

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. YOUNG), as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1609) to make an appropriation for the extension, enlargement, and improvement of the public building at Richmond, Va., respectfully report:

After a full examination of the facts submitted, the committee believe that the proposed enlargement and improvement of the public building at Richmond is necessary and demanded by the requirements of the public service.

Richmond is the largest and most flourishing city in the State, and its commerce and business are extensive and rapidly increasing. The present public building there was constructed in 1832-'54, when the population of the city was but little over 27,000, and when the business transacted in the Federal offices there was comparatively small. The population is now 71,000, and the growth of the business of the offices of the Government has been so rapid as to make additional accommodation for its proper transaction a necessity. In brief, since the erection of the present building, the population of Richmond has nearly trebled, its business and commerce has been more than trebled, and the business of its post-office more than quadrupled. In this small building accommodation has to be provided for the post-office, the officers for the collection of the internal revenue, the collector of customs and his assistants, and for the United States district and circuit courts. For these various purposes it is wholly insufficient. The district and circuit courts of the United States are held here twice yearly, and there are frequently two special terms of these courts in each year.

In the language of the clerk of the circuit court—
"The judges' rooms are mere closets, with no conveniences for consultation, no library-room, and not space to hear anything properly in chambers. The clerks have to keep many of their records in an old lumber-room, entirely unfit for the purpose."

There is not, besides, sufficient room for the accommodation of the marshal, and the grand and traverse juries which attend these courts, and none whatever for witnesses. The collector of internal revenue has now employed in his office there eleven persons, as deputy collectors, clerks, tobacco inspectors, and gaugers, and they are confined to an area entirely too small for comfort and the rapid dispatch of the public business. During the year 1883 there were entered in this division of his district for export over three and one-half millions of pounds of tobacco and nearly thirty-five millions of cigarettes. During the same period nearly one and one-half million dollars were realized from the sale of tobacco, cigar, and cigarette stamps.

The amount of internal revenue collected at Richmond during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, was $1,699,837.33. The collector states that double the space now occupied is required for the easy and proper transaction of the business of his office. The gross receipts from the post-office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, were $117,397, and over $2,000,000 are handled and counted annually by the clerks engaged in the money-order department. The number of clerks employed is twenty-one, letter-carriers twenty, and money-order clerks three, making in all forty-one. In addition to this force, the Government has in its employment, on the seven railroads terminating here, forty-three postal clerks, for whom space has to be provided in the post-office at Richmond, it being impossible to obtain suitable accommodation elsewhere. At least one-third of these postal clerks are frequently in the office at the same time, making, with the regular force, an aggregate of over sixty persons. When the present building was erected, there were employed in this office an average of only eight persons in every branch of its business.

For the convenience of the collector of customs and his assistants, twelve in number, the present accommodations are also wholly inadequate. The Postmaster-General, in a letter in reply to one addressed to him upon this subject, says that in his opinion—

"The Government building at Richmond is not large enough, and that there should be such an enlargement of or addition to it as will meet the necessities of business and the public convenience."

These brief statements serve the purpose of showing the magnitude of the business done in the various offices of the Government in this city and the necessity for more space for its transaction. Your committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the accompanying as a substitute for bill H. R. 1609.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a question of order. The confusion is so great that we can not hear what is going on in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made an ineffectual attempt to preserve order in the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms will ask members to resume their seats and stop conversation.

Mr. STORM. What is the amount recommended by the committee?
The SPEAKER. The report specifies no amount, but simply recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. STORM. What is the amount recommended by the House bill?
Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Seventy-five thousand dollars is recommended by the House bill.

Mr. STORM. Your bill calls for $100,000.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I will state to my friend that that amount is absolutely required, and it is recommended by the Architect of the Treasury after making a careful estimate of what would be required.

Mr. STORM. All I desire to say, in the short time left, is, that this has been considered by a committee of this House and the amount recommended was $75,000. The Senate bills have not only been considered extravagant in the number of private buildings provided for, but in the amount provided and in the extension of limits heretofore proposed. As I have said, the committee of this House, having considered the bill, recommends $75,000 as sufficient; and I do think we ought not to be asked now to say we will give $25,000 more than the committee of this House has recommended, simply because this is a Senate bill. I am sorry to oppose it, but I think I am in duty bound to do so.

Mr. WELLER. I think I could make a suggestion which will obviate all objection.

The SPEAKER. The time has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Is there not more time left in favor of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes remain in favor of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I will yield then two minutes to my colleague.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] withdraws his objection.

Now, in regard to this bill the estimates and the report of the Architect were fully discussed in the Senate, and the action taken there was one of deliberate judgment that $100,000 was necessary to carry out the measure. I never had the opportunity such as I desired before the House committee to discuss the necessity of $100,000. I believe whereas $100,000 will accomplish the purpose, $75,000 will be insufficient and bring them back here before the work is completed. I hope the House will adopt the bill as it passed the Senate because we might as well complete the job at once instead of taking two bites of a cherry as is often done. I call for a vote.

There was no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WELLER. As the bill is before the House I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, Twenty-five per cent. of this appropriation shall be made and paid only in standard silver dollars, which shall be transferred at the expense of the Government to the locality proposed for the disbursement of this appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to discuss the merits of that amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under this special rule, which expressly provides the limitation of debate, it would not be in order to extend that time.
